INTERNATIONAL COMMISSION.

Mr. McMILLAN. I am directed by the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the joint resolution (S. R. 52) authorizing the President of the United States to invite the government of Canada to join in the formation of an international commission to examine and report upon the diversion of the waters that are the boundaries of the two countries, to report it with amendments, and to submit a report thereon.

Mr. LODGE. From what committee does the joint resolution come?

Mr. McMILLAN. From the Committee on Commerce.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. From the Committee on Commerce. It was before the Committee on Commerce at the last session of Congress and reported by it.

Mr. HOAR. If the committee does not object, I should like to have it go to the Committee on Foreign Relations. It opens a very delicate and a very important question of international proceeding. We do not permit any foreign government to address us except through the Secretary of State. The joint resolution proposes, if I heard the title read correctly, to establish direct relations with one of England's colonies and not to establish them with Great Britain through the ordinary diplomatic intercourse.

Of course I have had no consideration of this matter. It may be that the joint resolution is all right; but I should like to have the Committee on Foreign Relations determine whether it is not a departure from all ordinary diplomatic intercourse. Will the Senator from Michigan object to having it referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations?

Mr. McMILLAN. There is no objection to having it referred to that committee. That committee can determine whether any explanation is necessary to be made.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair thinks that such action will require its recommittal, and then that the committee be discharged from the further consideration of the joint resolution and that it be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. HOAR. I do not understand that such a reference requires a recommitment.

Mr. CULLOM. It has been reported from the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. HOAR. It is often the case when a committee makes a report that its report is then referred to another committee. That is often the case with a report proposing a change of the rules.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts moves the reference of the joint resolution to the Committee on Foreign Relations. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Whereas by section 26 of the agreement with said tribe, approved March 1, 1901, it was agreed and stipulated that the "Self-emigration claim which the tribe, or any individual thereof, may have against the United States, shall be submitted to the Senate of the United States for determination:" Therefore,

Mr. HALE. I would say here, as we have just completed the portion of the bill in reference to consular clerk hire, that the Senate in its classification has adopted the mode provided by law as to what it shall be; it has struck out the House classification and put in its own classification.

The reading of the bill was resumed and concluded.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no amendments in the Senate, shall the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole be ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time?

PROPOSED ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY.

Mr. HALE. I move that when the Senate adjourn to-day it be to meet on Monday next.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I shall be in favor of that adjournment if I find that it can be done without interfering with the bill I have in charge. If Monday is to be taken up with the shipping bill, I should like to get the bill in regard to the protection of the President through to-day, and not agree to adjourn over to-morrow until we see how it stands. I wish the Senator would withdraw his motion, say, for an hour or two.

Mr. HALE. I withdraw the motion, Mr. President.

PROTECTION OF THE PRESIDENT.

Mr. HOAR. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 3653) for the protection of the President of the United States, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

FREDERICK SCHULTE OR SCHULDT.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President——

Mr. TILLMAN. If the Senator from Massachusetts will kindly give way, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 2533) to remove the charge of desertion against Frederick Schulte or Schuldt.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator, I understand, only proposes that the pending bill be laid aside informally.

Mr. TILLMAN. Oh, certainly. I simply wish this bill passed, which will take but a moment.

Mr. HOAR. I shall not object, but after this bill is disposed of I think I ought to object to any further requests of the kind.

Mr. TILLMAN. It is a bill for an old Union sailor down in my country. I simply wish to help the old gentleman to straighten his record.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PERKINS in the chair). Is there objection to laying aside temporarily the pending bill in order that the Senate may consider the bill named by the Senator from South Carolina?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Naval Affairs with amendments, in line 5, before the word "Department," to strike out "War" and insert "Navy;" and in line 8, before the word "discharge," to strike out "an honorable" and insert "a;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Navy be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to remove the charge of desertion now borne on the records of the Navy Department against Frederick Schulte or Schuldt, formerly a seaman on the U. S. steamships Anotonic and Hartford, and to grant the said Schulte a discharge from the service of the Government.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PROTECTION OF THE PRESIDENT.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 3653) for the protection of the President of the United States, and for other purposes.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, when I yielded the floor on yesterday, during the consideration of this bill, I was discussing the question whether this proposed legislation, if enacted into law, would not in reality be an extension of the law of treason beyond the limits set by the Constitution. In order that it may be seen what was before the framers of the Constitution at the time that this particular section or paragraph was adopted, I desire to read from Elliott's Debates of the Convention. From this debate we ascertain the particular questions brought before the Convention when it came to determine the limitation which should be put on the definition of treason. I read from volume 5, page 447. After the disposition of one matter, which is therein narrated, Elliott's Debates proceeds as follows:

Article 7, section 2, concerning treason, was then taken up.

I ask the attention of Senators to the particular suggestions which were then made.

Mr. Madison thought the definition too narrow. It did not appear to go as far as the statute of Edward III. He did not see why more latitude might not be left to the Legislature. It would be as safe as in the hands of State legislatures; and it was inconvenient to bar a discretion which experience might enlighten and which might be applied to good purposes, as well as be abused.

Mr. Mason was for pursuing the statute of Edward III.

* * * * * * *

It was moved and seconded to amend the sentence to read:

"Treason against the United States shall consist only in levying war against them or in adhering to their enemies."

Which was agreed to.

Colonel Mason moved to insert the words "giving them aid and comfort," as restrictive of "adhering to their enemies," etc. The latter, he thought, would be otherwise too indefinite. This motion was agreed to—Connecticut, Delaware, and Georgia only being in the negative.

Mr. L. Martin moved to insert after conviction, etc., "or on confession in open court;" and on the question (the negative States thinking the words superfluous) it was agreed to.

Mr. President, from this debate I have read for our information in this investigation enough to show that the discussion was had especially with reference to the act of Edward III, and that there was the distinct expression of opinion by Mr. Madison that the entire statute of Edward III ought to be incorporated in the Constitution as the definition of treason; that the same opinion was expressed by Mr. Mason, and that in the face of it, in the face of the discussion of which, of course, we have but a mere outline in Elliott's Debates, the Constitutional Convention determined in the negative, and rejected all seven of the particular classes of offenses included in the act of Edward III as constituting treason, accepting only one. Of the seven distinct classes of offenses named in the act of Edward III as constituting treason under the English law only one was adopted, and the language of that was copied almost literally, the addition to it being in these words. I will read the act of Edward III or that clause of it——

Mr. HOAR. May I ask the Senator from Georgia a question?

Mr. BACON. Certainly.

Mr. HOAR. I wish to ask the Senator if he has had his attention called to the case of the United States v. Bollman?

Mr. BACON. Is that the habeas corpus case?

Mr. HOAR. No; it is the case of the trial of Bollman and Swartwout.

Mr. BACON. Is that a circuit court case?

Mr. HOAR. No; a case in the Supreme Court of the United States (4 Cranch), where, I understand, Chief Justice Marshall considered and settled by a judgment of the court the particular point which the Senator is raising.

Mr. BACON. I will say to the Senator that I have not examined that case, but in the very hurried examination which I have been compelled to give to this question I had reference to some elementary works with a view to having their notations of cases which had been decided, and in Bishop on Criminal Law I found a statement to the effect that the only case in which the Supreme Court of the United States had discussed and passed on the law of treason was in a case, the name of which I have forgotten, but a habeas corpus case. I have sent for it. If any Senator here has it——

Mr. HOAR. The Senator will pardon me. I am not surprised that the Senator from Georgia had overlooked this case, because I had overlooked it myself, and only have it called to my attention now by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER], who is better than a digest in the matter of knowledge of the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States. But perhaps the Senator will allow me to read two sentences. I do not want to interrupt him, but it might possibly make him like to either consider this case or——

Mr. BACON. Most undoubtedly I should be glad to hear it.

Mr. HOAR. It was claimed in the trial of the case that certain acts, not coming within what the court held to be a levying of war, were still punishable under the statute, and the question of this particular point came up. Now, in the argument Harper said:

It is admitted that the Constitution has prevented many questions as to the doctrine of treason. The intention of having a constitutional definition of the crime was to put it out of the power of Congress to invent treason.

That only goes to explain why that was put into the Constitution. But then, Chief Justice Marshall, in delivering the opinion of the court, deals with the very matter to which the Senator refers—that is, as to whether, after this constitutional definition of treason, it is still in the power of Congress to provide punishment for other offenses which, according to the old English common law, were treason, but are no longer treason because of the constitutional definition.

Mr. BACON. I have not a doubt as to that proposition, relating to offenses in their nature less than treason, and that may be true, and what I contend for may also be true.

Mr. HOAR. Perhaps the Senator would like to have me read these two sentences.

Mr. BACON. I would.

Mr. HOAR. I will not if he would prefer that I should not.

Mr. BACON. I have already assured the honorable Senator that I should like to hear it.

Mr. HOAR. The court says:

> Crimes so atrocious as those which have for their object the subversion by violence of those laws and those institutions which have been ordained in order to secure the peace and happiness of society are not to escape punishment because they have not ripened into treason. The wisdom of the legislature is competent to provide for the case; and the framers of our Constitution, who not only defined and limited the crime, but with jealous circumspection attempted to protect their limitation by providing that no person should be convicted of it, unless on the testimony of two witneses to the same overt act, or on confession in open court, must have conceived it more safe that punishment in such cases should be ordained by general laws formed upon deliberation, under the influence of no resentments, and without knowing on whom they were to operate, than that it should be inflicted under the influence of those passions which the occasion seldom fails to excite, and which a flexible definition of the crime, or a construction which would render it flexible, might bring into operation. It is, therefore, more safe as well as more consonant to the principles of our Constitution that the crime of treason should not be extended by construction to doubtful cases, and that crimes not clearly within the constitutional definition should receive such punishment as the legislature in its wisdom may provide.

Mr. BACON. What was the crime there, I will ask the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. HOAR. It was a question whether the act which had been performed by Bollman and Swartwout amounted fully to a levying of war. That was the case which was under discussion.

Mr. BACON. There is nothing which the Senator has read that is in conflict with the view I entertain and which I was about to express.

Mr. HOAR. I will not detain the Senator by further discussing this. I wanted merely to call his attention to it.

Mr. BACON. I am very sorry the Senator did not call my attention to it before in order that I might examine it. I can not do so now, manifestly. I will endeavor hereafter to examine it. I had intended to present some views dealing with the question as to how far that exclusion of offenses which were formerly treason prevented legislation by Congress for the punishment of such offenses, and what were the classes which were necessarily excluded by the constitutional limitation from Congressional legislation, and what were the classes of offenses not so excluded. It is for that reason and with that discrimination in my mind that I said to the Senator that there is nothing which had been read which conflicted with my views and in recognition of which I consented to a proposition submitted by him.

Now, if I may be permitted, I wish to state as clearly as I can what my position is in regard to the matter, and I was about to do so when interrupted, very properly and very agreeably to me.

I had remarked the fact that the framers of the Constitution had before them for consideration the act of Edward III as it had been amended by various Parliaments from the original date of its enactment. If I recollect correctly, the act of Edward III, enacted in the fourteenth century, originally contained only five classifications of offenses which were denominated treason, and that by subsequent amendments up to the present time, so far as I know, or at least up to the time of the Commentaries by Blackstone, there had been two others, so that there were then seven.

Blackstone's Commentaries, as we all know, were written just prior to our Revolutionary war. I have here, or I did have yesterday, and I sent it back to the Library simply because it is a valuable book which they do not want to have out any more than is necessary, the original act of Edward III, and I did that in order that I might make no mistake as to the text, but I suppose the quotation of it in Blackstone will be considered reliable.

I called attention to the fact that with distinct classes of offenses enumerated in the act of Edward III, and with the act of Edward III directly before the framers of the Constitution and under discussion, and with the contention by Mr. Madison and Mr. Mason and others that the entire seven sections so far as they could be adapted to our different form of government, should be adopted as the definition of treason, and with that presentation and that contention the framers of the Constitution rejected six of the classifications and adopted only one, and that in the adoption of that one they had used almost the identical language which is found in the act of Edward III. Now, here is——

Mr. SPOONER. Will my friend the Senator from Georgia permit me?

Mr. BACON. I will yield with pleasure.

Mr. SPOONER. I did not have the advantage of hearing the Senator state his proposition yesterday, but at this point I desire to ask him, for I always listen to him with great interest, what his inference is from that rejection by the Constitutional Convention.

Mr. BACON. That is exactly what I was going to say, and if the Senator will pardon me, I will endeavor to do so. I was calling attention to the fact that they had rejected six and adopted only one (the fourth section), and that in the adoption of that one they had used the identical language, in part, which was used in the act of Edward III. The act of Edward III, in its fourth section, is in these words, prescribing the various acts which constitute treason:

> "If a man be adherent to the king's enemies in his realm, giving to them aid and comfort in the realm or elsewhere," he is also declared guilty of high treason.

The quotation from the statute ends with the word "elsewhere," and Blackstone, in reciting it, says "he is also declared guilty of high treason." The conclusion or the inference which I draw from it, I will say in response to the very pertinent inquiry of the distinguished Senator from Wisconsin, is that the framers of the Constitution, having before them this act, evidently shaping their action with reference to the provisions of this act, when they limited it to the fourth section and expressed it in the Constitution in these words—I am now quoting from the Constitution of the United States—intended expressly that none of the acts enumerated in the other six sections should ever be treason under the Constitution of the United States.

> Treason against the United States shall consist only in levying war against them, or in adhering to their enemies, giving them aid and comfort—

Now, I will say to the distinguished Senator from Wisconsin, as he says he was not present yesterday, that the proposition which I had laid down was this: That when the framers of the Constitution said that only such acts should be treason, they did not mean that the Congress of the United States when it came to legislate should simply not use the word "treason" as to any act not specified in the constitutional definition, but they meant that no act therefrom excluded should by an act of Congress be treated as treason; because it would be child's play to say that in spite of the constitutional prohibition they could still make a felony of an act which in its nature is treason and make it punishable in the same way as treason, provided they did not call it treason.

Now, I was met right at that point by the pertinent inquiry of the very learned Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON], how was it that if that was a proper conclusion there were certain acts or classes of offenses enumerated in the act of Edward III which are excluded by our Constitution from the class of treason, but which are recognized still as legitimate subjects-matter of legislation in the framing of penal statutes, and the Senator mentioned, as an illustration, counterfeiting, counterfeiting being an offense which, under the act of Edward III, was treason, and which, under the terms of our Constitution, can not be made treason, but yet which, under the terms of our Constitution, is an offense made so by statute law punishable as a felony.

My reply to that is this: I had to some extent intimated it in what I had said, although I had not come explicitly to the point. I said there must be some line of demarcation, and there must have been in the minds of the framers of the Constitution a line of distinction between the classes of offenses which were in their nature treasonable, which of themselves under the general definition of treason would be treason, and another and a minor class which were not in their nature treasonable, but were in the act of Edward III simply made treason by the arbitrary enactment of the statute.

For instance, the killing of the king is, in itself—in its very nature—treason, because it is an assault on that which constitutes either in whole or in part the sovereignty of the country. It was in its nature treason, and did not depend upon the fact that it was specified in the act as treason. On the other hand, counterfeiting is not in its nature treason. No man can by force assault the sovereignty of a nation, whether that sovereignty is represented in whole or in part by the particular object assaulted, without treasonable intent, without intent to destroy that sovereignty either in whole or in part, and without the intent thereby either to turn the government over to its enemies or to destroy the power of the government to exercise its proper governmental functions.

On the other hand, a man may be a counterfeiter and be thoroughly loyal in his devotion to his own country. In other words, in the one case it is naturally an act of treason; in the other case it is an artificially treasonable act, or, rather, it is made treason by arbitrary rule and not by the fact that it is properly and naturally so classified.

Now, Mr. President, the point to which I wish to ask the attention of the Senate in the consideration of the pending question is this: What must have been the mental processes of the framers of the Constitution when they said that treason against the United States shall consist only in levying war against them or in adhering to their enemies, giving them aid and comfort? What must have been the mental processes by which, with the statute of Edward III before them, knowing every line and having every particle of it before them for consideration—what must have been the motive, what must have been the conclusion reached by the framers of the Constitution when they wrote what is now found in the Constitution as to what and what only shall constitute treason?

As I have read from Elliott's Debates, the distinct question was presented by Mr. Madison whether or not treason should be made so broad under the Constitution of the United States as to embrace all of the provisions found in the act of Edward III, and the distinct conclusion reached was that it should not. What did they mean to accomplish when they said it should not? Can it be for a moment assumed that they had no purpose? Did they intend that their action should be effective, or were they simply playing with words? It must be obvious that it could only be effective in case those things which they did not desire should be recognized as treasonable offenses could not be so made by evasion; by still prosecuting a man for the act and prescribing the same penalty, only omitting in the criminal statute to name the offense "treason."

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Will the Senator from Georgia permit me?

Mr. BACON. I shall be very glad to yield.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I do not know that I follow the Senator closely, and therefore I wish to ask a question. Does he contend that because the offense of killing the President was not made treason by the Constitution the Congress can not, therefore, pass a law to punish that offense at all?

Mr. BACON. If the Senator will pardon me, I am on that exact point, and if he will let me proceed——

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I direct his attention to that point, and I shall be very glad to hear from him on it.

Mr. BACON. The learned and distinguished Senator does not need to direct my attention to it, because that is the only point I now have in view, and I am coming to it.

Mr. SPOONER. Will the Senator pardon me for a moment? Does not that follow from your premises?

Mr. BACON. I hope the Senator will let me at least present the proposition. I have not yet been able to do it because as fast as I get in the neighborhood of it and before I can present it the Senator, with a perfectly proper desire to know exactly what I will say, induced probably by my imperfect expression, does not permit me to get through with what I think will answer the question of each one of the Senators.

It is not necessary now to consider five of these various propositions. We will say just for the purpose of simplifying the inquiry that the statute of Edward III has but two propositions in it. One of them was the one which is found in the fourth paragraph and the other is the first. The first provision of the act of Edward III is as follows:

> When a man doth compass or imagine the death of our lord the king, of our lady his queen, or of their eldest son and heir.

Now, that can only be analogized to any officer in this country, but naturally in the consideration of the question whether or not there should be an inclusion in that paragraph of the Constitution which I have read of something similar to this, it would relate to the President of the United States, because while he is not in any sense a ruler, although he is inaptly often so termed, he does represent a part of the sovereignty of the country. It might be said that the Congress and the President together possibly represent the sovereignty of the country. I do not say they are the sovereignty, but they represent it. One is the lawmaking power; the other is the law-executing power.

Now, I repeat, we will suppose there were only two provisions of the act in the act of Edward III, that one relative to compassing the death of the King, and the other, the fourth, which relates to the levying of war and adhering to enemies. When the framers of the Constitution came to consider what they should do with reference to the first, whether or not they should make an attack on the President of the United States treason, the suggestion would naturally occur that in an attack on the President of the United States there were two offenses, one the offense of a crime against the person, the offense against the President of the United States as an individual, the other the offense against him, or against the Government in him, as representing in part the sovereignty in the same way that in Great Britain the King represents the sovereignty of the country.

The framers of our Constitution are met now with the proposition, Shall we make an attack on the President of the United States or the assassination of the President of the United States an act of treason? And they say no. What, it was probably asked, shall an attack on the President of the United States be no offense?

The reply is, in a country with institutions such as ours, it is intended that each man shall be equal before the law, and, when an attack on the President of the United States is made, the remedy shall be the same as in the case of an attack upon an individual. And when the question was asked, Shall there be no offense punishable by law, so far as the public is concerned, for an attack upon the sovereignty of the United States in a personal assault upon the Chief Executive, representing in part that sovereignty? the answer was necessarily "no," because such attack upon the sovereignty of the United States is in its nature a treasonable act—it is in the first class of treasonable acts specified in the act of Edward III, which was then before them. If they had intended that such an attack on the Chief Executive and his assassination should be punishable as an act against the sovereignty of the United States, it would then have been included among the offenses which should constitute treason.

If they had intended that an attack upon the sovereignty of the United States as represented in part in the official should be an act of treason they would have said so, and the fact that they did not say so, when they had before them the distinct question as raised in the act of Edward the Third, when it was not a casus omissus, when it was upon a distinct deliberation, when it was upon a distinct issue raised by Mr. Madison and Mr. Mason, there is no conclusion but that the framers of the Constitution did not intend that there should be in an assault upon the sovereignty of the United States through an attack upon the President of the United States the offense of treason.

Now, Mr. President, let me illustrate that for a moment.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President, will the Senator from Georgia permit me to ask him a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PERKINS in the chair). Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. BACON. Certainly.

Mr. SPOONER. Suppose it be admitted that what the Senator says is entirely accurate and true, and that there is no power in Congress under the Constitution to create from the assassination of a President the offense of treason and punish it by attainder during the life of the offender, does it follow at all that Congress has no power to punish the offense?

Mr. BACON. That is the very question I am going to try to come to, with the Senator's permission. If I do not answer that question, or at least attempt to answer it, before I get through, I hope the Senator will remind me of it.

Mr. SPOONER. I will agree not to interrupt my friend again.

Mr. BACON. I do not object to the interruption. The Senator must not misunderstand me in that regard. It is only that the Senator's mind works rapidly, and naturally more rapidly than I can talk or express it or come to it in the way of argument. I have not quite gotten to that point, but I will come to it.

I had stated the proposition that the failure of the framers of the Constitution to express this can be taken in no way except as a conclusion that they intended to exclude from the list of treasonable acts, or acts which should be punished as treason, an attack upon the official representing in part the sovereignty of the United States.

Then the further proposition which this is intended to illustrate is that if they intended to exclude it from the acts of treason, they did not intend that as a mere matter of form limited to the word "treason," but that they intended to deny to the Congress of the United States the jurisdiction to legislate with reference to an attack on the sovereignty of the United States through the person of the official, and that the evasion can not possibly be admitted that while it can not be done in the name of treason, an offense against the sovereignty of the United States as expressed in an attack upon one representing in part that sovereignty can be punished by a statute which shall have exactly the same effect as if it were called treason, and which is not an act of treason simply because it has not the word treason in it.

Now, to illustrate that I was about to present this view: Suppose the Constitution of the United States in this paragraph, instead of using the words herein used, had used the language of this proposed statute and had said:

> Treason against the United States shall consist only in levying war against them, or in adhering to their enemies, giving them aid and comfort, "or in willfully killing or causing the death of the President or Vice-President of the United States."

That latter part is the language of this bill. Suppose that had been the language of the Constitution and we were called on to legislate to enforce that provision of the Constitution, would the Senator from Wisconsin or any Senator frame a bill which should have a line or a letter in it different from the provisions of this bill now before us? There is the exact bill which would have been framed to carry out that provision if those had been the terms used in the Constitution of the United States; and yet if the proposition is true that, while we are prohibited by the Constitution from passing an act and calling it "treason" when the offense which it seeks to condemn and to punish shall consist in an attack on the sovereignty of the United States through the person of the Chief Executive, nevertheless we can enact a statute punishing that exact offense in the same way as treason is punished provided we do not call it "treason," then the Constitution in that regard is a piece of waste paper. It is nothing more if we can turn around and do that exact thing which is prohibited if we will only call it by another name.

Now, Mr. President, on the subject of this differentiation I read yesterday from Judge Aldrich's article, to which I had been very kindly referred by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER]. I read this because he expresses more clearly than I can that there are two distinct offenses, when you come to consider the question of an assault on the President of the United States or the assassination of the President of the United States. One of them is the offense against the person, which is punished by State laws, and which can only be punished by State laws if the offense is committed in a State.

The other is the offense against the sovereignty of the United States, and the proposition which I am endeavoring to present includes the proposition that a law directed against one who uses violence against the sovereignty of the United States must necessarily be a law of treason and can not be anything else, call it what you may. I do not say against any officer of the United States, but I say against any officer who represents the sovereignty of the United States; and I can conceive of no reason why the framers of the Constitution should exclude from this classification the particular element of treason, or the particular offense which would naturally constitute treason, unless they intended that an assault upon the sovereignty of the United States through the person of the official should not be one of the treasonable acts.

It was manifestly in recognition that in accordance with what was believed to be the genius and spirit of our institutions, as they were intended by the Constitution, there should be no man in this country who should stand before the law in the protection of his person on any higher platform than any other man.

I started to read this extract from Judge Aldrich's article in the December number of the North American Review simply to state in clear language the difference between the killing of the individual, the offense against the person, and the offense against the officer; the difference between the offense against the person, and the offense of the assault on the sovereignty of the United States as represented in the person of that officer:

> The killing of William McKinley as a private citizen in Ohio, or as a transient inhabitant of any State, would be an offense exclusively against the laws of that State; but the killing of the incumbent of the Presidential office, because of the office and what it represents, may well be declared a crime against the existence of the Federal Government, because the Government can not exist without administration, and it can not be administered in its present form without a President.

And the honorable Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] in the debate on yesterday drew the same distinction in defining the character of the offense which it is the intention of this bill to condemn and punish. Said he:

> I will say that what this bill means to punish is the crime of interruption of the Government of the United States and the destruction of its security by striking down the life of the person who is actually in the exercise of the executive power, or of such persons as have been constitutionally and lawfully provided to succeed thereto in case of a vacancy.

Now, Mr. President, I want to ask these learned lawyers this question: Can an offense, in the language of Judge Aldrich, such as the killing of the incumbent of the Presidential office because of the office and what it represents, which he says may well be declared "a crime against the existence of the Federal Government," be anything else but treason? Is it possible to differentiate an offense so that you can recognize it as one directed at the existence of the Government and still not be treason? I mean treason in its essential nature. That is what Judge Aldrich says this offense is, and the Senator from Massachusetts says the same thing.

It is true that, so far as that offense is concerned, the assassination of a President of the United States because he is President is leveled at the existence of the Government and can not be anything else but treason in its nature, and you can not make it anything less than treason by calling it something else, and yet the framers of the Constitution did not include this as one of the things which can be punished as treason. They saw fit, for a reason satisfactory to themselves, to exclude it.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. BACON. With pleasure.

Mr. SPOONER. Does it follow, because it does not constitute the offense of treason as defined by the Constitution, that it is not an offense against the Government which may be defined by the Congress and punished by the Congress? The Senator calls it treason; and while every lawyer perhaps will admit that the offense of treason is defined absolutely in the Constitution, the punishment of it is left to Congress, of course. It may be by death; it may be by fine or by imprisonment. It can not be treason under the Constitution; it can not be treason of which one can only be convicted under the rule of evidence prescribed by the Constitution; but does it follow from that that it can not be an offense against the Government of the United States which Congress has jurisdiction to punish?

Mr. BACON. I think so. I think this authority——

Mr. SPOONER. Take counterfeiting. That is an assault.

Mr. BACON. That is a different thing entirely.

Mr. SPOONER. It is an assault upon the sovereignty of the country.

Mr. BACON. No; that is where I differ from the Senator.

Mr. SPOONER. Counterfeiting the king's coin?

Mr. BACON. No.

Mr. SPOONER. That is a sovereign function.

Mr. BACON. Oh, yes.

Mr. SPOONER. It is an insidious assault upon it. But where does the Senator get authority for saying that because the framers of the Constitution were not willing to import into that instrument all of the definitions of treason——

Mr. BACON. The Senator ought to let me answer the other question first.

Mr. McLAURIN of Mississippi. Will the Senator from Georgia allow me?

Mr. BACON. I hope the Senator will repeat the first question. I really desire to answer it.

Mr. PETTUS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. BACON. Certainly.

Mr. PETTUS. I rise to a point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alabama will state his point of order.

Mr. PETTUS. This conversation passing from one member to another is strictly contrary to the rules of the Senate. According to my understanding, no Senator has a right to carry on such conversation at all or to address the Senate more than once when he has the leave of the Chair, and if a Senator is to address the Senate again he must do it by getting a second leave, or a third leave. This mode of interruption is contrary to good order and ought to be stopped.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. PETTUS. It leads to difficulty.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair thinks the point of order is well taken and sustains it.

PROMOTION OF COMMERCE.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, it becomes the duty of the Chair to lay before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 1348) to provide for ocean mail service between the United States and foreign ports and the common defense, to promote commerce, and to encourage the deep-sea fisheries.

Mr. FRYE. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Arkansas if there is anyone he knows of in opposition to the bill ready to speak to-day.

Mr. BERRY. It was expected that the Senator from Florida [Mr. MALLORY] would speak to-day, but I am informed that he is sick. He is not present in the Senate. I do not know of anyone opposed to the bill who desires to speak to-day.

Mr. FRYE. I should like to know whether there is anyone in favor of the bill who desires to occupy the attention of the Senate this afternoon.

Mr. HANNA. I am not informed as to that. I understood that the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] was to speak next.

Mr. FRYE. The Senator from Maine is informed that the Senator from Missouri is not in a condition to speak to-day, nor is the Senator from Florida, who was also expected to speak to-day.

Mr. HANNA. I do not think there is anyone on this side ready to go on to-day.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, if there be no impropriety in it, as I understand the Senator in charge of the shipping bill consents, I ask unanimous consent that that bill may be informally laid aside, and that we may continue the consideration of the bill which has been before the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent that the unfinished business coming over from yesterday be temporarily laid aside for the purpose of further considering the bill which was before the Senate when the hour of 2 o'clock arrived. Is there any objection?

Mr. McLAURIN of Mississippi. Before that is done, I have an amendment to the bill which I desire to have printed, and to lie on the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The proposed amendment will be printed, and it will lie on the table, in accordance with the request of the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. HOAR. Let the amendment be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be read for the information of the Senate.

Mr. McLAURIN of Mississippi. It is an amendment to the shipping bill.

Mr. HOAR. Very well.

Mr. ALLISON. Let it be read.

Mr. McLAURIN of Mississippi. It is not an amendment to the bill which has been under discussion to-day.

Mr. FRYE. Was there unanimous consent given?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair so understands it. The Chair heard no objection.

Mr. ALLISON. I made a request a moment ago that the amendment proposed by the Senator from Mississippi should be read. I hope that will be done.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Mississippi to the shipping bill will be read for the information of the Senate.

The Secretary read as follows:

Amend by adding the following sections, to wit:

SEC. 16. In making the contracts mentioned in section 1 of this act, in all cases where the contract shall be with a firm or firms the contract shall give the names of all the members of the firm or firms, as the case may be, with whom such contract shall be made; and in case such contract shall be made with a corporation or corporations the contract shall give the names of all the incorporators and stockholders thereof: Provided, That in cases of corporations where the number of incorporators and stockholders is so great as to make it cumbersome to include all the names in the contract it shall be sufficient for the Postmaster-General to make and keep a record of such names.

SEC. 17. That before any owner or owners of any vessel, as specified in sections 6 and 12 of this act, shall receive any of the money in said sections 6 and 12 mentioned, the names of all of the owners and part owners of such vessel shall be given to the Secretary of the Treasury under the oath of some one or more of such owners or part owners; and in case of a corporation the names of all of the incorporators and stockholders thereof shall be given to the Secretary of the Treasury under the oath of the president of such corporation, if there be a president, and if not, then under the oath of some other officer thereof, and the Secretary of the Treasury shall keep a record thereof.

SEC. 18. If the contract shall not give all of the names of the members of the firm or firms or of the incorporators and stockholders, as required by section 16, the said contract shall be thereby void.

SEC. 19. No Senator or Representative in Congress, or President of the United States, or judge of any court of the United States shall be directly or indirectly interested in any contract under this act, or in any corporation having a contract under this act, or directly or indirectly receive any money or thing of value or worth under the provision or provisions of this act, or be directly or indirectly interested in any corporation or vessel a beneficiary of this act.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The proposed amendment will be ordered printed, and it will lie on the table.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, it Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 3090) to approve and ratify an act of the legislative assembly of the Territory of Arizona entitled "An act to provide for the collection, arrangement, and display of the products of the Territory of Arizona at the international exposition to be held at St. Louis in 1903."

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 199) for the establishment of a light station on Bluff Shoal, Pamlico Sound, North Carolina.

The message further announced that the House had passed the concurrent resolution of the Senate directing the issuance to the Senate and House of Representatives of such Government publications as they may find necessary from time to time.

The message also announced that the House had passed the concurrent resolution of the Senate to print 3,500 copies of the report of the Commission to Revise and Compile the Laws of Porto Rico.

The message further announced that the House had passed the concurrent resolution to print and bind 4,000 copies of the Gazetteer of the Philippine Islands.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the amendment of the Senate to the amendment of the House to the concurrent resolution of the Senate providing for the printing of the proceedings of the report of the Schley court of inquiry, with an amendment, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (H. R. 1198) granting a pension to Joshua H. Buckingham; and

A bill (H. R. 3830) for the relief of William C. Marr.

PROCEEDINGS OF SCHLEY COURT OF INQUIRY.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the amendment of the Senate to the amendment of the House to the concurrent resolution of the Senate to print the proceedings of the Schley court of inquiry; which was in line 3, after "and," to insert: "also with a subject and topical index of the whole publication; and."

Mr. HALE. I move that the Senate agree to the amendment of the House to the Senate amendment.

Mr. BATE. What does the amendment relate to?

Mr. HALE. It is a resolution which the Senate has passed for the printing of the hearings and testimony in the Schley case, and the House put on an amendment providing for what is a very good thing—a topical index.

Mr. BATE. We could not hear it on this side, and I did not understand it at all.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the House to the Senate amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The concurrent resolution as finally adopted is a follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed 3,500 copies of the proceedings of the Schley court of inquiry, together with all papers officially before the President, with Admiral Schley's appeal and the President's action thereon, and also with a subject and topical index to the whole publication; and of which 1,000 copies shall be for the use of the Senate, 2,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, and 500 copies for the use of the Navy Department.

PROTECTION OF THE PRESIDENT.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 3653) for the protection of the President of the United States, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PERKINS in the chair). The senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, when interrupted I was discussing the question, somewhat in response to the inquiry of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER], whether the exclusion of this particular offense from those enumerated in the Constitution as offenses on account of which treason could be charged deprives the Congress of the United States of the power to legislate with reference to an act thus excluded, if that act was in its nature treasonable. My conclusion is that it does.

That sounds like a very remarkable proposition, yet I believe it to be one sound in law, though I am frank to say, as I said in the beginning of this argument on yesterday, it is not free from difficulty. But I can not see in what way we can get around it.

When the framers of the Constitution came to consider the question of treason they had in their minds not only the act of Edward III, but they had in mind the long history of England, in which trials for treasons had played a very important and a very bloody part.

I desire to ask the Senate to keep clearly in mind this proposition, that in reference to this matter I am dealing simply with those acts which are an assault upon the sovereignty of the Government—as Judge Aldrich expresses it, "upon the existence of the Government"—and I have no reference to minor acts, because minor acts are not in themselves treasonable. I limit it to those acts which must necessarily be treasonable and can not be otherwise than treasonable.

I say the class of act which we have under consideration here is in its nature treasonable because it is an assault on the sovereignty of the Government, upon the existence of the Government, and that anything which is an assault on the sovereignty of the Government, and attacks its existence, must be treason in its nature.

It is a distinct class of offense. It is entirely different from offenses against the person. It is entirely different from offenses against property. It is absolutely a separate and distinct offense, being only against the sovereignty of the Government.

I am unable myself, Mr. President, to see how to escape from the proposition that either the framers of the Constitution intended that there should be no law against any assault on the sovereignty of the Government, except for the offense of levying war or adhering to the enemies of the United States and giving them aid and comfort—either that, or else they were simply writing upon a piece of paper that which could have no practical effect.

Mr. SPOONER. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. BACON. Certainly.

Mr. SPOONER. Does the Senator think it was competent for Congress to pass section 5334 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, declaring it to be an offense and providing punishment for a "person who incites, sets on foot, assists, or engages in any rebellion or insurrection against the authority of the United States, or the laws thereof, or gives aid or comfort thereto?" That is not the treason section.

Mr. BACON. Well, Mr. President, the first section of that chapter is a repetition of the language of the Constitution of the United States:

SEC. 5331. Every person owing allegiance to the United States who levies war against them, or adheres to their enemies, giving them aid and comfort within the United States or elsewhere, is guilty of treason.

The balance, I presume, is an elaboration of the same. Is it or is it not?

Mr. SPOONER. If the Senator will allow me——

Mr. BACON. I see it is a different provision.

Mr. SPOONER. Section 5333 is as to misprision of treason, and section 5334 is in reference to engaging in rebellion or insurrection. Those are offenses against the Government. Would the Senator say it was within the jurisdiction of Congress to pass those sections?

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, whether or not something which falls short of treason could be made a penal offense is a very different question. Something which falls short of treason can be an offense against the Government; but when it comes to that which assaults the sovereignty of the Government, strikes at the existence of the Government, it can not be anything else in its nature than treason and must be confined by the limitations of the Constitution. Of course I have not now the opportunity to read that chapter of the statutes through, but I think that general response will possibly cover the inquiry of the Senator. I will take pleasure in looking at it a little more carefully hereafter; and if the debate continues, I shall try to give my view in regard to it, because I have no object in this except to arrive at the truth—none whatever. I think it is a very grave question and one which may be of the utmost importance in time.

What is the meaning of the limitation in the Constitution as to what shall constitute treason, and is it competent when we come to deal with that distinct class of offenses which relate to assault upon the sovereignty of the Government to punish for any assault on the sovereignty except those attacks on the sovereignty which the Constitution itself prescribes?

I want to make one other reply to the inquiry of the Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON]. The Senator asked particularly with reference to the crime of counterfeiting. I want to call his attention to a fact, aside from the suggestions which I have already made, that there is necessarily a distinctive line between offenses which are treasonable in their nature and offenses which are not treasonable in their nature and only made so by arbitrary statutes. Aside from that fact, while the framers of the Constitution did not make counterfeiting an act of treason, they did in another clause of the Constitution specifically make it a criminal act which could be legislated about by the Congress of the United States.

I want to call the attention of Senators to another thing, that the power to legislate criminally is restricted throughout the Constitution. We have not unlimited power to legislate as to crimes. It is a natural fact that the subject of treason should have engaged most closely the attention of the framers of the Constitution, because they had behind them the history of the English Government, in which charges and trials for treason had represented a very large part of the political history of England. They not only defined what should be treason, but set a limitation beyond which the penalty should not go.

It is the only offense in the whole of the Constitution in which there is such a restriction, and the only offense against the law in which the framers of the Constitution thought it proper to set a limitation upon the punishment. Then, the only other two clauses in the Constitution which specifically provide for the enactment of criminal laws are these:

To provide for the punishment of counterfeiting the securities and current coin of the United States.

Then, in a subsequent part:

To define and punish piracies and felonies committed on the high seas, and offenses against the law of nations.

Mr. President, the only other clause in the Constitution under which there can be found authority for the enactment of criminal laws is the general clause which authorizes and requires Congress to make all laws which are necessary for carrying into effect the powers of the government or of any department thereof.

I do not doubt the proposition, Mr. President, and if I did doubt it, it has been often decided by the Supreme Court of the United States that it is clearly within the power of Congress to pass laws making it a penal offense to interfere with any officer in the discharge of his duty.

That rests upon a very different ground. None of those laws comes within the classification of offenses which I have in view which are directed against the sovereignty of the country; and if the Constitution of the United States did not mean to limit legislation by Congress as to offenses which were aimed at the sovereignty of the Government, then it meant nothing by the clause defining what should constitute treason. An attack on the President is in its nature one of that class of offenses, but I respectfully submit that it is within that class of offenses and that it was the distinctive purpose of the Constitution that there should not be included in the crime of treason an attack upon the sovereignty of the United States through the person representing that sovereignty; and if that was the intention, then that intention can not be defeated by a statute directed against the same offense and prescribing the same penalty for it by simply calling it something else.

Now, sir, I submit, in brief, this proposition—

An assault upon the President may be of twofold character:

1. It may be an offense against the person, having no relation to his official character.

2. It may be an offense against the sovereignty of the Government, of which he is in part the representative, with no reference to his personality.

These two offenses are entirely distinct, the one from the other, as perfectly so as if perpetrated against two different people. The first is one exclusively within the jurisdiction of the States. The second is, in its essential nature, treason. A statute which not only prescribes an offense thus in its nature essentially treason, but which also prescribes the same penalty as that prescribed for treason, is none the less an act against treason, although the word "treason" does not appear in it. The framers of the Constitution, after full deliberation, determined that an assault on the sovereignty of the Government, through the person of the chief executive, should not be treason. It is only on the ground that the offense is not one against the person, but that it is an offense against the sovereignty of the United States, one that threatens the existence of the Government, an offense in its essential nature treason, that there can be any defense of a statute which imposes a higher penalty for an assault in any State upon the President than the penalty imposed by the general law of the State for an assault upon a private citizen. A statute of this nature and of this design falls under the prohibition of the Constitution, and is not to be justified through an evasion of that prohibition.

Mr. President, not to trespass too far upon the time of the Senate, there is another branch of this question to which I want to ask the attention of the Senate. I shall have something to say as to the propriety of the policy of making this proposed law as extensive as it is and embracing other persons, but I will pretermit that, as I desire, before doing so, to call attention to another branch of this question, which is one of immense practical materiality, and that is to the sections to which attention was called yesterday by the junior Senator from Colorado [Mr. PATTERSON]. Without taking time to analyze, I want to read the first, second, third, and fifth sections of the bill:

A bill (S. 3653) for the protection of the President of the United States, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted, etc., That any person who shall, within the limits of the United States or any place subject to the jurisdiction thereof, willfully kill or cause the death of the President or Vice-President of the United States, or any officer thereof upon whom the powers and duties of the President may devolve under the Constitution and laws, or who shall willfully cause the death of the sovereign or chief magistrate of any foreign country, shall be punished with death.

SEC. 2. That any person who shall, within the limits of the United States or any place subject to the jurisdiction thereof, attempt to commit either of the offenses mentioned in the foregoing section shall be punished with death.

SEC. 3. That any person who shall, within the limits of the United States or any place subject to the jurisdiction thereof, instigate, advise, or counsel the killing of the President or Vice-President of the United States, or any officer thereof upon whom the powers and duties of the President may devolve under the Constitution and laws, or shall conspire with any other person to accomplish the same, or who shall instigate, advise, or counsel the killing of the sovereign or chief magistrate of any foreign country, or shall conspire with any other person to accomplish the same, shall be punished by imprisonment not exceeding twenty years.

SEC. 5 That any person who shall, within the limits of the United States or any place subject to the jurisdiction thereof, by spoken words or by written or printed words, uttered or published, threaten to kill or advise or instigate another to kill the President or Vice-President of the United States, or any officer thereof upon whom the powers and duties of the office of President of the United States may devolve under the Constitution and laws, shall be punished by imprisonment not exceeding ten years.

Mr. President, that is the most dangerous piece of legislation which has ever been proposed in this country in a hundred years—since the days of the sedition law, of the nature of which this bill very largely partakes.

The objection to this provision of the bill is not that it makes it easy, if we might say so, to punish one who is an anarchist, but the trouble is that it will make it easy to punish one who is not. None of us has any desire that it should be difficult to punish an anarchist; but we should all desire that it should not be easy to punish an innocent man. In the terms of this bill there is ample opportunity in times of passion and excitement for the grossest injustice to be done to those who are innocent of crime. It is not on account of the anarchists that we object to the bill.

For myself, I should be glad if they could all be destroyed, just as I should like to see a nest of rattlesnakes exterminated; but I am not willing, in the effort to accomplish that laudable purpose, that we should put upon the statute book a law which shall invade our institutions; which shall take from the States their rightful jurisdiction over crime; which shall upturn the recognized procedure of a hundred years; which shall put it in the power of partisans, either on the bench or elsewhere, to oppress men on account of political opinions.

And yet, Mr. President, can it be for a moment doubted that this is a law which puts it into the power of one man to go to the grand jury and say, "This man advised me to go and kill the Secretary of the Treasury," and for that man to be arraigned before a Federal court and be convicted upon the single testimony of that one man simply as to what another one said to him in private? And that is competent under this bill, even though no attempt were made on the life of the Secretary of the Treasury.

Not only so, sir, but is it possible that we can approve a bill which, in time of excitement, may be used to muzzle the press; to make any editor afraid to express his opinions as to one of these officials—because the bill is not limited to the President of the United States, but extends to every head of a department—to make him afraid to express his opinions, even though he may believe an officer has done wrong, or is corrupt in his office, for fear that if thereafter that officer should be killed by somebody he could be arrested and carried before a court and tried upon the charge of having instigated the murder?

Mr. President, I want to read to the Senate the old sedition law. Of course I do not pretend that this is the same law as the old sedition law; but I want to ask the attention of Senators to this proposition, that while the old sedition law goes on to enumerate what shall constitute the offense, under the terms of this bill now before the Senate there is not a single one of the acts enumerated in that law but what could be proven under the words of this bill as an instigation to do that which is prohibited. It is not so elaborate as the sedition law, but it uses general terms which will cover all the acts named in the sedition law. I am going to try, if I can have the indulgence of the Senate, to show some things which could be done under the sedition law, and to ask whether we want to see a repetition of them in this country.

Before proceeding to read the sedition law I want to recall to the attention of Senators the fact, known to them all, the circumstances under which that law was passed. It was passed at the time of our threatened troubles with France in 1798, and the purpose of it was, as shown, to punish those who should speak against the Government, who should write anything against the Government, because it was apprehended that in so doing they would be giving aid to the enemies of the Government.

The contemporaneous writers show that at that time there was a large number of foreigners in the country, and the avowed purpose of the bill was to prevent those who were recognized as really the enemies of our people from having an opportunity by seditious speech or writing to give aid and comfort to those who were thus our enemies; and yet the sequel was that they were not the people against whom the law was really leveled after it had been put into operation, but it was leveled against the political opponents of the party in power, many of whom were tried and put in jail, including a Representative in Congress from the State of Vermont.

Now, I will read this act, Mr. President. It goes on to provide in section 1:

That if any persons shall unlawfully combine or conspire together, with intent to oppose any measure or measures of the Government of the United States which are or shall be directed by proper authority, or to impede the operation of any law of the United States, or to intimidate or prevent any person holding a place or office in or under the Government of the United States from undertaking, performing, or executing his trust or duty; and if any person or persons, with intent as aforesaid, shall counsel, advise, or attempt to procure any insurrection, riot, unlawful assembly, or combination, whether such conspiracy, threatening, counsel, advice, or attempt shall have the proposed effect or not, he or they shall be deemed guilty of a high misdemeanor, and, on conviction before any court of the United States having jurisdiction thereof, shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $5,000 and by imprisonment during a term not less than six months nor exceeding five years; and further, at the discretion of the court, may be holden to find sureties for his good behavior in such sum and for such time as the said court may direct.

SEC. 2. That if any person shall write, print, utter, or publish, or shall cause or procure to be written, printed, uttered, or published, or shall knowingly and willingly assist or aid in writing, printing, uttering, or publishing any false, scandalous, and malicious writing or writings against the Government of the United States or either House of the Congress of the United States or the President of the United States, with intent to defame the said Government or either House of the said Congress or the said President, or to bring them, or either of them, into contempt or disrepute, or to excite against them, or either or any of them, the hatred of the good people of the United States, or to stir up sedition within the United States, or to excite any unlawful combinations therein for opposing or resisting any law of the United States or any act of the President of the United States done in pursuance of any such law or of the powers in him vested by the Constitution of the United States, or to resist, oppose, or defeat any such law or act, or to aid, encourage, or abet any hostile designs of any foreign nation against the United States, their people or Government, then such person, being thereof convicted before any court of the United States having jurisdiction thereof, shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $2,000 and by imprisonment not exceeding two years.

The purpose I have in reading that is twofold. I want to show, in the first place, what are the general terms of the act under which those who proceeded to its inforcement acted, and I want to show what were the class of acts which were construed by the courts to fall within the condemnation of that act. I want to show, further, that the language of this act, while it is directed to a different purpose, is language of a general character which will include any of these various specifications so far as it is applicable to the particular offense or offenses which are aimed at in this bill.

In McMaster's History of the People of the United States we have an account of some of the things which occurred under the operations of that law and in the effort to enforce the same. It created a tremendous turmoil in the United States. It was claimed, Mr. President, that this law was in direct violation of the first amendment to the Constitution—my attention to which has just been called by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. PETTUS]—and a very great amount of disorder and of excitement was created throughout the United States on account of it. The press teemed with articles relative to it, and the author of this book gives the various charges and comments and criticisms which were made by the newspapers of that day upon the bill, citing in each instance the name of the paper from which he takes it. I will read some of them.

And what, asked the Republican newspapers, is a libel? A libel is whatever a Federal President, marshal, judge, and grand jury choose to make it. The President orders the prosecution. The process goes out in his name. He appoints the marshal. The marshal summons the grand and petit jurors, and in a large city Federal tories for this duty may be had in plenty. Nor is this all. The Federal judges are likewise named by the President, who, if they behave well, may make them envoys extraordinary, as he did of John Jay. Does any man hope for an impartial trial before such a tribunal as this? The thing is an infamous mockery of justice.

The moment the law takes effect the Democrat who squints at the President through a pair of spectacles will be guilty of sedition. To look at him through an opera glass will subject the man to misprision of treason. To utter the disorganizing syllable "Bo!" to a goose will be treason in the last degree. To laugh at the cut of a Congressman's coat, to give a dinner to a Frenchman, to let him sleep in your bed, will be treason. When election time comes round it will no longer be safe to speak of a member's doings in the House, lest it "bring him into contempt and disrepute."

And so on, a number of other comments by the newspapers of that day—comments which in the end caused the editors of some of them to be thrown into jail and their newspapers to be suppressed.

There were a number of prosecutions under that act. This bill now before us gives opportunity for the same class of prosecutions; it is one which gives opportunity to a party in power, in times of excitement and passion, to oppress those who do not agree with them in political opinions. The author of this book goes on to speak of the editors of different papers who were arrested and put in prison, and then goes on to give an account of the trial and punishment of the member of Congress from Vermont to whom I alluded a moment ago. He says:

But the first to be tried and convicted was he the Federalists named the Beast from Vermont. Matthew Lyon, while the sedition bill was on its passage through the House, wrote and dispatched a letter which, after Adams signed the bill, was read by the subscribers to the Vermont Gazette. The letter was no worse than those hundreds of honest gentlemen were constantly exchanging through the mails or intrusting for delivery to the care of private hands; no worse than Jefferson's letter to Mazzei, than Adams's letter to Tench Coxe, than the yet more famous letter in which, two years later, while the sedition law was still in force, Hamilton maligned Adams. But Lyon had long been a marked man. His conduct in the House, his fracas with Griswold, his hatred of idle show, had made him many enemies, and his enemies now took their revenge.

I will remark in passing that the fracas of Lyon with Griswold in the House was the case of a rough-and-tumble fight in the House between two Representatives from New England, and they not only had one, but two, on two different days. In that particular New England is entitled to the championship.

Mr. GALLINGER. That was a good while ago?

Mr. BACON. It has had time to cool.

He was no sooner at home than he was arrested for libel on three counts. The letter to the Gazette was one. Reading some extracts at a political meeting from Joel Barlow's letter to Baldwin was the second.

The passage—

selected by the prosecutors of Lyon contained an expression of surprise that the answer of the House to the President's speech of April 3, 1797, had not been "an order to send him to a madhouse."

Lyon in his own letter denounced the fast-day proclamation, as using the "sacred name of religion as a State engine to make mankind hate and persecute each other;" lamented that "every consideration of the public welfare was swallowed up in a continual grasp for power, an unbounded thirst for ridiculous pomp, foolish adulation, and selfish avarice," and that, while good men were turned away for "independency of sentiment," "mean men" got places.

Those were the classes of things which were in his letter, and on account of which he was tried.

When the trial came he conducted his own case, and began by challenging some members of the jury chosen by the marshal. But the judge denied the right of challenge and berated him for not knowing the law of his own State.

Then, after some further account of the trial, speaking of the action of the presiding judge, it says the judge—when the verdict of guilty was returned, scolded the prisoner, fined him $1,000, and committed him to the jail for four months.

The jail was at Vergennes, and was a fair specimen of the horrible dens in which, all over the country, our ancestors confined criminals and debtors. Though the season was late and the weather cold, the authorities would give him no stove. With great reluctance they consented to put glass in the one window that lighted the cell. No one seems to have been kind to him but the jailer, the parish parson, and a man named Byrd, the most acrimonious of all the Federalists at Vergennes.

I read that for this purpose. I have not read all of it, and I could read trials of other men, a man named Cooper, another named Callender, who was tried in Richmond, another named Holt, and others, but it is sufficient for the purpose of illustration that under such vague and general language as is contained in the third and fifth sections of this bill a man is liable to be dragged before a Federal court and tried upon the charge that he advised somebody to kill the head of a Department, with no corroborating testimony required, upon the simple assertion of one man. It is perfectly possible, under the vague language of this bill, that such an outrage can be perpetrated upon a man, who has no defense whatever but to deny what the man charged he did say, and which at last must be determined by the court and jury.

Mr. HOAR. May I ask the Senator from Georgia a question?

Mr. BACON. With pleasure.

Mr. HOAR. Is there any difference in principle that the Senator can suggest between that and the ordinary case, either of a principal, an accomplice before the fact, or a conspirator in the matter of murder? If the jury, who are the safeguard always everywhere, believe a single witness who should testify that I had sent a man to kill any other person, could I not be, as the Senator expresses it, dragged before the court and be convicted on that one man's statement of what I said? Whether this is right or wrong, is there any difference in this matter from all other cases of criminal liability, either as accomplices before the fact or as principals, or, indeed, as accomplices after the fact?

Mr. BACON. There is a very remarkable difference, if the Senator will pardon me. When a man is being tried for murder there is one very essential fact which must be proved—that somebody has committed a murder. But in this case it is not necessary that any crime should have been committed. A man may have been as innocent and as pure as the virgin snow, and there may never have been any suggestion by anybody that the life of the head of a department should be taken. He may have been as safe as the senior Senator from Massachusetts is now in his seat, without anybody threatening him.

Mr. HOAR rose.

Mr. BACON. Pardon me a moment, if you please. If somebody will simply go to the grand jury and will say, "John Jones got me to try to kill the Secretary of the Treasury, or the Secretary of the Navy," it is sufficient. There is a great and vast difference between a case of that kind and the case where a man has been actually murdered.

Mr. HOAR. Is it not true, however, if the Senator will pardon me, not only that that answer does not meet the cases of conspiracy or of attempts or instigations to commit all other offenses, but even in the case of murder, although the murder must have been committed, the insufficiency or the unreasonableness of the evidence on which the Senator predicates his argument is equally the same. The fact that the murder has been committed does not make it any more likely, I hope, that I committed it than if it had not been committed, and I am liable on a single witness's evidence to be hauled or dragged, as the Senator expresses it, into court as an accomplice before the fact or as the principal. Is not the distinction rather in favor of this matter? If the murder has been committed, it is quite likely that there will be an excited public sentiment that may make it easy to convict the person falsely charged.

Mr. BACON. I still think there is a very material difference between this and a case where there has been a murder. In a case where there had been murder there would be the fact that somebody had committed it. There would be circumstances attending that murder which would tend to corroborate or disprove the statement of the witness as to what the accused had said. But in the case authorized by this bill it is not necessary that there should have been any crime. It is not necessary that there should have been any intention in a human breast to commit a crime. The crime under this bill is made to consist in the fact that one has advised that the head of a department be killed, and the proof of that may be the testimony of a single witness that this man did suggest such a thing to him. In such case the crime is complete, although no hand has been lifted to commit any crime whatever. In such case there are no attendant circumstances either to corroborate or to discredit the witness.

If the Senator from Massachusetts will pardon me, there is another very great difference, and that is that while the offenses against which the bill is directed are the most heinous crimes—offenses which we all would like to see ferreted out and punished—the scope of the bill is such that it can be directed against other classes of people, and that is the point I am making. The scope of the bill is such that it is not limited to those who may be anarchists.

The scope of the bill is such that it may be extended to those who may be out of favor, who may have excited enmity, if you please, by reason of political antagonism; and when it comes to a case of that kind, the difference between that case and the case suggested by the Senator from Massachusetts is that in the one case there is no political feeling, but in this case, this bill extending, as it does, to everybody who shall instigate, everybody who shall advise, may, in its provisions, embrace what a man may idly say on the street, which may have no reference to a subsequent act in the killing of one of these departmental officers by somebody, but which may be taken and applied to him and secure the conviction of one who is innocent and carry him to the scaffold.

Take the case of newspapers engaged in heated political campaigns, in which they are free to criticise their political opponents, more free than they ought to be probably, but still with no criminal design, and yet we see what may be done in prosecuting their editors, as in the case of this man Lyon, who had gone no further than other people had gone, according to this historian, and whose expressions in the letter on account of which he was tried were not as offensive as those used by Hamilton in his arraignment of John Adams. All these expressions are matters which can be gathered up, and in the event of the assassination not alone of the President, but of a departmental officer, words uttered, words printed, having no possible design on the part of the man who spoke them or the man who wrote them, can be brought into court and he can be convicted of being accessory and of having instigated the crime.

Mr. President, I have but a few words to say on another branch, and that is as to whether this bill, if it shall be enacted into law, should be made applicable to all of the heads of departments. I do not, in what I say, derogate in the least from the dignity and importance of the officers of these departments. While they are statutory and not constitutional officers, they are generally eminent men, men of ability, men entitled to every respect, and I certainly would say no word which would indicate the contrary; but why should they be singled out and put upon a plane different from all other people in the United States? Is the the executive department of the Government any more essential to that Government than the legislative department?

When I say that the law ought not to be extended to them, I would say in the same way that it ought not to be extended to the members of the Senate. If it be true that it is proper to single out an officer and make him different from all other people in the United States before the law, then it is simply a question of grade; and if a greater punishment should be adjudged against a man for assaulting or for killing the head of a department than is adjudged against a man for killing a private citizen, then there ought to be an intermediate punishment for the man who kills the assistant, and so on down.

If it be true that it is necessary to protect the executive department by passing a law which shall put the officers of that department upon a different plane from the other people of this country so far as the criminal law is concerned, then it ought to be extended to the judiciary. There is no reason in the one why it should not be in the other; and if to the judiciary, then to the Senate and House of Representatives. Where will you draw the line and on what principle will you draw the line?

I think that very thought was in the minds of the framers of the Constitution when they expressly excluded from that paragraph in the Constitution under the crime of treason anything which assaulted the sovereignty of the Government except the particular things specified there, because they recognized that under our institutions, according to the Government which they sought to set up, there should be no distinction of persons before the law, and that the highest officer of the Government was no more sacred to the law than the most lowly citizen; or rather I will put it in the other way in order that it may not appear to be any way disrespectful, that the most lowly citizen has the same right to the protection of the law as the highest official.

Mr. President, it has been aptly said by some author that the proudest boast of the law is that no man is so high as to be above its power, and no man so lowly as to be beneath its care; and if those words were applied to our country, with our institutions, the word "equal" ought to be inserted—no man so lowly but that he is entitled to the equal care of the law. Equality before the law is the foundation stone on which rests our entire political fabric. Under our system of equality before the law, there is no room to "differentiate between the President of the United States and any other citizen of the State" as suggested on yesterday by the Senator from New York—no room for a differentiation which would make an assault on a private citizen in New York punishable by imprisonment, and the same assault in that State on the President punishable with death.

Sir, are we to have in this country classes before the law? This bill makes them. The Secretary of the Navy walks down the street and a man assaults him. I care not what the provocation is, under this bill he is adjudged to death. If I were the only man in the Senate or House of Representatives I would never vote for such a bill. The Chief Justice goes down the street; a man assaults him; and he is put in the penitentiary for a short term of years. The Secretary of War walks down the street and a man assaults him under exactly similar circumstances, and he is put upon the gibbet and hanged until he is dead. The Secretary of the Interior assaults a private citizen and under the general law of the State he is liable to imprisonment for a term of years. But reverse the case—the private citizen assaults the Secretary under exactly the same circumstances in the same State, and by the provisions of this bill the private citizen must die the death on the scaffold.

There is nothing, so far as I know, in the law of Great Britain to equal such a discrimination. They have classes there. They have classes before the law. A peer can demand that he be tried in the House of Lords and that he be not put to his trial before twelve jurymen. It may be now that I am incorrect, but I do not think there is a law there which makes it a greater penalty to kill a peer than to kill any other British subject; and yet, Mr. President, that is what this proposed law undertakes to do—to set up a class of people before the law and to say that while it is a misdemeanor to commit an assault against one man, it shall be a capital offense to commit the same assault against another man.

Mr. President, is there no other remedy for the evil which this bill seeks to correct? Is it true that in order to throw proper guards around the President of the United States and the Vice-President and the heads of the departments and Congress, and, if you please, all other officials and all other prominent people in the United States, it is necessary to pass such a law as this? After a man is killed the execution of his murderer does not bring him back to life, and the remedy is not in a drastic law of this kind, which can be extended in its operation not simply to those you are seeking, but which may be made and will be made an engine of most terrible and outrageous oppression in this country. The remedy, in my opinion, is in preventive measures, and I am willing to go as far as the farthest in the effort to rid this country of this detestable horde, and I shall not be in favor of stopping at any halfway measures in order to rid the country of them.

But, Mr. President, in the doing of it I do not want to subvert the institutions of this country as recognized for a hundred years, and I do not want to put in the hands of any political power an engine of oppression against innocent men who are not within the contemplation of this bill, but who can be harried and crushed and ruined by the terrible and resistless machinery which it will put in motion.

There are now several measures pending in this Congress looking to the prevention of this crime, not to punishment after the commission of the crime, because, as I have said before, that does not prevent the commission of the particular crime you are seeking to reach. The anarchist who makes up his mind to strike a blow at the representative, in part, of the sovereignty of this country knows when he does it that he forfeits his life, and consequently no law you may pass looking to the taking of his life as a penalty will deter him. I was saying there are several measures pending. Let us go forward and perfect them. Let us take measures which will rid this country of this detestable horde, these enemies not only to man, but to social order. Let us take the most extreme measures. Let us apply the preventive.

Mr. President, I have an article in the same magazine from which I read before, written by the honorable Senator from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS]. It is the December number of the North American Review. In that article he writes very interestingly of the history of the efforts which have been made in Congress to pass laws which would rid this country of anarchists, and he quotes from the proceedings of Congress and what was said by various people, the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] among others, with respect to a measure before Congress which was then deemed amply sufficient and of which the Senator from Michigan uses language which I will now read. The bill passed the Senate, and the distinguished Senator, the author of this article, said it would have passed the House but for the objection of one man at a critical stage; and of that bill he writes this:

> There was a measure introduced in the Fifty-third Congress, in 1894, which, had it been enacted into law, would have probably prevented the Buffalo murder. Had it been passed, Emma Goldman would have been deported to her birthplace, Russia, long before she had had an opportunity to convince the McKinley assassin that the murder of a President is a divine duty. Most would have been sent back to Germany, where the authorities are anxiously waiting to lay hands on him, and the whole horde of foul conspirators and agitators who would tear down the social structure we have so carefully erected would have followed suit.

Mr. President, is the distinguished Senator correct in his opinion that that law, if passed, would possibly have prevented the murder of the President? If so, it has already received at a former session the approval of the Senate, and let us again pass it, and let the House also pass it, that it may become law. If that is not sufficient, let us make it more efficient. Let us reach the evil and prevent the recurrence of the crime rather than indulge the vain hope that any bill that we can pass which inflicts a penalty will be sufficient to deter the anarchist. He expects the penalty, and he glories in what he considers his martyrdom.

The way to protect the President of the United States and the Vice-President and the heads of departments and all other officials is to prevent persons who may have that design from having the opportunity; and then, in addition, let us hedge them around with all the safeguards we can. But do not let us seek to appease our outraged feelings on account of the assassination of President McKinley by doing that which will be of infinite injury and harm, at least an infinite threat to men who are innocent, but who through this proposed law can be made the victims of political persecution.

Mr. President, I have finished except that I wish to say simply one word in response to a suggestion made by the senior Senator from Massachusetts. I am extremely anxious that this bill, if it is to pass, shall be guarded in the way suggested by the amendments which have been offered by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. PATTERSON] and the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. MCLAURIN] and myself. I wish to meet one objection which the Senator from Massachusetts offered to the amendment offered by myself, and also one objection which the Senator from Colorado offered to it. The amendment I have offered is one which limits the operation of this bill when enacted into law to those who shall commit the crime—I think I can quote the language substantially—because of the official position of the President or either one of these officers, or for the purpose of destroying the Government or impairing the exercise of governmental powers.

The Senator from Massachusetts suggested, and very pertinently, that it would be difficult to show that such was the purpose. I suggested in reply that in the absence of proof of any other motive a court would rule that that was the presumption. But if I am incorrect in that, it is a matter easily cured by inserting in this proposed law a provision that upon the trial of one accused of this crime the absence of other motive shall be construed into a presumption of the existence of this motive, which would be perfectly legitimate.

Mr. HOAR. How are you going to prove the absence of other motive?

Mr. BACON. I did not hear the Senator.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to ask the Senator how he is going to prove the absence of other motive. Will not that be very difficult?

Mr. BACON. When you prove the killing and there is no other motive shown, the presumption attaches, if the law says there shall be such a presumption, and the burden of proof is on the defendant to show that there was another motive. Undoubtedly that would be ruled by any court in the world.

Mr. HOAR. If the Senator will allow me to make one observation right there, so that I will not have to come back to it, it seems to me that motive being of the essence of an offense it is a pretty serious thing to put the burden on a defendant in any matter which is the essence of the offense.

Mr. BACON. I presume the Senator from Massachusetts has been so long engaged in civil practice and in matters of magnitude that he has failed to recollect the rule of practice in all criminal cases that whenever a man is on trial for the commission of a murder the proof of the killing and the perpetration of the act by the man completes the case for the prosecution, and throws the burden of proof to the contrary on the defendant. It is the universal rule. When you prove that a man kills another you do not have to prove malice. You prove that he kills him, and the law presumes malice, and it is for him to show that he had no malice.

Mr. HOAR. That is not the law, as I understand it, in any jurisdiction in which I have been familiar with the law.

Mr. BACON. I think if the Senator will examine he will find that I am correct. I am quite sure of it.

Mr. President, one other word, because I am speaking of this now in a practical way. I shall be greatly disappointed if the Senator does not amend the bill.

The Senator from Colorado [Mr. PATTERSON], who objects, with me, to certain features of the bill, suggested that the amendment offered by me might lead to results not desired, that if upon the trial there was a failure to prove that this was the motive the party would be acquitted, and that having been once acquitted he could not be tried again.

I simply want to call the attention of the learned Senator, and also of the Senator from Massachusetts, as being directly in charge of the bill and having control in large manner of the question of its amendment, to the conspiracy section of the Revised Statutes of the United States—section 5508, the statute which makes conspiracy "to injure, oppress, threaten, or intimidate any citizen in the free exercise or enjoyment of any right or privilege secured to him by the Constitution or laws of the United States," and it has as one of its penalties this, which is found in section 5509:

If in the act of violating any provision in either of the two preceding sections any other felony or misdemeanor be committed, the offender shall be punished for the same with such punishment as is attached to such felony or misdemeanor by the laws of the State in which the offense is committed.

Now, that is directly, so far as the practice is concerned, in the same category as this proposed law would be if it had that amendment. For instance, there is an alleged conspiracy, and in the alleged conspiracy there is a murder.

Under the law, when that man is tried he is not simply punished by the penalty affixed to the conspiracy, but he is punished by the penalty affixed to the commission of the crime committed in pursuance of the conspiracy. If, upon the trial of that case, the conspiracy should fail to be made out, of course the same result would occur as that which is now predicted and deprecated by the Senator from Colorado. But that conspiracy law with that feature never in practice fails on that account.

Mr. President, I apologize to the Senate for having so long occupied its time. I have only done so because I thought it was a matter of grave importance. I repeat, the Senator from Massachusetts has no greater desire to protect the President of the United States and every other officer of this Government from anarchists than I have. The Senator has no greater desire to break up the horde of men not deserving the name of men who threaten, as I said, not only our persons, but our social order. The Senator will not go further than I will in the effort to rid the country of them, and by all lawful means to bring to punishment those who are thus prostituting our free institutions or abusing our hospitality.

Mr. President, I agree with the Senator in the purpose; I join him hand in hand in everything in the way of preventing the recurrence of this act and to prevent the possibility of it by excluding from this country all those who are of the class by which this great and outrageous crime is committed.

I will go hand in hand with him in that. But I object, Mr. President, to a bill which, while it may have that purpose, will put it in the power of the Federal courts and juries to try men for words spoken, or alleged to have been spoken which were never spoken, to fill jails with men, private citizens, and editors of newspapers, upon the suborned testimony, it may be, of unworthy men, whose only offense if any has been that they have talked possibly imprudently, or printed in newspapers things imprudently, when they have been innocent of crime or wrongful purpose.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] this morning moved that the Senate when it adjourned to-day should adjourn to meet on Monday next. I asked him to withhold the motion for an hour or two to see how we got along with this bill. But one or two Senators who are not here now have proposed amendments, and one Senator to-day asked to have his amendment printed. So I suppose the Senators on the other side would not like an attempt to force a vote this afternoon. Therefore I shall not make one, and as I understand there is a general desire not to sit to-morrow, I will either make the motion or let the Senator from Maine renew it, as he prefers.

Mr. HALE. Let the Senator make it in his own time.

Mr. HOAR. I will move that when the Senate adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Monday next, but before that I should like to make the request, to which I think there will be no objection, that this bill be made the unfinished business after the shipping bill is disposed of. I ask unanimous consent that that order be made.

Mr. PETTUS. Mr. President, I did not hear the proposition.

Mr. HOAR. I ask unanimous consent that this bill be made the unfinished business after the shipping bill is disposed of, and then I propose to move that when the Senate adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Monday.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The senior Senator from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent that when the shipping bill is disposed of the pending bill be made the unfinished business of the Senate. Is there any objection to the request of the senior Senator from Massachusetts? The Chair hears none. Such, therefore, is the sense of the Senate.

Mr. HOAR. I now move that when the Senate adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Monday next.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. TELLER. I wish to suggest to the senior Senator from Massachusetts whether it would not be better to strike out the word "willfully," in lines 4 and 5, and insert "maliciously."

Mr. HOAR. I do not at present see any objection to that proposition, if it will remove any difficulty.

Mr. TELLER. I will formally make the motion and then the Senator can look at it.

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator put in the word "maliciously" after "willfully?"

Mr. TELLER. We might say "willfully and maliciously." I will move the amendment in that way. I wish to call the attention of the Senator to two other words which are used in the bill, which I think are liable to——

Mr. HOAR. The words "and maliciously" following "willfully" should come in in two places, the Senator from Colorado will observe, in the fifth line of the first section and in the eighth line.

Mr. TELLER. Yes. I also want to call the attention of the Senator to section 3. I think the word "instigate" is rather a dangerous word. While I do not care about moving to strike it out, I wish to call the attention of the Senator to it and see whether he does not think it is rather a broad word. It is equivalent to saying "who shall incite." It is so difficult to meet that it seems to me it is rather dangerous to use that word. It is also used in the fifth section. I do not care about making a motion to amend, but I call the attention of the Senator to it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Shall it be understood that the amendments proposed by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] have been accepted?

Mr. TELLER. Inserting the words "and maliciously" after "willfully" in the first section?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Inserting those words.

Mr. HOAR. I shall accept them, but perhaps, as I am the only member of the majority of the committee present, it would be well to let the section stand as it is until the other members are present. Something may occur to them.

Mr. TELLER. Very well.

Mr. HOAR. I have not any doubt whatever but that that amendment will be accepted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendments will be regarded as pending.

Mr. HOAR. What I speak of relates to inserting the words "and maliciously" in line 5 and in line 8 of section 1.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Those will be regarded as pending amendments.

Mr. TELLER. I desire to enter a formal motion to strike out section 7.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That also will be regarded as a pending amendment.

Mr. PETTUS. I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. KEAN. I ask the Senator from Alabama to withdraw that motion for an executive session.

Mr. PETTUS. Very well. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 3 o'clock and 35 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, March 10, 1902, at 12 o'clock m.

Mr. JOY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 11719) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the Pittsburg and Mansfield Railroad Company to construct and maintain a bridge across the Monongahela River."

The Clerk read the bill at length.

Mr. JOY. Mr. Speaker, I do not think it is necessary to read the report. If there is any member who desires to ask a question I am ready to answer.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I did not hear all of the bill. What was the gentleman's request?

Mr. JOY. For unanimous consent to consider the bill.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I know that, but what was the request in regard to not reading the bill?

Mr. JOY. I was speaking of the report. The only change made is in the height of the bridge above the water. It cuts it down from 80 feet to 70 feet.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Has the bill been considered by the committee, and is it a unanimous report?

Mr. JOY. It is a unanimous report from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, and it also has the approval of the War Department.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. JOY, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE SAVANNAH RIVER, COUNTY OF CHATHAM, GA.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. The Clerk read the bill at length.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

On motion of Mr. ADAMSON, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE MISSISSIPPI RIVER AT BURLINGTON, IOWA.

Mr. HEDGE. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 11306), to extend the time for the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River at Burlington, Iowa.

The Clerk read the bill at length.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 3090) to approve and ratify an act of the legislative assembly of the Territory of Arizona, entitled "An act to provide for the collection, arrangement, and display of the products of the Territory of Arizona at the international exposition to be held at St. Louis in 1903."

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That act No. 86 of the legislative assembly of the Territory of Arizona, approved March 21, 1901, entitled "An act to provide for the collection, arrangement, and display of the products of the Territory of Arizona at the international exposition to be held at St. Louis in 1903," be, and the same hereby is, approved and ratified.

On motion of Mr. LLOYD, the motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

PRINTING REPORT ON DISEASES OF CATTLE.

Mr. HEATWOLE. Mr. Speaker, I am directed by the Committee on Printing to ask for the consideration of House joint resolution 24, providing for the publication of 200,000 copies of the Special Report on the Diseases of Cattle.

The SPEAKER. Is this a privileged report?

Mr. HEATWOLE. I think so.

The Clerk read the joint resolution, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That there be printed 200,000 copies of the Special Report on the Diseases of Cattle, under supervision of the Secretary of Agriculture, 108,000 copies for the use of the House, 64,000 for the use of the Senate, and 8,000 for the use of the Secretary of Agriculture.

The report is as follows:

The Committee on Printing, having had under consideration House joint resolution No. 24, providing for the publication of the Special Report on Diseases of Cattle, recommend that the same do pass with the following amendment:

Strike out all after the second line and insert in lieu thereof: "That there be printed 99,000 copies of the Special Report on the Diseases of Cattle, the same to be first revised and brought up to date under the supervision of the Secretary of Agriculture, 66,000 for the use of the House and 33,000 for the use of the Senate."

The Public Printer estimates the cost of the publication of the report in its present form at $66,000.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is of the opinion that this is not a privileged report. Is there objection to the present consideration of the report? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The amendment was considered and agreed to.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I wish to ask whether a written report has been submitted with this resolution, and whether it shows, as required by the rule, the cost of this printing? I think that rule ought not to be departed from. I do not understand that there is any objection to the resolution.

Mr. HEATWOLE. The cost of printing this document is stated in the report.

The SPEAKER. The report as sent to the desk does show the cost. Does the gentleman from Tennessee desire to have it read?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. No, sir; but I hope it will be printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it will be printed in the RECORD.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HEATWOLE. I ask unanimous consent that the title of the joint resolution be amended as proposed by the committee.

There was no objection.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PARKINSON, one of its reading clerks, announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. R. 65. Joint resolution to provide for the employment of extra clerical force in the office of the assessor of the District of Columbia; and

An act to provide for printing, and binding in cloth, additional copies of the first edition of Government documents and publications, for distribution to the designated depository libraries in lieu of the sheep-bound copies of the document edition, so called, now supplied to said libraries.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the following resolution; in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

Senate concurrent resolution 290.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Superintendent of Public Documents be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to issue to the Secretary of the United States Senate and the Clerk of the House of Representatives such Government publications as they may find, from time to time, to be necessary for the use of the Senate and the House of Representatives, respectively.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the following resolutions:

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with deep sensibility the announcement of the death of Hon. RUFUS KING POLK, late a Representative from the State of Pennsylvania.

Resolved, That a committee of six Senators be appointed by the presiding officer to join the committee appointed on the part of the House of Representatives to take order for superintending the funeral of the deceased.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate bill and joint resolution of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees, as indicated below:

S. 4261. An act to provide for printing and binding in cloth additional copies of the first edition of Government documents and publications for distribution to the designated depository libraries in lieu of the sheep-bound copies of the document edition (so called) now supplied to said libraries—to the Committee on Printing.

REPORT ON DISEASES OF THE HORSE.

Mr. HEATWOLE. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the joint resolution which I send to the desk.

The joint resolution (H. J. Res. 26) providing for the publication of 200,000 copies of the Special Report on the Diseases of the Horse was read, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives, etc., That there be printed 200,000 copies of the Special Report on the Diseases of the Horse, under supervision of the Secretary of Agriculture, 108,000 copies for use of the House, 64,000 for use of the Senate, and 8,000 for use of the Secretary of Agriculture.

The report of the committee was read, as follows:

Your Committee on Printing, having had under consideration House joint resolution No. 26, providing for publication of Special Report on Diseases of the Horse, recommend that the same be agreed to, with the following amendment:

Strike out all after the second line and insert in lieu thereof "That there be printed 99,000 copies of the Special Report on the Diseases of the Horse, the same to be first revised and brought up to date, under the supervision of the Secretary of Agriculture, 66,000 for the use of the House and 33,000 for the use of the Senate."

The Public Printer estimates the cost of the publication of the report in its present form at $56,100.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of this joint resolution?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Is the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. HEATWOLE] able to tell the House whether or not this publication has anything to say on the subject of the diseases of the carabao in the Philippine Islands? Those animals are dying off very fast there with a fatal disease called "rinderpest."

A MEMBER. Are they a species of the horse?

Mr. HEATWOLE. I shall be glad if the gentleman from Tennessee will furnish any information he has on that subject.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Will the gentleman from Minnesota state how the copies of this document are to be distributed among members?

Mr. HEATWOLE. The documents intended for members of the House will go to the folding room, where each member will have a certain number to his credit.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of this joint resolution? The Chair hears none. The question is now on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I ask the gentleman from Minnesota to yield to me five minutes on the amendment.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Minnesota yield?

Mr. HEATWOLE. I should very much like to do so, but I have in charge several more bills and resolutions from the committee which I would like to have considered.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The gentleman can hardly expect to bring matters of this kind before the House by unanimous consent and then not allow anything to be said in the way of discussion.

Mr. HEATWOLE. Very well; I have no objection. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to make a speech on this bill; but it will be observed that the amendment reported by the committee proposes to cut down the number of these documents from 200,000, as proposed in the resolution, to 99,000. Now, sir, Congress publishes a great many documents which are of no use to anybody, for which there is no demand. But there is one book that is valuable to our constituents that is always in demand in larger numbers than Congress publishes; and this document when distributed is always useful, because it carries valuable information and accomplishes good results. That publication is what is commonly known as "the horse book." I am therefore in favor of voting down the amendment and ordering the printing of the number of these documents originally proposed. I hope that the amendment will be voted down and the resolution adopted. [Applause.]

Mr. LACEY. I wish to ask the gentleman from Minnesota whether it is the intention to bring this book down to date—to make such additions as the experience of the Department has demonstrated to be necessary?

Mr. HEATWOLE. Yes, sir.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment. [The question was put.] The noes appear to have it.

Mr. HEATWOLE. I call for a division.

The question being again taken, there were—ayes 56, noes 99.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is now on ordering the joint resolution to be engrossed and read a third time.

Mr. SMALL. Members who have just voted against the amendment did so, I presume, on the ground that they desired to have printed the number proposed in the original resolution—200,000 copies. But I am sure there is no objection to the proposition that this publication be brought down to date; and that proposition was a part of the amendment which has been defeated. I merely wished to call attention to that fact.

Mr. HEATWOLE. The amendment just voted down contained a provision for bringing the publication down to date. The amendment having been defeated, that, of course, will give us the old book.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I ask recognition for the purpose of moving an amendment that that portion of the book be brought down to date.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield for the purpose of a motion?

Mr. HEATWOLE. I do not.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Well, Mr. Speaker, I make this point of order——

Mr. HEATWOLE. I move to recommit the resolution.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I was demanding the floor on the ground that the gentleman had lost his control of the floor, his motion having been defeated and the control of the floor passed to the other side.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is of opinion that the defeat of an amendment does not transfer the control of the bill. That is a mere minor detail. The gentleman from Minnesota moves to recommit.

Mr. HEATWOLE. Mr. Speaker, I move to recommit.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman moves to recommit.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I move to lay the motion to recommit on the table.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman reduce his amendment to writing and send it to the desk?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I hardly think a motion to recommit can be laid on the table. It is a privileged motion itself, and you can hardly apply one privileged motion to another privileged motion.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Will the gentleman recognize me for an amendment?

Mr. HEATWOLE. For information only.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I desire to offer that portion of the amendment which was offered by the committee, which provided for the bringing of the book down to date. The clerk has it before him, and I ask to have that portion read which I offer. The committee reported this motion.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman modify the committee amendment?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I desire to offer, as an original amendment to the bill, that portion of the committee's amendment which applied to bringing the publication of the book down to date, which is in their report.

Mr. McDERMOTT. Will the gentleman from Alabama permit a suggestion?

Mr. HEATWOLE. I refuse to yield to the gentleman from Alabama.

The SPEAKER. The Chair must request the gentleman to reduce his amendment to writing. If it is the same as was just defeated, it will be out of order.

Mr. McDERMOTT. I would suggest to the gentleman from Alabama, that his object will be accomplished by offering an amendment that the number "90,000" be stricken out and "200,000" substituted.

The SPEAKER. Does the Chair understand that the gentleman from Minnesota insists on his motion to recommit, to refer back to the committee?

Mr. HEATWOLE. I do. I ask for the previous question on that, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will say that under Rule XVI the motion to recommit has precedence over the motion to amend, and that therefore the Chair will put the motion to recommit; and on that the gentleman from Minnesota demands the previous question.

The question being taken, on a division demanded by Mr. HEATWOLE, there were—ayes 43, noes 103.

Accordingly, the motion was lost.

Mr. HEATWOLE. I ask the previous question on the passage of the amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's motion to recommit is pending. The question is on the motion to recommit the bill to the committee.

The motion was rejected.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I now offer the following amendment, which I will ask the Clerk to read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by adding as a new paragraph:

"That the Secretary of Agriculture be directed to revise the same and that it be brought up to date."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HEATWOLE. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman address the Chair?

Mr. HEATWOLE. A parliamentary inquiry. I did not yield to the gentleman from Alabama to offer an amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama had a right to offer an amendment, and that is not all. The gentleman from Alabama is now in control of the joint resolution. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the House joint resolution.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. UNDERWOOD, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

GAZETTEER OF THE PHILIPPINE ISLANDS.

Mr. HEATWOLE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota, chairman of the Committee on Printing, asks unanimous consent for the consideration of the following, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed and bound in cloth 4,000 copies of the Gazetteer of the Philippine Islands; 1,000 copies for the use of the Senate, 2,000 for the use of the House of Representatives, and 1,000 copies for the use of the War Department.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I should like to have the gentleman from Minnesota tell us what this gazetteer contains.

Mr. HEATWOLE. It is described in a memorandum from the War Department.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Is it a newspaper or a book?

Mr. HEATWOLE. It is a gazetteer. It is fully described in a memorandum attached to the report. The Clerk will please read the report.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the report.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Printing, having had under consideration Senate concurrent resolution No. 13, authorizing the printing of 4,000 copies of the Gazetteer of the Philippine Islands, recommend that the same do pass.

The Public Printer estimates the cost of this publication at $7,030.

The attached memorandum, which is made a part of this report, will give a general idea of the nature and scope of the gazetteer which it is proposed to publish.

The following are the chief points of value of a gazetteer of the Philippine Islands, prepared in the War Department, Division of Insular Affairs:

1. It assembles under one title and one alphabet the most comprehensive and recent information, geographical, statistical, and economical, published relating to the United States possessions in Asia.

2. It describes the Philippine Islands in convenient classified arrangement under heads: Location, area, physical features, bays and harbors, roads and communications, population and towns, dependent islands, vegetable products for domestic use and of industrial and commercial value, minerals, forests, fruits, industries, United States military occupation, civil government, and bibliography.

The same treatment is given to each group, island, or province.

3. It is a gazetteer and encyclopedic dictionary of 10,300 alphabetically arranged names, locations, and descriptions of places, embracing provinces, mountains, rivers, bays, towns, villages, capes, points, and other mapped objects.

4. It is a ready reference for the executive branch in the administration to the affairs of the islands from Washington.

5. It is a repository of practical information, alphabetically arranged, for Senators and Representatives in the discussion of the Philippine question in all its bearings.

6. It is educational, and should be placed in every library—public, academic, or technical—in the land.

7. Its facts and general information are taken from the best authorities of the old and the latest official, civil, military, and scientific sources under the new jurisdiction. The descriptions of provinces have been submitted for revision to the officers of experience in the United States military service in the islands.

8. The publication, to the extent of its selected and original sources of information and careful computations, may be regarded as official and indispensable, there being no other work of its character extant.

WAR DEPARTMENT, DIVISION OF INSULAR AFFAIRS,
January 30, 1902.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I simply desire briefly to call the attention of the House to one omission that I think we are making in all our publications about the Philippine Islands, and I think it is a very vital omission.

We took the census of Cuba almost in a day, as soon as we got the chance, and it was of great value. We had been in Cuba only a short while, from a military standpoint, before we did this—and yet we have been in the Philippine Islands about three years and never have had a census taken. We have been guessing at the population of the Philippine Islands ever since we have been there, and so did the Spaniards.

Now, to show you how far short—if my friend from Minnesota [Mr. HEATWOLE] will yield to me for a moment—to show you how we are guessing at the population even in the city of Manila, I saw an official report here not long ago that said the population of that city was from "300,000 to 600,000 people." A few days ago I picked up another report from the board of health of Manila which has 60 supervisors who weekly visit the houses in the city of Manila for the purpose of exterminating every sort of disease, and those supervisors have taken a census of the city from which this board took a census of Manila and found the population of Manila to be only 244,732 people. Yet this other, though late, report said this population was "300,000 to 600,000 people."

Now, another matter. It seems to me that some committee having jurisdiction of the matter ought to see that a census of the Philippine Islands is taken, if we propose to hold these islands permanently. It may be a little difficult to take it at some places, and of course it is; but we have been there long enough in some places where quiet has been restored to take a census.

Another matter. In none of these documents is there anything said about the carabao. The carabao is the horse of the Philippine Islands. This animal is a huge cow, with immense horns, immense body, very black, with little or no hair. He is an animal which lives in water mostly. He is the Filipino farmer's horse, and he is the carriage or wagon horse. The American horse does not do well there. Governor Taft carried a fine span or two of horses out there, but they soon went the way of practically all American horseflesh taken there. The mule stands the climate better than the horse. The carabao can not live unless he has plenty of water.

When being used mud is packed on the top of his back and kept wet to keep him from suffocating until he can get to more water. Without water he becomes a dangerous animal. He becomes very angry and gets crazy, and, being powerful, is very dangerous and becomes unruly.

The SPEAKER. The duty of the Chair is to inform the gentleman that this is pending upon a question for unanimous consent.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I understood the gentleman from Minnesota had yielded to me for a few moments.

The SPEAKER. He has no right to do that until the House consents that the resolution may be considered.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I will be through in just a few seconds. I hope that in the next publication the gentleman reports he will consider the distinguished friend of the Filipino, the carabao, and the diseases that pertain to him.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The question is on agreeing to the concurrent resolution.

The question was taken, and the concurrent resolution was agreed to.

SCHLEY COURT OF INQUIRY.

Mr. HEATWOLE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the concurrent resolution providing for the printing of the proceedings of the Schley Court of Inquiry, with a Senate amendment, and ask to agree to the Senate amendment with an amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Chair lays before the House the concurrent resolution, to which the gentleman from Minnesota, as the Chair is advised, offers the following amendment. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add to the Senate amendment the words "also with a subject and topical index of the whole publication; and."

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. The whole resolution should be reported, Mr. Speaker. We do not know what the resolution is.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed 3,500 copies of the proceedings of the Schley Court of Inquiry, of which 1,000 copies shall be for the use of the Senate, 2,000 for the use of the House of Representatives, and 500 copies for the use of the Navy Department.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will now read the House amendment for the information of the House.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 4, after "inquiry," insert "together with the findings of the court, Admiral Dewey's opinion, Admiral Schley's appeal to the President, and the President's decision thereon, and."

The Clerk read as follows:

The Senate agrees to the foregoing amendment of the House of Representatives, with an amendment, as follows:

In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the said amendment, insert the following: "together with all papers officially before the President with Admiral Schley's appeal, and the President's action thereon, and."

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota moves to concur in the Senate amendment with the following, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add to the Senate amendment "also a subject and topical index of the whole publication; and."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentlemen from Minnesota.

The question was taken and the amendment was agreed to; and the Senate amendment as amended was concurred in.

PUBLIC DOCUMENTS FOR USE OF SENATE AND HOUSE.

Mr. HEATWOLE. I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table concurrent resolution No. 29.

Senate concurrent resolution No. 29.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Superintendent of Public Documents be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to issue to the Secretary of the United States Senate and the Clerk of the House of Representatives such Government publications as they may find from time to time to be necessary for the use of the Senate and House of Representatives, respectively.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The question was taken, and the resolution was agreed to.

REPORT OF THE COMMISSION TO REVISE AND COMPILE THE LAWS OF PORTO RICO.

Mr. HEATWOLE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the following resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate concurrent resolution No. 8.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed 3,500 copies of the report of the Commission to Revise and Compile the Laws of Porto Rico, sent to Congress by the Attorney-General, of which 1,500 copies shall be for the use of the Department of Justice, 500 for the use of the Senate, and 1,500 for the use of the House of Representatives: Provided, That of the 1,500 copies for the use of the Department of Justice 1,000 shall be held by said Department for distribution in such a manner as the Commission to Revise and Compile the Laws of Porto Rico may indicate.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The question was taken, and the resolution was agreed to.

EXTRA COPIES OF THE ANNUAL REPORT OF THE COMMISSIONER OF PENSIONS.

Mr. HEATWOLE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the Senate joint resolution which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate joint resolution 21, authorizing the printing of extra copies of the Annual Report of the Commissioner of Pensions.

Resolved, etc., That the Public Printer be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to print and deliver to the Department of the Interior 10,000 copies of the Annual Report of the Commissioner of Pensions for the year ending June 30, 1901, in addition to the number authorized by the act of January 12, 1895.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. No, Mr. Speaker; I will not object, if the gentleman will allow me to offer a very small amendment about which I have conferred with him. I suppose the gentleman will allow me to offer an amendment?

Mr. HEATWOLE. There was no conference as to an amendment. There was as to some remarks.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I want to offer a small amendment, to which I think the gentleman will agree.

Mr. HEATWOLE. I yield for remarks, but not for an amendment.

The SPEAKER. How much time does the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I think the gentleman will not offer any objection to my amendment.

Mr. HEATWOLE. I yield to the gentleman for remarks.

The SPEAKER. No objection is made.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Just a moment before I go on.

Mr. Speaker, this report of the Commissioner of Pensions contains a number of illustrations. Now, there is a proposition to reprint or print an additional number of this report. It occurs to me that the annual report of a bureau officer or the report of a bureau ought not to be filled with illustrations. Now, if this report contained illustrations in connection with the administration of the office of the Commissioner of Pensions, to illustrate the wounds received by soldiers or anything of that kind, I should not say a word. But there are some very handsome illustrations of the Pension building and of the decorations there during inauguration times; and it seems to me that that is a practice that is liable to very great abuse if the head of a bureau can fill his report with beautiful illustrations of that kind and character; and I simply want to add, after the order to print, that from it shall be omitted all illustrations. I think the gentleman from Minnesota will agree to that. Certainly that amendment ought to be adopted.

Mr. HEATWOLE. This is the first time I have heard the Pension building called handsome. I have no objection to the amendment.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. The gentleman misunderstood me. I did not say the building was handsome, but the decoration of the building at inauguration time. I do not think, Mr. Speaker, seriously, that the report of the Commissioner, representing the head of any bureau, ought to be filled with illustrations; for that reason I wanted to insert this provision with respect to the illustrations. In that annual report there are at least four showing the Pension building during inauguration time, and they should be omitted. I hope, therefore, the amendment will be agreed to, and that the gentleman will not object.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield for an amendment?

Mr. HEATWOLE. I have no objection to the amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

Insert after the word "one," in line 7, the following: "and from which shall be omitted all illustrations."

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I have not noticed the illustrations, but it seems to me that if they are as the gentleman from Tennessee contends, they ought to be omitted. I was going to inquire if there is anything in the illustrations that shows the medical board of the Pension Office as it is engaged in the daily performance of its duties casting every possible doubt against the applicant for a pension. If there is any illustration of that kind it ought not to be omitted. [Laughter.]

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I stated that it did not reflect upon the administration of the Pension Office, but in the text of the report there is no reference whatever, that I can find, to any one of the illustrations, each of which occupies a page. There are at least four of them. They are very pretty, but it is a practice, Mr. Speaker, that is liable to great abuse if the head of a bureau can fill his report full of beautiful illustrations.

Mr. HEATWOLE. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota has charge of the floor, and he has asked for the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution was ordered to be read a third time; and it was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. HEATWOLE, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

LIGHT-HOUSE NEAR BLUFF SHOAL, PAMLICO SOUND, NORTH CAROLINA.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill (H. R. 199) entitled "An act for the establishment of a life station on Bluff Shoal, Pamlico Sound, North Carolina," with Senate amendments.

The Senate amendments were read, as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

"That there be established a light station on or near Bluff Shoal, Pamlico Sound, North Carolina, the cost of which shall not exceed $30,000.

"SEC. 2. That the act approved March 3, 1901, for rebuilding the light station on Northwest Point, Royal Shoal, North Carolina, be, and the same is hereby, repealed."

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House concur in the Senate amendments.

The motion was agreed to.

LAUNCH FOR CUSTOMS SERVICE AT ASTORIA, OREG.

Mr. MOODY of Oregon. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 646) for the purchase or construction of a launch for the customs service at and in the vicinity of Astoria, Oreg.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized to purchase or have constructed for the customs service a suitable launch, of such motive power as may be determined by the Secretary of the Treasury, for use at and in the vicinity of Astoria, Oreg.; and the sum of $10,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated and made immediately available to purchase or build such vessel.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to have some explanation of this bill.

Mr. MOODY of Oregon. This bill, Mr. Speaker, provides for the purchase of a launch for the customs service. It has the indorsement of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce and of the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I can not understand what it is for and I shall object.

Mr. MOODY of Oregon. I ask that the Clerk read the report.

The Clerk read the report, as follows:

The Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. 646) for the purchase or construction of a launch for the customs service at and in the vicinity of Astoria, Oreg., beg leave to submit the following report, and recommend that said bill do pass, with amendment as follows:

Strike out all that portion after the word "and," in line 7, and insert in lieu thereof the following: "the cost thereof shall not exceed the sum of $10,000."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I understand this is for a launch for the benefit of the customs service, but there is no reason given for it in the report.

Mr. PAYNE. There is a recommendation at the end of the report.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the recommendation of the Department.

The Clerk read as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, December 14, 1901.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your communication of the 7th instant, transmitting a copy of bill S. 646, for the purchase or construction of a launch for the customs service at and in the vicinity of Astoria, Oreg., and requesting that this Department furnish your committee with such suggestions as it may deem proper touching the merits of the bill and the propriety of its passage.

I have the honor to inform you that after a careful investigation of the needs of the customs service at the port of Astoria, Oreg., the Department is of opinion that the customs service will be greatly benefited should it be supplied with a launch such as is provided for in the proposed bill, and I have the honor to recommend that the same be enacted into law.

Respectfully,

L. J. GAGE, Secretary.

The CHAIRMAN COMMITTEE ON COMMERCE,
United States Senate.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. MOODY of Oregon, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Speaker, under the rules this day belongs to the Committee on War Claims, but the gentleman from California [Mr. LOUD] has a bill before the House which may run all day, and he wants to follow it up with the Post-Office appropriation bill. I do not care to get in his way, and I ask unanimous consent for the passage of the order which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent for the adoption of the following order, which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

That the Committee on War Claims shall have the day immediately following the disposition of the Post-Office appropriation bill in lieu of this day which, under the rules, belongs to Committee on War Claims.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the adoption of the order just reported?

Mr. GROSVENOR. I object.

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of House bill 11728.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I rise to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Would it be in order, while the motion is pending, to move to go into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union on the Private Calendar to consider war claims, it being Friday and dedicated to that business?

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the order under which we are considering the bill for the rural free-delivery service.

The Clerk read as follows:

On motion of Mr. LOUD, by unanimous consent, it was ordered that the bill (H. R. 11728) "to classify the rural free-delivery service and fix the compensation to employees thereof" shall be taken up on Monday next, immediately after the reading of the Journal, and shall become a continuing order until disposed of; the bill to be considered in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union; the same to be subject to appropriation bills, bills raising revenue, and conference reports, and the time of debate to be equally divided between those in favor of and those opposed to said bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is of opinion that this order would supersede the motion to go into Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar.

Mr. SWANSON. Pending the motion to go into Committee of the Whole, I desire to submit a privileged motion, or rather to make a request for unanimous consent.

Mr. LOUD. Will the gentleman yield for a moment? I hear gentlemen around me say, "Defeat the motion." On behalf of the Post-Office Committee I wish to say that we are perfectly willing that the Committee on Claims should go on with its business to-day. But we had some consultation with the chairman of the Claims Committee, who said that he was willing to accept for the business of that committee a day succeeding the conclusion of the consideration of the Post-Office appropriation bill. Now, there can not be any contest between the gentleman who made that suggestion and the Post-Office Committee. It is perfectly immaterial to us how this matter may be settled. It is, of course, too late for me to make any suggestion in regard to the ruling of the Chair, although, according to my recollection, the rulings have uniformly been that where the rules specify that a certain committee on a certain day shall be recognized to make a motion, that proposition supersedes even an order such as has been read. But I do not care anything about that; nor does our committee care to provoke any contest with anyone regarding the occupation of to-day. But as the chairman of the Claims Committee did not press the motion to go into Committee of the Whole, I have made my motion to do so for the consideration of this bill. Now I yield to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] for a statement.

Mr. SWANSON. If we can not reach an agreement as to when general debate on this bill shall terminate and the bill be taken up and disposed of under the five-minute rule, I wish to ask the gentleman from California how much time is desired on his side for general debate?

Mr. LOUD. It was my desire, and I had hoped this morning to accomplish it, to close general debate on this bill to-day and to dispose of it finally to-morrow. Somebody says "there is nobody here."

Mr. GROSVENOR. There will be nobody here to-morrow.

Mr. LOUD. It is a pretty hard condition if we have to quit doing business on Saturdays by reason of the fact that nobody is here. As chairman of the Post-Office Committee, it becomes my duty to ask the House to proceed with business on business days. I shall not object to any reasonable proposition that the gentleman from Virginia may wish to make. I suggest that we go into Committee of the Whole at this time without any agreement; and if we can not close general debate to-day, we can probably reach an agreement to do so to-morrow. I can assure the House that the Post-Office Committee wants to dispose of this bill as soon as possible, but wishes at the same time to give an opportunity to every member who wants to speak on the measure. So far the discussion has been confined to the bill; and I think the best course to pursue will be to allow the general debate to continue to-day and see whether we can not to-morrow reach some agreement.

Mr. SWANSON. I am willing that general debate should conclude now. Gentlemen in favor of this bill have occupied in discussion thirty-seven more minutes than those opposed to it. I am willing that the bill should be disposed of to-day. I trust, however, we shall not have any prolonged debate under the five-minute rule. There is great pressure on our side to speak. I am willing that the general debate shall go on to-day and to-morrow, if the gentleman from California thinks there is great pressure for speaking on his side. If not, I desire to submit a proposition that when we resolve ourselves into Committee of the Whole general debate shall conclude at 3 o'clock, and that then we proceed to dispose of the bill under the five-minute rule. Now, I want to submit a request for unanimous consent that general debate on this bill shall continue to-day and shall terminate at the adjournment to-morrow, and that when the consideration of the bill is resumed, either on Monday or any subsequent day, we shall proceed under the five-minute rule.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent that general debate on this bill terminate to-morrow, and that when the bill shall subsequently be considered the House will proceed under the five-minute rule. Is there objection?

Mr. LOUD. I shall not object; I leave it to the House.

Mr. SIMS. Before deciding whether I shall object or not I wish to make a parliamentary inquiry. If the motion to go into Committee of the Whole for the consideration of this bill should be voted down will it then be in order, notwithstanding the special order, this being Friday, to make a motion to go into Committee of the Whole for the consideration of bills on the Private Calendar under the rule?

Mr. SHATTUC. I object.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman [Mr. SIMS] submit this as a parliamentary inquiry?

Mr. SIMS. Yes, sir.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is of the opinion that if the motion of the gentleman from California [Mr. LOUD] to go into Committee of the Whole should be voted down, the motion to go into Committee of the Whole for the consideration of war claims on the Private Calendar would be in order. The question now is, Is there objection to the request made by the gentleman from Virginia?

Mr. SIMS. I do not object, Mr. Speaker, if it is put to another day; but if this motion is voted down, one day will be cut out.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered. The question now is on the motion of the gentleman from California.

The question was taken; and the motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts in the chair, and resumed the further consideration of House bill 11728.

RURAL FREE-DELIVERY SERVICE.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PADGETT].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee is recognized for ten minutes.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I desire to discuss this question as purely a business proposition. I am persuaded that no one enterprise undertaken by the General Government is of more universal interest to the masses of our citizenship or that will be more beneficial to the country at large than the rural-delivery service. I regard it as a business service that addresses itself to the business judgment and the business thought not only of this body, but of the entire people. It is a service that fills a great business need. It is a service that is not local or sectional, but is one that is general, that applies to all the people of the country. It yields its benefits not only to the people of the country, but as well to the people of the cities, for the man in the city who writes to the man in the country is interested in having his letter delivered promptly, and the man in the city who expects to receive a letter from the man in the country is interested in having it delivered to him promptly.

It has been mentioned upon the floor that it is a service that will largely grow and will entail a large cost. If we were to concede that to be true, a sufficient answer to the proposition is found in that the service is well worth the cost and that the service is a service to the masses of the people, and the mass of the people receive the full measure of benefit of the cost of the service. I desire to call attention to this phase of the question of costs, that it is not now and will not in the future, as I consider it, be likely to prove a drain upon the public Treasury, for the postal service is one that is paid for by the people who use the service. The man who writes the letter pays the postage, and the increased service will contribute to meet the increased cost, so that I do not think that this will prove a large expense upon the general Treasury, but the service will pay its own cost.

There are two propositions that present themselves for the consideration of the House. One is the salary system and the other is the contract system. I have endeavored to consider these from the business standpoint and to separate them for that purpose from any other consideration. I now speak from the standpoint of a business enterprise, and I am persuaded that the best interests of the service will be subserved and promoted by adhering to the salary system. Under the salary system the competition and the inducement is for a better service. Under the contract system the competition and the inducement is for an inferior service. Under the salary system every inducement, as it occurs to me, is for the securing of a better service, for when the salary is fixed, the competition is among those who desire to secure the salary, and the only choice is a choice of efficiency of the public servant.

On the contrary, under the contract system, where it is let out to the lowest bidder, the competition is for the lowest price, and every inducement and every consideration is, "If I am to serve for a low price, how little service, how little labor, will I be necessarily compelled to render?" So that under the salary system the inducement and the competition is for an efficient service, and under the contract system the inducement and the competition is for the smallest possible labor and the most inefficient service.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Will the gentleman permit a question right there?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Does not the same rule apply to the building of a house or the construction of a building or the construction of a railroad or any other enterprise? Common experience teaches us it is always done better by letting it out at contract.

Mr. PADGETT. No; I do not think so. There is this manifest distinction which occurs to me. The building of a house or a bridge or any such enterprise is a single specific object that is susceptible of supervision and management, and is under the control of the party at the time, whereas this is a service that is spread all over the country, that employs a multitude of men where there is no gathering together of service, but a separation of service into individual localities that have no common bond of supervision.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. It is all under the supervision of the Post-Office Department, is it not?

Mr. PADGETT. Certainly, in a general way, but it is not under the personal supervision of the Postmaster-General, nor is it under the personal supervision of any of the different departments, because it is a service rendered in distant portions of the country.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Does not that apply to the salaried men just the same?

Mr. PADGETT. I think not. I think that every inducement under the contract system will be in endeavoring to cut down the amount of labor that will be rendered in the service to make it commensurate with the cheapness of the contract price.

Another thought that has been suggested relative to this service is that there are different lengths of routes. That is true; but I desire to call attention to this fact, that the length of the route is not the measure of the service that is to be performed by the carrier. In thickly settled countries where the roads are good the routes are shorter. In the sparsely settled countries the routes are longer, but where there is an excess of length in the route, requiring more travel, there is a density of population on the shorter route that compensates for the difference in the travel, an excess of service in the collection and distribution of the mail, so that there is an equalization of the service between the long route and the short route by the balancing that we have in the excess of service in the distribution and the collection of mail in the densely populated sections of the country where the short routes prevail.

Now, there is the political aspect of this question that necessarily injects itself into the consideration of the matter. I believe that any Administration, whether it be Democratic or Republican, will take a laudable pride in making a success of this enterprise as a business undertaking. It is a venture that should reflect credit, and magnificent credit, upon any Administration, and I believe that the pride that will be engendered in securing for the country the very best service, and stamping upon this rural-delivery service the sign and the approval of success and commendation from the people, will be a stimulus that will overbalance any effort to prostitute it for base political purposes.

Again, I am persuaded that the masses of the people who feel a deep and abiding interest in the success of this rural-delivery service will not permit any political party to prostitute it to partisan purposes. Again, I believe that the same influences that could be brought to bear upon the salaried men can be brought to bear with equal force upon the man under the contract system. The man who is employed under a salary is responsible to his superiors. Under the bill that is proposed if we take the man under the contract there is an unlimited discretion of removal vested in the superior, which the man under the contract would respect and fear just as much as the man under the salary.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SWANSON. I yield five minutes more to the gentleman.

Mr. PADGETT. Again, I fail to appreciate, as fully as other gentlemen upon the floor seem to do, the force of the argument that this will be made a great political machine to govern the election of members of Congress. I do not believe that the political thought of this country, that the political beliefs of this country, that the political principles of this country can be swayed by a few mail carriers scattered hither and thither among the several Congressional districts of the Union. I believe that the American people will not be controlled or governed by such influences as can be brought to bear by the mail carriers engaged in the rural delivery service.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the gentleman's ethics in political matters, but it has not escaped his attention that newspaper articles have already been printed claiming the credit of this splendid service for the Republican party, thus prostituting it to partisan ends, and the gentleman has already heard upon the floor of this House that in the Southern States, in many districts, one-half of the rural free-delivery carriers have been given to the Democrats; but when has he heard that there has been any such division in the Northern States? Will the gentleman excuse the party in power from using this service for political ends under those circumstances? Surely the people pay for this system of rural free delivery and it goes without saying that no party should prostitute it to political ends.

Mr. PADGETT. I do not know how it has been in the Northern States. I know that in my district I have been treated very fairly.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I agree with the gentleman as to what is the duty of a political party with a splendid service like this, but when we come to evidences of its being used for partisan ends, then it is necessary for the people of the districts in the Northern States to ask why it is that these favors are given to Southern districts, where there is no difficulty in the election of Democrats, and why the same privilege is taken away from the Northern members of Congress, who have no share in this public patronage.

Mr. PADGETT. I ask the gentleman if all of that of which he complains was not under the original system, where the patronage was given to members of Congress?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Ah, that is correct, but the gentleman has suggested that he did not believe the Administration had used it for political advantage.

Mr. PADGETT. Not at all.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. And I know the gentleman will agree with me that we ought to have the civil service blanket over this splendid service.

Mr. BARTLETT. It is already.

Mr. PADGETT. It is placed under the civil service now.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. But the gentleman knows and the experts tell us that it is not sufficiently protected by the civil service to accomplish that end.

Mr. PADGETT. Without doubt the civil-service regulations can be improved; but an additional answer to that is that under the provisions of the bill offered to us here there is no improvement over the present system. The unlimited discretion vested in the Postmaster-General to reject bids is more objectionable from a political point of view than as now under the civil service with a salary.

Mr. McDERMOTT. Will the gentleman answer me a question?

Mr. PADGETT. If I can.

Mr. McDERMOTT. Does the gentleman know any reason why, if the present Republican Administration could fill all the offices in this country with qualified Republicans, the Administration should appoint a Democrat?

Mr. PADGETT. No, sir. If you ask my individual opinion, I believe, as Jackson said, "To the victor belongs the spoils."

Mr. McDERMOTT. Precisely; and if I were responsible for the present Administration, there would not be a Republican in the Postal or any other department.

Mr. PADGETT. But I believe this: If there is a civil service, that it ought to be faithfully kept and faithfully and efficiently administered, but when I speak my own views, I believe the Republican Administration is entitled to the offices when it is in power, and under a Democratic Administration the Democratic party is entitled to the offices when it is in power, and I make no complaint because Republican Congressmen endeavor to get appointments. I try to get all I can, and when I get them it is for Democrats every time I get any.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Does not the gentleman from Tennessee recognize that this is the business Department of the Government?

Mr. PADGETT. Certainly.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. And that it ought to be entirely free from partisan control?

Mr. PADGETT. Every office of the Government is a business office.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Is not the Post-Office specially the business Department of the Government, more than any other department?

Mr. PADGETT. No, sir; no more than the Treasury Department.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

Mr. PADGETT. In view of the fact that I have been interrupted, I ask for just a moment further. One other thought——

Mr. SWANSON. I can yield to the gentleman only two minutes more.

Mr. PADGETT. I want to call attention to this fact, that so far as the rural service is admistered that it is a marked success. It has merited and it has received the approval of the people. It has demonstrated it is a success under the salary system. So that with the salary system we have demonstrated the success of the enterprise, whereas under a contract system it will be at the most but an experiment we will have to try and demonstrate in the future.

Now, then, there have been no complaints, there has been no abuse in the system. We all concede that no extravagant salaries have been paid. Why, then, should we be dissatisfied with the existing conditions, and launch out into an experiment, when we have a system which has demonstrated that it is useful and practical in its work? Now this thought and I am done. Some criticism has been offered to the management of the Bureau. I wish to say that both during the sessions of Congress and during the vacation I have been a number of times in the Department. I have always found the employees there at work, courteous, polite, and accommodating, and they seem to give as much systematic industry and attention to their business there as in any other department of the Government.

Mr. COCHRAN. I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. PADGETT. Certainly.

Mr. COCHRAN. Suppose the appointments in your district were universally Republicans and you were not consulted and had nothing to do or to say about them——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

Mr. COCHRAN (continuing). Do you think you would be as pleased with the situation as you are now?

Mr. PADGETT. No, sir; but they are put under the civil service now.

Mr. COCHRAN. That would admit the colored brother under this law. Would you want that in your State?

Mr. PADGETT. I would not.

Mr. COCHRAN. I thought not.

Mr. PADGETT. I do not think it would admit them any more or as much as it would by letting it under the contract system. Under the contract system they would be able to bid lower than other men and get it.

Mr. COCHRAN. Would you exclude him under the civil service?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

Mr. SWANSON. I yield twenty minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WARNOCK].

Mr. WARNOCK. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, this has been the most remarkable debate in this session of Congress in very many respects. It is remarkable from the fact that this is the fifth continuous, consecutive day in which members have discussed this question. Another remarkable fact about it is this: That during these days those who have discussed the bill have, as a matter of fact, made frequent reference to the bill.

We have not heard a word during those five days about the irrigation of arid lands; we have not heard a word during those days on the silver question; we have not had a word about the Philippines during this discussion; we have not had a word about the exchange of gold for silver; we have not had a word about the iniquitous trusts, and above and beyond everything else, we have not had a single word from our orators, who, with perspiring faces, and disheveled hair, and agonized tones, plead for the preservation of the Constitution. In other words, we have witnessed the remarkable spectacle of gentlemen actually discussing the bill.

Now, I say that is very remarkable in this body of Congressional candidates for future honors. There is another remarkable matter, and that is this: There have been more men of straw set up and knocked down by those who have discussed this bill than I have ever known to have been done in the short time I have been a member of this honorable body. These gentlemen have set up these miserable products of their imaginations and then proceeded to belabor them until their mangled remains are scattered from the Atlantic to the Pacific. A remarkable instance of this was that shown in the argument of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BOUTELL].

Now, the gentleman from Illinois is a most excellent lawyer; he is not only an excellent lawyer, but an eloquent gentleman as well. I have always listened to him with a great deal of interest and a great deal of profit. I was glad when he took the floor the other day, for I remember how he became famous; how upon this floor, as the representative of a feeling that too much had been said about truculent sycophancy in this Congress, that he produced an array of historical authority on that subject that showed him to be not only a good lawyer, not only an eloquent gentleman, but showed that he was a gentleman of large culture and of extensive reading. So that when he proceeded to discuss this bill I expected to find such conclusive arguments as that I should be compelled to reverse my judgment and to fall in with his own line of thought.

The trouble is that his argument consisted in setting up these men of straw, and I have noticed that in his efforts to destroy these wonderful products of his imagination the gentleman has succeeded in absolutely and utterly annihilating them. Now, when the gentleman proceeded in his inimitable way to destroy his men of straw, I have an idea that his thought was that by the destruction of these men of straw he would be making an argument in favor of the bill; but when he had finished and had laid out these products of his own imagination, I did not find any reason in that for the support of his propositions.

The propositions which he laid down, and which he so effectually disposed of, did not give anything as a substitute. It gave no reason for the adherence to the propositions contained in this bill and for the support of these measures. What were these men of straw? They were that the gentlemen who opposed the bill had fallen into two errors, and that these errors were, first, that the persons who had spoken against this bill had argued that those who were in favor of the bill were enemies of the rural free-delivery service.

Well, now, I have not heard any man on this floor charge any person who advocated this bill with being an enemy of rural free delivery. On the contrary, I have heard a great many pay tribute to the chairman of the committee who has presented this bill as being one of the foremost and one of the first advocates of rural free delivery. I looked in vain in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD for some utterances which would justify the gentleman in making the statement that anyone had charged that the advocates of the bill were enemies of rural free delivery. The trouble is that the gentleman construed the fact that many gentlemen had argued that those persons who advocated the contract system were enemies of rural free delivery. No one argued that the men who advocated this bill were personal enemies of rural free delivery, but that the principle which they advocated of the contract system was hostile to rural free delivery.

Well, that is no argument. The gentleman seemed to derive much satisfaction from elucidating that point and bringing out the fact that they were friends of rural free delivery, and having established to his satisfaction that they were the friends of rural free delivery he assumed that therefore the contract system was the best, as though that were a complete argument that the contract system was better than the present service.

Now, there was no necessity for the consumption of time to prove that the honorable gentleman from California [Mr. LOUD] is a friend of rural free delivery or that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BOUTELL] is a friend of rural free delivery. We are all willing to concede that and do concede it. So if that was an error in charging these gentlemen with being hostile to this bill, what does it amount to? It is not an argument in favor of the contract proposition.

The second error which the gentleman said he must dispose of was this—that it was claimed by those who are opposed to this bill that the bill would undermine the system, and the gentleman elaborated that thought, and said that there was not any system to undermine, and the fair inference from his remarks was that if he could demonstrate to this body that there was never a system of free rural delivery that that would be an argument against continuing the carriers on a salary and an argument in favor of the contract system.

So that when the gentleman, after occupying a long time in showing that this bill should be passed because technically we had no legal rural free-delivery system, read each section for the purpose of showing that it was now subject to a point of order whenever brought up in an appropriation bill, he seemed to think that these statements must of necessity be an argument in favor of the contract system. That is an argument in favor of establishing a rural free-delivery system by the enactment of a law which shall provide in detail for carrying on the service effectively.

I have not heard anyone object to the provisions of this bill as contained on the first page or the second page down to and including the ninth line of that page. So that I can not conceive how gentlemen could, for an instant, say that to prove there was technically no system is an argument in favor of the contract system. I do not care what you call it; there is, as matter of fact, a rural free delivery. There are 8,000 carriers; it has been commending itself to the people of the country; they like it; they want more of it, and wanting more of this free-delivery system, as we call it, while it may not technically be a system, to show the fact that it is not technically a system is not an argument in favor of changing that which now exists.

What objections are there now to a change in the matter of the salaried carriers? As a matter of fact, this bill adopts all the other provisions which are actually in practice. It continues and puts into legal shape the provisions with regard to these chiefs of divisions; it fixes their salaries just as they have been. It does not change any of the rules that have been adopted for perfecting this system of rural carriers. Why, then, has there been a departure from the rules adopted by the Post-Office Department as to the employment of these letter carriers? The only reason I have heard urged is, first, that the new method would be more economical.

It is said that if we have the contract system we can get persons who will carry these mails for a less sum than the salaries now amount to. Well, sir, there is nothing in the present manner of appointment of these letter carriers which prevents the Department from regulating that matter. It is just as easy for a provision to be made that the supervisors in the different districts shall provide that the carriers who have longer routes shall have more pay; that those who have hilly roads to travel shall have more pay than those who do their work upon level roads.

There is no reason why this great committee which has devoted three months to the preparation of this bill providing for the contract system could not provide in a bill for this arrangement as to the salaries that should be paid. There is no reason why, as a matter of fact, there should be extravagance in the matter of salaries.

I have no idea that the Government of the United States is seeking for cheap service, but it is seeking for the best service; and the question is, How shall the best service be obtained? Will it be by inviting bids from this man or that man or the other—a system under which by some possibility someone might be underbid who was a better or more responsible man than the one who gets the contract? Is that the way to get a better service? We all know as a matter of fact that cheap service or a cheap article, whatever it may be, is usually the worst article of the kind that is offered.

I have no reason to enter into a discussion of the old star-route frauds, because I conceive that any danger of the repetition of any such frauds can be eliminated or guarded against. I should have no apprehension of the repetition of any such frauds under any contract system. But while it may be conceded that there may be nothing of that kind, yet if as a matter of fact there should be a little cheaper service and a worse service, who would exchange the better service for that worse service on account of its cheapness?

It is claimed—though this point has not been brought into the discussion by all the gentlemen—that one objection to the present system is on account of a political machine that might be built up. It is claimed for the contract system that this machine could not be built up under such a system for the reason that the provisions of the bill are such as would exclude all political methods. It has been said that there are six provisions in the bill that must first be complied with before a person can be employed as a rural free-delivery carrier.

Now, the gentleman who made that statement made a mistake. There are seven provisions rather than six. The first of these is, that he must be the lowest bidder; second, he must be a legal resident of the territory in which the proposed service is to be performed; third, that he is reliable and trustworthy and that he is of good moral character; fourth, that he is able to read and write; fifth, that he has sufficient intelligence and ability, and, sixth, tenders sufficient guaranties that he will personally perform acceptable service. But what is the seventh requirement?

Why, sir, it is that he shall be acceptable to the Postmaster-General—that is to say, the Postmaster-General may reject any and all bids. So that whatever may be the answers and the findings as to those six provisions, the seventh brings the matter finally under the control of the Postmaster-General. He may reject all the bidders. Now, I conceive that under this provision the most gigantic political machine that we have ever had in this country may be constructed.

If it be true that this service will develop until we shall have fifty or sixty thousand carriers, all of whom must pass the scrutiny of the Postmaster-General, all of whom must be acceptable to that officer, all of whom may be of the same political faith with the Postmaster-General, that officer, if he so desires, may bring about that condition of things with reference to this great body of 60,000 men, which would make of them one great political machine.

But I want to say that so far as appears from any provision of this bill it will be just as easy under the contract system without the Postmaster-General taking the offensive attitude of undertaking to dictate the political faith of any carrier—it will be just as easy for these men to disseminate political doctrine, to put into operation any political bias that they may have, as it would be for any regular carrier under a salary. Why, sir, a person doing this service under contract would have just as much political bias as a person who had been appointed. He is susceptible to the same political influences. He could be operated upon by appliances which are known to political workers, so that he would disseminate political influences just as fixedly and securely among the patrons of his route as any person who might be employed on a salary.

I see, therefore, nothing in the proposition that the contract system would save us from the creation of a political machine. On the contrary, I see that under the provisions now in force, adopted by the Postmaster-General's Department and by the Civil Service Commission, the present system of rural free-delivery carriers has, so far as human ingenuity could devise, been taken out of the realm of politics. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] the other day read the rules and regulations governing the appointment of these carriers; but in doing so he left out the very pith of the whole matter.

He made no reference to the fact that under the present rules all applicants for the position of carrier are first examined and are graded according to the result of their examinations, and their names are sent up, together with the examination papers, to the Civil Service Commission. All the papers, all the results of the examination, together with the recommendations accompanying them, are submitted to a commission, as was fully explained by Mr. GAINES of Tennessee, consisting of two Republicans, two Democrats, and a lady, an expert statistician, and that the recommendation, whatever it may be, finally comes from that commission, which is as far removed from politics as it is possible to have it.

So we see that the gentlemen arguing these questions have put up their men of straw and knocked them down and have not given us the real facts in the case—have not shown us the real situation. I am satisfied, so far as politics is concerned, that the continuance of the present plan, safe-guarded as it is by this Commission, thus appointed and as now constituted since February 1, 1902, is much better than any contract system could possibly be, so far as the question of political interference is concerned.

Now, then, another matter. It is a singular fact that the system of rural free delivery which has been in operation practically, has so commended itself to these gentlemen that they have adopted every feature of it except the appointment of rural free-delivery carriers upon a salary. So well have all the regulations of the Postmaster-General's Department been worked out that these gentlemen have adopted all of these provisions without a word, excepting, as I said, in regard to the rural free-delivery carriers. Now, this carrier has been selected with great care, and, as a rule, he has been intelligent, polite, and accommodating, and that is one of the reasons why the service has been a success to the present time. The people where I live and throughout the adjoining districts are so well satisfied with this service that petitions are coming in almost every day for the extension of the service. It has grown in favor.

The people want more of it. If there had been inefficient service the system would have been a failure. The service requires intelligent, polite, and accommodating carriers. They should be selected with great care. They should be men in whom the people have confidence. They should be honest men. Under the present rules the people have the right to recommend the names of carriers, and from these names the ones passing a successful examination are selected. How could a better or more efficient service be secured?

There are many improvements that can be made in the service. It is yet in its infancy, but it is destined to become the most popular service the Government has ever undertaken.

In this connection there is one thing I desire to call to the attention of the committee. Under the rules, the patrons living along the route are required to secure uniform mail boxes. There are 14 different boxes, any one of which will be accepted by the Department. These boxes cost from $1 to $3 each, and are put under the protection of the law. It would be wise for the Government to make some arrangement by which these boxes could be manufactured in great numbers and then furnished at cost to the people, or at a rental such as is paid for boxes in our city post-offices, the object being to reduce the cost to the people and furnish a postal service that would be as effective to the people in the country as it is to the residents of the city. There should be no discrimination; the people on the farm and in the village should be served by postal carrier as well as in the city, and when it becomes universal it will become self-supporting. The receipts from the 8,000 routes already established warrant the foregoing statement. Let us have country service.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. FOSTER of Vermont having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. PARKINSON, one of its reading clerks, announced that the Senate had passed the following resolution; in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

Senate concurrent resolution 28.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed 3,200 additional copies of the bulletin entitled "Irrigation Investigations in California, Bulletin No. 100, United States Department of Agriculture, Office of Experiment Stations, 1901," of which 3,000 copies shall be for the use of the Department of Agriculture and 200 copies for the use of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendment to the bill (H. R. 8541) granting an increase of pension to Mahlon C. Morris, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. GALLINGER, Mr. PRITCHARD, and Mr. TALIAFERRO as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 6570) to amend the act of May 12, 1900, authorizing the Commissioner of Internal Revenue to redeem or make allowance for internal-revenue stamps, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. ALDRICH, Mr. PLATT of Connecticut, and Mr. TELLER as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

RURAL FREE-DELIVERY SERVICE.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. SMALL].

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman who has just taken his seat adverted to one remarkable feature of this debate, that although under the rules of the House any subject other than that under consideration might be discussed, yet that the members in the general debate have rigorously confined themselves to the measure under consideration. If this indicates anything it indicates the interest not only which the members of this representative body take in rural free delivery, but that it is appreciated by the people of the respective districts represented by the members of this House.

Mr. Chairman, the object of the bill under consideration is to classify and make permanent the rural free-delivery service, to leave the stage of experiment, and to adopt this service as a part of our permanent postal system. To this general object I am earnestly committed, and I do not understand that there is any division upon this proposition among the members of the House. I am opposed to that provision of the pending bill which changes the present method of appointing rural free-delivery carriers and which adopts the contract system by which it is proposed to award the position of carrier to the lowest bidder.

The growth of our postal system has, in many respects, kept pace with the marvelous progress of our country. It was once the proud boast of Benjamin Franklin, as Postmaster-General, that there were few cities of the United States of importance that were not at that time receiving mails at least twice a week, and some of them as frequently as once a day. He did not dare to predict the era when cities would receive mails from various directions many times each day, and when even the most remote rural communities would enter their protest if they did not receive a daily mail. For many years the people in the cities were compelled to send to the one central post-office for their mail, and did not complain that any hardship was thereby imposed upon them. When the free delivery of mails by carriers was introduced in the cities, and boxes for the deposit of mail matter were placed at numerous convenient points throughout the cities, it was soon realized that this innovation was to be made permanent. The convenience in the transaction of business and the affairs of life was so great that the system was gradually perfected and brought to its present marvelous efficiency. I may say with reference to the cities and towns of our country that I believe the present limitations should be removed, and that the time is now ripe when the limit of population which shall entitle a city to free delivery shall be reduced from 10,000 to 5,000 inhabitants. [Applause.]

It is one of the curious incidents of our civilization that oftentimes movements of momentous importance should have their origin under the most modest conditions and even against protest. As we view it now, it appears to be unfair that the citizen who lives in the city should have his mail delivered at his place of business or residence many times during the day, while the farmer should be compelled to travel 1 to 5 miles to obtain his mail from the nearest post-office, although the mail carrier might have traveled immediately by his home. It is to the credit of this representative body that the remedy for this inequality of mail service had its inception here. Congress made appropriations of $10,000 for each of the fiscal years 1894, 1895, and 1896 for an experimental service, but the project was regarded as so impracticable by the officials of the Post-Office Department at that time that none of these appropriations were expended for the purposes intended. The growth of the experiment in rural free delivery dates from 1897, when an appropriation of $40,000 was made available, and 44 routes were established during that year. In 1898 the appropriation was increased to $50,000, in 1899 to $150,000, in 1900 to $450,000, in 1901 to $1,750,000, and for the present fiscal year $3,500,000. The number of routes in operation now number about 7,000, and will reach more than 8,000 before the end of the current fiscal year.

It may, therefore, be said that this service is no longer an experiment and has earned on its merits a permanent place in our postal system. In so far as the present bill designs to make the service permanent it will have the approval of the House and of the country. The service, however, has been built up along certain well-defined lines and we should be slow in making any radical changes. Until a recent date carriers in this service have been appointed solely upon the recommendation of Representatives or Senators, who presumably had due regard for the wishes of the patrons along the route. While criticisms of this plan of appointment might be made, yet it resulted in the selection of competent and satisfactory men, because while at the end of the fiscal year of 1901 there were 4,301 routes in operation, yet during that year only 33 carriers proved incompetent and were dismissed from the service. Under this plan the experiment has grown and established itself in the confidence of the people.

By Executive order which became effective on February 1 last these carriers were placed in the civil service and have since that date been appointed only after an examination and ascertainment of fitness under rules formulated by the Civil Service Commission. This bill contemplates an entire change in the performance of the service. It proposes that these routes shall be let to the lowest bidder after advertisement and under certain restrictions proposed in the bill. This is a misfit and entirely inapplicable to this class of service. As an ordinary proposition I believe in awarding the performance of service to the Government after competitive bidding, but it will be freely admitted that there are many positions to which the principle is not applicable. In order to make proper application of this contract system there must be some well-defined criterion or standard or test of the performance of duty which may be made the subject of contract and into which the personal fitness of the contractor does not enter as an essential element.

The Government may wish to purchase certain material to enter into the construction of a building or a ship, the standard of which is well defined, and it should be purchased from the person who will sell at the lowest price. It may wish to construct a building or to build a ship by certain plans and specifications and it may well contract with him who will build it for the least money. The Post-Office Department may wish one or more pouches of mail carried on a star route and delivered at the offices between certain termini, and in these cases it has been the custom to let the contract for this service to the lowest bidder. In all these instances the principal consideration was the material to be furnished or the specific work to be performed, for all of which there was a well-defined standard of quality or work, and the character of the person was not considered material. This principle does not apply to the carriers in the rural free-delivery service.

It is an essential condition that the carrier shall be acceptable to the patrons along his route. They must be upon terms of acquaintance. He must be one in whom they have confidence. He must be possessed of tact, courtesy, and diligence, and he must feel that the performance of duty will bring with it the retention of his position. He distributes the mail in the boxes, and he takes up the mail from the boxes to be forwarded. The carrier sells stamps and other postal material, and he registers letters. He receives the money of the residents along his route and purchases money orders at the terminal office. All these are essentials if the postal business along the route is to grow and expand and if the system is to popularize itself among the people. These conditions can not be obtained as a result of competitive bidding. On the other hand, the carrier who is appointed because his bid was lowest will have as his principal object the performance of the least work consistent with retaining his position.

The carrier is in most respects a traveling postmaster. No proposition has been made to let the fourth-class postmasterships to the lowest bidder. No suggestion is made that the position of railway mail clerks should be let to the lowest bidder. The carrier in the city has a position requiring less responsibility and certainly less discrimination and tactfulness, and yet no suggestion has ever been made that the city carriers should be appointed under the contract system.

The farmers are entitled to the best mail service which the Government can furnish consistent with all the conditions. This system must continue to expand until our entire country shall become a network of free-delivery routes, in which the mail shall be carried to the homes of the humblest citizen. Congress should not be extravagant in furnishing this service, but it should be just and should not discriminate. It is not even a question of the service being self-supporting, but the object to constantly keep in mind is to give the most efficient and satisfactory mail delivery. The growth of this service will be an incentive to the building of good roads. It will place the farmer nearer to the commercial centers and put him in touch with the markets of his products. It will carry the daily newspaper and the periodical and magazine into his home. It will prove an educational factor. The home life will be brightened and made more attractive.

The carrier is the most important factor in the rural free-delivery service, and he ought to be selected not alone upon the score of economy, but primarily by reason of his fitness, his capacity, and his character.

During the delivery of the foregoing remarks, the time having expired, Mr. SWANSON yielded five minutes more.

Mr. SWANSON. I yield to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. LONG].

[Mr. LONG addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. SWANSON. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAUGEN].

[Mr. HAUGEN addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLLIDAY].

Mr. HOLLIDAY. Mr. Chairman, I recognize the limitations of a new member, and ordinarily I would take no part in discussions in this House until I had more thoroughly familiarized myself with the conduct of affairs here and had more Congressional experience. But I have an abiding faith that we are discussing a proposition now upon which knowledge gained by mixing and mingling with the people is equally as valuable as knowledge gained by Congressional experience. The subject under discussion is of grave moment to a great many people, and it is well worth the very prolonged discussion given it on the floor of this House.

We have now, Mr. Chairman, a most excellent system of rural mail delivery. It is growing very rapidly; it is working extremely well. The people who use it, the people who know most about it, the people who are most interested in it, are satisfied with it as it is; and so far as I can learn, either from the public journals or private letters, there is no demand for the legislation proposed here. When we undertake to change an existing plan which works well and which is entirely satisfactory to the people most interested, then some good reason ought to be given for the proposed change. What are the reasons, Mr. Chaiaman, that are given here why we should change the policy already established by the Department? One of them is that this might be made into a political machine. Well, Mr. Chairman, I confess that up to the time this discussion began I had never had the slightest idea that political advantage could be gained by the appointment of rural letter carriers. I supposed if there ever was a time when such an advantage could be obtained it had been completely changed by the order of the Department placing it under civil-service regulations.

I have received many letters from men of my district since the 1st of February, asking for recommendations for carriers, and in every single instance I have told them that the Congressman had nothing to do with the appointment of carriers, but it was under the control of competitive civil-service examinations. I was surprised to know a different notion existed here on the floor of the House, and I want to say that if the appointment of letter carriers has not been taken out of the hands of Congressmen, if it has not been removed as far as possible from Congressional control, then I hope it will be, and I hope these carriers will be appointed purely upon their merit for the purpose of serving the best interests of the postal business. We are told that this will be cheaper than the old plan. Yes, I suppose it will. It seems that we must commence to economize somewhere, and so we commence with the farmer. Within a short time we will be asked to appropriate large amounts of money for rivers and harbors. I am told that millions must in the near future be appropriated for the construction of an isthmian canal. We expend millions upon millions for the construction of public buildings in the large cities, with no talk about economy then, but it appears that where the farmer is interested, where the dweller in the rural districts is interested, we must proceed to have notions of economy; he is good natured and he will stand it.

Mr. Chairman, my opposition to this bill grows largely out of the fact that I believe it is an unjust, unfair, and perfectly indefensible discrimination against the dwellers in the rural districts. When we come to the cities we find that we have built fine post-offices and furnished them with every modern improvement, and given them a uniformed, disciplined, and a well-paid corps of letter-carriers. The farmers, who bear their share of the burden of the Government, help pay them; but when they do insist—and they have the right to insist—to their Representatives on this floor that they be given something like equal facilities for the collection for their mails, we hear objections to it. I have no patience with the phantom that has been conjured up here that these letter carriers will combine and make a raid on the Treasury. Mr. Chairman, these combinations do not originate in the rural districts. Combinations making raids on the Treasury are not peculiar to farmers; they do not come from that direction.

I remember the other day that the gentleman from New Jersey, I believe it was, drew a lurid pen picture of a uniformed rural letter carrier, with a red-painted wagon and docked and bob-tailed horse driving at frantic speed throughout the country, and with his splendid equipage and winsome smile, leading the honest farmer into making a raid on the Treasury! Mr. Chairman, I wondered when I heard that picture what kind of farmers the gentleman had his mind on. Out in Indiana that sort of a circus would do more to repel than to attract farmers to any proposition.

Now, Mr. Chairman, as to the proposition that this may be used as a political machine, let me say to my friends on the other side that the man who has to depend for his future political career upon building a machine out of the rural letter carrier will find some way to do it under any law. Gentlemen need not flatter themselves with the notion that if a man makes up his mind to use this branch of the service for the purpose of promoting his political interests, this bill will not prevent him from doing it. But I want to say that the man who would depend for his future political prospects on building up a machine out of this very useful arm of the Government would probably not stay very long in Congress, and probably ought not to stay very long.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I said during the course of my remarks that I regarded this as a discrimination against the farmer. I noticed during this discussion the question has several times been asked, Why do you not place the city carriers under the contract system?

That question has never been answered. In my judgment it never can be answered. If we are going into the contract system, why make it apply to the rural districts alone? Why not apply it to the urban districts as well? There is no satisfactory reason why the rural carrier should be placed under a contract system that will not apply equally as well and equally as strong as to the carriers of the cities. The classification can be applied just as well in the country as in the city. Arrangements can be made for paying the men for the work actually done. There is absolutely no excuse for making the discriminations that are made here. Right in the body of the bill I find a great many officers designated at fixed salaries. Why not ask them to compete under a contract system?

But gentlemen claim that these men require to have special qualifications. I think every gentleman in this Chamber will bear me out when I say that for every place there is to fill 20 men can be found equally efficient, equally well qualified; and if you are going to attach the contract system to this service, why not give every man an opportunity to bid for those jobs who is properly qualified? So I say, Mr. Chairman, from every standpoint the bill is perfectly indefensible. There is no demand for it. From every part of this country, from the farmers in every State in this Union, the men who are the great conservative force and influence in this country, comes a protest against the passage of this bill, and I hope this House will heed that protest. [Loud applause.]

Mr. SWANSON. I yield to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSON].

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. Chairman, more than half a century ago Germany, France, England, and other European countries became convinced of the wisdom and the justice of carrying the mails daily to the homes of the people in the rural communities. This service has been extended until its benefits have reached well-nigh every community. To practically every home throughout England and Wales the rural carrier makes his visit every day in the week except Sunday.

The Government of the United States was slow to inaugurate this new, splendid, and beneficent service, although the official reports of other governments absolutely demonstrated its advantages over the old star-route service. The first rural free-delivery route in the United States was established October 1, 1896. By January 1, 1897, the number of routes had increased to 44. The Post-Office Department has proceeded cautiously and conservatively. To-day there are more than 7,000 routes in operation, serving 5,000,000 of our people in the country with a daily mail.

During this long and interesting debate no member of this House has questioned the wisdom of the service or denied its benefits. The measure before us has been so thoroughly discussed that I can not hope to add anything to the intelligence of the House; but as a friend of rural free delivery I wish to express my opposition to the contract feature of the bill. The inevitable result of its enactment into law, whether it is so intended or not, will be to injure if not to destroy the service. The great bureau that has been sarcastically referred to in this debate is giving to the farmer the best mail facilities that he has ever had. The employees of that bureau are industrious, methodical, and courteous, and the only complaint I have against it is that the bureau is not large enough. Forty petitions from the district that I have the honor to represent upon this floor are awaiting investigation. Some of those petitions have been on file for twelve or eighteen months. The force of inspectors is not large enough to do the work as rapidly as the people demand it.

Wherever the service has been inaugurated 95 per cent of the people are delighted with it. Wherever it has not been inaugurated all the people are clamoring for it, as is evidenced by the great number of petitions on file in the Post-Office Department. Mr. Chairman, if I were a resident of the country I should petition for rural free delivery, and I would not rest and I would not let my Representative in Congress rest until I got it. Why should it not be so? We are spending $17,000,000 a year to deliver the mails from two to twelve times a day in the cities, although the people live within a stone's throw of the post-office. Those of us who represent agricultural districts are not complaining about the free city delivery, nor protesting against the expense of it; but we do insist that it is the duty of this Government, acting under the direction of this Congress, to provide that the mail shall be carried to the people in the country at least one time every day.

In my opinion, Mr. Chairman, it is more important that the daily mail should reach the lonely farmhouse than that it should reach the crowded cities. When the night comes on, those who live in cities may assemble at religious, social, or such other gatherings as their tastes may lead to; but in the country, when the shades of night close in, the farmer and his wife and his sons and daughters gather around the family hearthstone, and I for one am in favor of all proper efforts being made to carry into that home the weekly and the daily newspapers, magazines, and other sources of information, in order that they may spend their evenings in discussing the events and the problems of the day. Do you believe that a daily newspaper is more interesting in the countinghouse than it is in the farmhouse? Are you willing to provide mail facilities that will carry it to the one and not to the other? Are you willing to injure or to destroy, in its very infancy, this service which is designed to be, and which will prove to be, an educator of inestimable value?

But it has been suggested that this new service will be so extensive and so expensive as to create a large deficiency in the postal revenues. When did it ever happen in this or any other country that increased postal facilities did not increase postal revenues? The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. LIVINGSTON] has referred to the time when postage on a letter was 25 cents, and I have no doubt that the postal deficiency in percentage then was as large as it is now. Within the memory of all of us letter postage was reduced from 3 cents to 2 cents for each half ounce, and subsequently letters of 1 ounce were brought to the same rate. With all the reductions in the rate of postage on letters and papers the deficiency grows less year by year. The Postmaster-General believes that the rural free delivery will so improve the service as to cause an enormous increase in the postal receipts, and that the service will be practically self-sustaining. He tells us in his official report that wherever the service has been established there has been a gratifying increase in the number of papers, magazines, and letters received by the people.

I have before me a statement published by the Nashville American, showing the actual results in Davidson County, Tenn. The rural routes in that county were put in operation on January 1, 1900. The number of pieces of mail handled by the carriers during the month of June, 1900, was 34,407. During the month of January, 1901, they handled 59,628 pieces; in June, 1901, they handled 78,918 pieces, and in January, 1902, the number of pieces handled by the carriers was 97,437. This shows a constant and gratifying increase. I commend these figures to doubting Thomases here or elsewhere. They demonstrate what the friends of this service assert, namely, that if you give the farmers good mail facilities they will avail themselves of them. The farmers in Davidson County, Tenn., have utilized the advantages given them and the farmers in any other county in any other section of the United States will do the same.

It has been urged in this debate that rural carriers ought not to receive salaries because their routes are not uniform. That is probably true. Some routes are longer than others and some are over better roads than others. The same is true of your carriers in the cities. The carriers in the business part of the city have shorter routes than do those in the residence and suburban part. While the carrier in the residence portion has farther to walk, the carrier in the business portion has a heavier load to carry. Taking all the rural routes in the United States, I have no doubt the actual work performed by each carrier will average up just about as well as the average work of the city carriers.

The question has been asked, and asked repeatedly in this debate, though it has not been answered, if it is proper to put the rural letter carrier under the contract system, why not the city carriers, the railway-postal clerks, and all the employees in all the departments of the Government. If the letting out of offices to the lowest bidder is a wise thing to do in one department of the Government it is equally wise in all other departments. The rural letter carrier comes in closer touch with the people he serves than does the city carrier. The rural carrier is a traveling post-office; he registers letters, sells postal cards and stamps, sells money orders, delivers and takes up the people's mail. When he makes his daily rounds, the fathers, husbands, and brothers are out on their farms, and the mothers, wives, and sisters of the country homes must transact the postal business. In the district which I have the honor to represent the rural carriers are visiting 4,000 families a day. I believe that, without exception, they are gentlemen, and as long as I represent those people I shall insist that we preserve a system that will insure this service being performed by gentlemen.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. JOHNSON. I should like a few minutes more.

Mr. SWANSON. I yield ten minutes more to the gentleman.

Mr. JOHNSON. Now, Mr. Chairman, the rural letter carrier is an appointee of the Government, and is responsible to the Government for his behavior. For rudeness, for impoliteness, or for any lack of accommodation the patrons could prefer charges and have him removed from the position. But if he should be a contractor, so long as he carries out the letter of his contract and delivers the mail, the Government has no power to discipline him for his conduct.

Now, Mr. Chairman, as I said a moment ago, the question has been asked and not answered, Why should not all the offices in this Government be placed upon a contract basis, if it is economy alone that is to be sought? Is there a gentleman in this Congress who could not get scores of competent men to keep the post-office in his home town for one-half the amount paid by the Government? There are scores of young men and young women in every city who can stand the civil service examination and who will perform the clerical work in the post-office of their home city for one-half of what the Government is now paying the clerks. And it is true all along the line. Why, then, do you propose to come here and begin your contract system with this great and important class who contribute more to the Government than any other class of men, and who get less than any other class in any shape of governmental bounty? I undertake to say that there are enough competent men and women in any Congressional district in the United States to fill every office in any one of the departments here, and to fill them well. I do not know that if these places were let to the lowest bidder, and I were a bidder, I would be the lowest responsible bidder. But I will say that I would undertake to have performed the work in any of the departments for two-thirds of what we now pay for it, and every member of this House would be glad to get such a contract.

I have said before that 95 per cent of the people who have rural free delivery are delighted with it. I doubt if even 5 per cent of the people are dissatisfied. The Post-Office Department has received thousands of petitions against putting in rural free delivety, and some of those petitions have been carefully investigated. Upon investigation it was found that the people who signed the petitions were dissatisfied because the route as laid out did not go by their houses (and that is really not a protest against rural free delivery, but a complaint because the petitioner did not get it), and others signed out of friendship for some fourth-class postmaster whose office was abolished. Personally, I am very much disposed to allow the country post-offices to remain wherever the people manifest such wish, in order that those who prefer the the rural free-delivery service may patronize it, and those who prefer the post-office can patronize it, and in a short time the one service would demonstrate its superiority over the other. But it is the policy of the Department to discontinue star routes and post-offices and to use the money paid to the star-route contractors and fourth-class postmasters in perfecting the rural free-delivery service. So far as the complaint of those who have been left off the routes goes, it may be said that the inspectors who laid out these routes are not perfect, and they will be changed from time to time wherever experience shows that a change will improve the service.

There is, however, one complaint, not against rural free delivery itself, but against one of the regulations of the Post-Office Department, that has my sympathy. I shall not detain the House much longer this evening, but when the proper time comes I want to offer an amendment which will improve the service, and I make the suggestion now in order that gentlemen may consider it. I would like to have this bill amended so as to provide that the Post-Office Department shall make, or have made, a uniform metal lock box in great numbers, and furnish that box at actual cost to the people wherever the service is inaugurated, instead of requiring the patrons to purchase from a list of approved patent boxes. I think the Government can secure a safe box for 25 or 50 cents that will answer all the purposes as well as the high-priced boxes the people are now required to buy. If all the people were well provided with this world's goods and received large quantities of mail it would be no great burden to buy a box costing anywhere from $1 to $4; but there are thousands of honest, hard-working people who have little of this world's goods, and who do not get much mail, and to force this class of people to buy expensive patent boxes is a hardship and an injustice, and I sympathize thoroughly with their protest against the regulation.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Does the law not permit him to make his own box?

Mr. JOHNSON. No; it does not. The regulation is that he must have a metal box, and that box must be selected from a list that has been submitted to and approved by the Post-Office Department. There are 14 boxes approved by the Department. The cheapest one costs $1, and the highest one is about $3.50. The patrons of this service must buy one of these boxes.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Does the gentleman mean to say that the Government compels a farmer to take a box that the Government sells him rather than make one of his own?

Mr. JOHNSON. No, sir; the gentleman does not understand me. The Government does not sell any boxes. The Government requires every patron of the rural free-delivery service to select a box from 14 different kinds of boxes that have been submitted to the Department and approved by the Department, and these boxes cost from $1 to $3.50; but the people buy boxes from the manufacturers, not from the Government. I think that the Department ought to make or have made a uniform box, costing from 25 to 50 cents, and furnish it at cost to every patron of the service throughout the United States.

Mr. CANDLER. And furnish it free?

Mr. JOHNSON. No; furnish the boxes at cost.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. How long has that rule obtained?

Mr. JOHNSON. It was put in operation in the spring of 1901.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I know there are many boxes out in my own country all along the pike, and some are made of wood, some of tin, and one thing and another; the farmer makes it to suit himself.

Mr. JOHNSON. The gentleman is right. When the system was first inaugurated a man had a right to put up his own box, and to make it out of a cigar box or anything else he chose. When these routes were first put in, that is what the people did. But last year the Department adopted a regulation that requires every man who gets his mail by this service to buy a metal box, and it must be one of 14 makes approved by the Department. Of course, two or more may own the same box, and one may use box of another owner by his consent.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Well, if the Government can do that it can make me, when I go out to get my mail at the gate, wear kid gloves, or have my hands washed with a certain kind of soap.

Mr. JOHNSON. No; it can not do that. I am not defending what the Department has done; I am complaining about it. The carrier can deliver a letter to you in your own hands, but the Department can say to him that if you are not standing by the roadside to receive the letter into your own hands, he must not put it into any kind of box except a box that has had the approval of the Department.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Is it not my letter the minute it goes into the box?

Mr. JOHNSON. Yes.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Have not I the right to use any kind of receptacle I please for my mail?

Mr. JOHNSON. The carrier can deliver a letter to you and you can put it into what you please, but he can not do it. What I am trying to tell you is that if you are not at the roadside when the carrier comes along, and you have not the kind of box the Department requires you to have, the carrier can not leave your letter.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Does not the box represent me? Is not my box operating for me?

Mr. JOHNSON. Well, that is the regulation of the Department I am complaining against, and I hope the gentleman from Tennessee will vote for my amendment.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I will do that.

Mr. BROMWELL. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question in regard to the boxes, because it is a matter which is coming before the Post-Office Committee?

Mr. JOHNSON. I will.

Mr. BROMWELL. How many of these boxes, on an average, will it require on a route?

Mr. JOHNSON. I can not answer that question, There are 27 routes in operation in the district which I represent, and I would suppose that there would be 50 or 75 boxes on an average to a route.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from South Carolina has expired.

Mr. BROMWELL. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time be extended.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from South Carolina five minutes more.

Mr. BROMWELL. Will the gentleman tell me about how many routes we are going to have when we get this service extended over the entire country?

Mr. JOHNSON. I do not know, but I have heard it estimated that there will be 45,000 or 50,000.

Mr. BROMWELL. Fifty thousand, with an average of 50 boxes to the route?

Mr. JOHNSON. Yes; I think that would be a low average.

Mr. BROMWELL. How much will that make the entire cost of furnishing boxes?

Mr. JOHNSON. The gentleman can figure that out as well as I can. I am not asking that the Government shall furnish the boxes free, but I am asking that the law shall provide that the Government shall make or cause to be made a uniform box, and supply that box to the people all over this country at its actual cost, so that all these people who are patronizing the rural free-delivery service instead of being compelled to buy patent boxes and pay from $1 to $3.50 for them can get a box that will be equally as useful to them for 25 cents or 50 cents.

Mr. BROMWELL. Does the gentleman understand that that would amount to in the neighborhood of $2,000,000, to be taken out of the rural free-delivery fund?

Mr. JOHNSON. No, sir; I am not asking that any part of the rural free-delivery fund shall be used in this way. My proposition is that the patrons of the rural free-delivery service shall pay for the boxes themselves. I want the Government to buy or manufacture the boxes and let the people buy the boxes from the Government at cost instead of buying them from manufacturers all over the country who are selling patent boxes for $3 which ought to be made for 60 cents. I am trying to protect the people against that sort of thing.

Mr. BROMWELL. Is it not a fact that about all the various kinds of boxes that would be available are now covered by patents of which the Government could not make use unless it is content to use inferior boxes which, perhaps, would not answer the purpose of rural free delivery?

Mr. JOHNSON. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BROMWELL] has not quite as much confidence in the ingenuity of the American people as I have. There are thousands of men in the United States who in less than six hours could design a box which would not infringe upon the patent of a single box now in existence.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. The Government can use a box upon which there is no patent at all.

A MEMBER. Just like the city boxes.

Mr. BROMWELL. The Government is paying royalty on the city boxes.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. Chairman, let us go forward in extending this service until its benefits and blessings shall extend to every community and to every home. Let us destroy the isolation and loneliness of country life and stop the constant and deplorable drift from country to town. We can never do too much for the rural sections of this great country, whose people feed and clothe the world. This splendid part of our citizenship pays most of the taxes and receives but scant return. Let us as far as we can make lighter their burdens and smoother their paths. Begin not your cheeseparing policy in a service that costs only about 1 per cent of the amount expended by this Government, especially since that 1 per cent so expended will bless and enlighten the country homes from which must come in the future the men who will control the commercial and political affairs of this Republic.

Mr. SWANSON. I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CROMER].

Mr. CROMER. Mr. Chairman, some criticism has been made of the plan of classification of rural letter carriers recently adopted by the Post-Office Department and the Civil Service Commission, under the direction of the President of the United States. I was among those who did not believe that this step was wise or desirable; but since its operation became effective I have had occasion to look into the whole plan, and I do not hesitate to fully indorse it. In my opinion, it provides the most simple and practicable, the most sensible application of the principle of civil service yet attempted by this Government.

When the announcement was first made that the order classifying the rural free-delivery service included carriers as well as clerks and special agents, most of us thought that the complicated, not to say cumbersome, system of civil-service examinations prescribed for older branches of the postal service was to be attempted in the appointment of rural carriers. The introduction of the civil-service rules in vogue in the Post-Office Department and in the post-offices of our large cities would, in my judgment, prove as disastrous to the future of the rural free delivery as the proposed contract system carried in this bill.

There is no doubt that this view was entertained by the Post-Office officials. The plan finally adopted by the Post-Office Department and the Civil Service Commission for the classification of rural carriers shows that those who were charged with its preparation fully grasped the situation, understood the conditions to be met in rural districts, and realized that the success of the scheme depended largely upon the simplicity of its form of examinations and the ease of its execution.

No one who has looked into the system, examined the blanks provided for the examination of applicants for the position of rural carrier, and observed the results already produced since its inauguration can have the slightest objection to its enforcement. The examination is simple enough to be within reach of any person of ordinary intelligence. In fact anyone who can not pass it is not fit to be a rural carrier. The time required to take a regular civil-service examination in the city and departmental service is from seven to eight hours; the examination prescribed for rural carriers requires from thirty to forty minutes.

The examination consists briefly in the filling out of a blank form of application on which are printed a number of simple questions. The answers to these questions, written in the applicant's writing serve a double purpose; first, they show the ability of the applicant to read and write; secondly, they convey to the special agent who conducts the examination valuable and necessary information bearing upon the applicant's fitness and qualifications.

They show briefly whether or not he is a citizen of the United States; his age, place of birth, length of residence in the State; whether or not he resides directly on or within the territory of the proposed route; whether or not he has or is prepared to furnish a suitable horse and cart or wagon for use in the service; whether or not he could furnish a suitable substitute to act during his absence in cases of emergency. They also disclose whether or not he has had any experience in post-office work or in any other position similar to that of rural carrier, and whether or not he is an honorably discharged soldier or sailor of the civil or the Spanish war. The applicant is also required to fill out a blank registry receipt and a receipt for money for the purchase of a money order—blanks which he would use in the service. He is also required to read 25 addressed envelopes or cards.

After an applicant has filled out the application blanks and sworn to his statements, the special agent who investigated the establishment of the route, acting in the capacity of civil-service examiner, briefly states on the blank provided for that purpose on the back of the application blank whether or not the applicant appears to be in good health and capable of performing service. He also makes a brief statement as to the applicant's reputation in the community; states how many minutes he required to fill out the examination blank, the time consumed and errors made in reading the test cards. The agent closes his findings as follows:

> Judging from this applicant's appearance, his general intelligence, the manner and promptness with which he filled out the application blank, and considering his answers to the questions therein, I am of the opinion that he should stand —— on the list of eligibles—

First, second, or third, etc., as the case might be.

So you see the examination is simmered down to a practical test of the applicant's ability to read and write and to properly fill out the blanks used in the service. The selection, after all, is left largely to the judgment of the special agent, who of course is guided by certain rules. For instance, in a case where the applicants are equal in other respects the one having the necessary equipment would be given preference over the one who has no equipment; the applicant who has resided longest on the route would be preferred to one who was new in the community; a soldier capable of performing service would be given preference over a civilian; a young and active man would be selected in preference to an old man who is not a soldier.

To show that it is not the purpose of the Civil Service Commission or the Post-Office Department to give a preponderance of weight to the scholastic tests, I will quote from the instructions issued to special agents:

> Too much importance should not be attached to the card-reading test. The filling out of the blank application sufficiently tests the applicant's ability to read and write. However, the manner and speed in which an applicant reads the cards will aid the examiner somewhat in judging of the applicant's general intelligence.

Another:

> Before the applicant fills out the blank form of registry receipt and the receipt for money for the purchase of a money order, the special agent or route inspector should take pains to give general instructions pertaining to the blanks and their uses.

The unique feature of this plan, however, lies in the fact that the people petitioning for the establishment of service practically control the selection of the carrier, the new rules requiring that every petition for service shall have added to it names of applicants suggested by the signers. What better system could be devised? I am sure no more satisfactory plan from the people's standpoint could be conceived. The most efficient service will no doubt be found where the carrier belongs to the people. They will take pride in him as well as in the service. They will feel that through him, a salaried employee of the postal service, they will be in close and constant touch with the Government. In other words, the rural service is a service by the people as well as for the people.

The plan of civil service that I have just described is the first of the kind to be adopted by this Government. It is, in fact, an experiment on the lines of sensible civil-service reform. It only became effective on February 1 of this year, and although those who are in charge of its operation are greatly pleased with the results thus far obtained, there has not yet been sufficient time to fully test and develop so new a departure. Why, then, should it be upset? A contract system effective July 1 would prevent a fair trial of an honest and earnest effort on the part of the President to improve on practical lines the civil service of our Government. [Loud applause.]

Mr. SWANSON. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. ZENOR] ten or fifteen minutes, as he may wish.

Mr. ZENOR. Mr. Chairman, in the beginning of this discussion I confess I had scarcely made up my mind as to the merits of the proposition which has given rise to so much discussion. The provision which has caused most of this discussion is that portion of the bill in regard to the contract system.

I have no doubt that our recollection of the bad odor that attached to the star-route contract system has engendered much prejudice in the mind of members of this House as well as of people throughout the country against any system of contracting for the mail service of the Government. But, sir, since the old régime has passed away some improvements have been made in regard to letting the star-route contracts, and much of the reproach formerly connected with that matter has been dissipated. But I think there is no gentleman here who would indorse a return to that system.

Take, for instance, the mail route in my district, leading from the town in which I live to the city of New Albany, in an adjacent county. I have no recollection that upon that route the carrying of the mail was ever awarded to a local resident or citizen of the county, but always to a nonresident and farmed out to a subcontractor. There were frequent instances in which persons residing within the district and along the line of the route were bidders for the contract; but those contracts were invariably given to people who resided in Pennsylvania, Kentucky, and other States—individuals who would purchase a large number of these contracts and then sublet them to some poor fellows who felt the necessity of employment at some little income. The result was that the public was given inferior service. The contracts were frequently and in most instances given to parties who were unable to perform the service in an efficient and acceptable manner. This is one of the reasons, Mr. Chairman, why it seems to me there may exist, with some degree of justice, a prejudice against the proposition contained in this bill.

I am opposed to the contract system for fear, in the first place, that we may have a repetition to some extent of the experience of the past in this regard. The system of rural free delivery which has grown up throughout the length and breadth of the country seems to have given general and almost universal satisfaction to the people wherever it has been inaugurated. I confess that the district which I have the honor to represent on this floor has not received such liberal treatment as some other localities. It has not been awarded so many of these rural routes as many other districts of my State. This may, perhaps, be accounted for to some extent by the fact that the people have not appreciated the advantages of the system, and have not presented their petitions to the Post-Office Department for this service.

But, sir, numbers of petitions which have been presented have been turned down for the reason that the routes over which the service was to be extended were not in a condition to be acceptable to the route inspector. There were some other reasons why these applications were turned down. They were, in many instances, gotten up by men who held star-route contracts and who had taken routes at prices much lower than those at which they could procure the carrying of the mails.

These men are engaged in an effort to get up petitions for the establishment of rural free-delivery service, to relieve themselves from the loss of improvident contracts, and they do this without regard to the point at which the route starts and without regard to the convenience of the people upon the route who are to be served; so that the establishment of a route under such conditions would result in inconvenience and disadvantage to the patrons of the service, and for this reason these applications have been rejected by the Department.

But, taken as a whole, wherever this service has been instituted in my district, wherever the people have been given the advantage of the rural free delivery, there has been no complaint, except perhaps from a few individuals, and the complaints from such persons have been, in fact, not against the service. They are heartily in favor of the service, they are enthusiastic supporters of the service; but the main complaints that have been made are against the practice of the Government to require the patrons of these rural free-delivery routes to purchase boxes of the postmasters at the county seats under a regulation of the Post-Office Department.

Many of these patrons claim that they are not able to purchase the box under the rules and regulations of the Post-Office Department, ranging in price, as it does, from $1 to $3.50. Many of them think it is an infringement of their rights not to be permitted to construct and put up a box of their own along the line of these routes. They insist they should have granted to them the right to construct and put up their own boxes. This has been the principal source of complaint along the lines and in the sections where this service has been installed in my district. Now, it is intimated by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GAINES] that any patron along the line of these routes is entitled to construct his own box and put it up, but under the regulations of the Post-Office Department issued on March 28 of last year this right has been abolished.

I read from the report of the First Assistant Postmaster General for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1901:

On March 28 the report of the Commission (including the list of approved boxes submitted) received the formal approval of the Postmaster-General, and has since been promulgated with the following instructions:

"Before service will be established, it will be necessary for the patrons to make selection from the list of approved boxes and to agree to equip the route with them. While the Department desires, it does not require, that the boxes on each route shall be of uniform construction.

"The prices of these boxes range from $1 up to a little over $3, including locks. When a rural free-delivery route has been equipped with boxes of the above-named description, the Department will consider these boxes as falling under the protection of section 5406 of the United States Revised Statutes, which provides severe penalties for any person who shall willfully or maliciously injure, deface, or destroy any mail matter deposited in any letter box, pillar box, or other receptacle established by authority of the Postmaster-General."

Now, there are patrons living along at least one of the routes established in my district that have offered to put up boxes of their own construction along the line, and the rural free-delivery carrier under the provisions of this regulation has refused to deliver the mail, under instructions from the postmaster at the county seat, acting under instructions, it is said, coming from the Post-Office Department. They protest against this and claim that they have the right to establish that box; while upon other routes where the patrons have seen fit to or have selected and purchased the box, or one of the boxes approved by the Government, the mail carrier delivers all of the mail.

So, Mr. Chairman, whether or not the patrons shall be served by this rural free delivery depends upon the question whether the patron shall purchase one of these regulation boxes. I am not complaining that the Government in the exercise of its discretion, in the proper administration of this service, has not the right to formulate some safe and satisfactory policy on this subject, nor am I contending that the Government should not adopt some rules and regulations controlling the kind of box into which the mail is deposited, especially if the Government is to be held responsible for the mail delivered into that box.

I would much prefer, Mr. Chairman, in regard to this particular phase of the question, that the Government should adopt some reasonable, some ideal rural letter box, which would supply all the desired elements of durability, simplicity, and accessibility, one that is convenient, one that is safe and reasonable in cost, and then require all of the patrons to purchase and use this particular kind of box, if the price be fixed low enough to enable them to do so; and if this proves not to be satisfactory and the patrons feel they are unable to purchase the box at the price at which the Government or manufacturers would furnish it, then it seems to me the only satisfactory solution of this problem would be for the Government to own these boxes, that the Government take control of these boxes and charge the patrons a reasonable rent per year, so that if any change in the uniformity of the boxes, any change in the style of the boxes, any improvement in the construction of these boxes which would add to the efficiency of the service was adopted it could not affect the patrons, and they would be under the control of the Government.

It is said by gentlemen who are in favor of this particular provision of the bill, changing the selection of the rural free-delivery carriers from that now in existence to the contract system, that the latter system would be more economical, that it would be cheaper, that it would enable this Government to extend this rural free-delivery service over a wider scope of country at a less cost than at present. I have grave doubts as to whether this suggestion would ever be realized if you made the change to the contract system. I say that it is an experiment, the result of which no gentleman upon this floor can well forecast and in regard to which no one can make any safe predictions.

The system as it now exists is satisfactory. The people throughout the country are glad that it has been inaugurated, and it is growing in popular favor every day. The convenience of it is appreciated by the great rural population of our country. It enables them to get their mails more readily, more safely, and more conveniently. As has been said by gentlemen upon this floor, the rural carrier is a traveling postmaster. He comes in contact with the people throughout the rural districts. He ought to be a man of high character, and the rules and regulations of the Department placing the service and the officers connected with the rural free-delivery system under the civil service have had much to do with my opinion and will have much to do with my vote upon this proposition.

I am not an enthusiastic admirer of the civil service of our Government in many respects, because I believe that the purposes, designs, and policies of the authors of civil service have not been carried out in good faith by many Administrations. I believe that the administration of the civil service of this Government has been abused; but what service of the Government is there that has not been abused to some extent? I believe in the application of the civil-service rules to the selection of carriers on these rural free-delivery routes. I believe that it will result in the selection of better men and will increase the efficiency of the service and that it will, if possible, make the service more popular than it is to-day.

I will support any measure, any proposition, any policy, that will have a tendency to eliminate politics from the administration of the rural free-delivery service. I know that before the adoption of these new rules politics has entered to some extent into this service. As an illustration, in my own district there is no free rural carrier about whose appointment I have been consulted as a member of Congress in that district. So far as I know, not one of them is a Democrat, and an attempt has been made on the part of some of the fourth-class postmasters to inaugurate this service according to their own ideas, against the protests of the patrons who were directly interested in the location of the routes, because the postmaster at the county seat has assumed the rôle of a political boss and has become the sponsor for the system in these counties. I want this system taken out from under the control of political bosses, whether they be Democrats or Republicans.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SWANSON. I yield five minutes more to the gentleman.

Mr. ZENOR. There is another phase of this question to which I desire to call attention. I do not remember that gentlemen on the floor have alluded to it, but this system has not grown in the popular favor without reason. The post-office service comes in direct contact with the great body of our people. There is no service of the Government that has a warmer place in the affections of the people than this.

Prior to the adoption of this rural free delivery, according to the estimate of the Postmaster-General, it cost every family living along a star route about 10 cents a day to get their mail. It is estimated by the Postmaster-General that upon each route established up to this time there is an average of 125 families; and taking the estimate of 10 cents per family that has had to travel an average of from 2 to 4 miles to get the mail for that family, that makes a total daily expense to those 125 families of $12.50. The Postmaster-General says that by rural free delivery all of those 125 families can be supplied with their mail matter once a day for $2. There is a saving of $10.50. Upon whom did this burden of getting the mail to these families' homes rest prior to the adoption of this rural free-delivery system?

It was upon the farmers of this country, the men who reside in the rural districts, who had to pay and shoulder this burden to get their mails, while the Government could furnish the mail by this rural free-delivery system at $2, and that is paid by the citizens and taxpayers all over the country. So that I say there is an enormous saving and great economy in the rural free-delivery system over the system that it has supplanted to the farmers of this country, outside of the fact that they get their mails, perhaps, much more regularly—every day—whereas prior to that time they would, perhaps, get it once, or twice, or three times a week.

This service, as has been suggested, has not assumed any crystallized or systematic form yet; and it is said by gentlemen who are advocating the passage of this bill and the incorporation of this contract system in this branch of the postal service that it is the first bill that has ever been introduced which proposes to establish the system and make permanent this rural free delivery. It may be true, Mr. Chairman, that there is no law which crystallizes this system upon the statute books and makes it a permanent system; yet it is the common knowledge of every gentleman upon this floor that the rural free-delivery system has come to stay and has become a permanent feature and fixture of the postal service and of the Post-Office Department of our Government, and perhaps one of the most popular features of the whole administration of this Department. Whether it is a permanent system or not, let us not endanger the system; let us not endanger the service, or in any doubtful way hamper, impede, or retard its development, or imperil its future possibilities, by resorting to the questionable experiment of selecting the carriers by the competitive contract system.

Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to any experiment which is of doubtful expediency; I am opposed to any change that is of doubtful propriety; and I say that in reference to this change or proposed change it is not free from doubt. Let this system go on; let it go on increasing in its efficiency, and in the course of time if it becomes necessary to reform this system by changing the method of selecting our carriers and putting them under contract, let the Postmaster-General, in whom I have implicit confidence, and who stands at the head of this great Department, suggest the propriety of a change from that which now obtains to a contract system.

When he does so, Mr. Chairman, I shall acquiesce, and all the more readily, because I would then know it to be the result of experience and not an untried experiment, based upon information brought home to the knowledge of the Postmaster-General in a way that would enable him to speak wisely and accurately upon a subject of such vital interest to the whole people of this country. When the Postmaster-General, acting upon reliable data, and the results of experience in the exercise of a sound discretion, as the responsible head of this great Department of the Government, shall officially recommend to the Congress that there exists a public necessity for this reform, for this change, in the interest and for the benefit of a better administration of this important branch of the postal service, then we can act, and act more wisely. [Loud applause.]

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. Chairman, how is the time between the two sides?

Mr. LOUD. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California has occupied seven hours and forty-seven minutes and the gentleman from Virginia nine hours and fifteen minutes. About an hour and a half is due the gentleman from California.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Tennessee in his remarks upon this measure on the 5th of March, referring to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] and myself, used this language:

> I do think that both of the gentlemen have been misled, in that they have not had before them the recent rules and regulations which were promulgated February 1, 1902, and under which the rural system is now being executed.

That language was used by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GAINES]. In order that we may appear in the RECORD as having made no mistake, I desire, at this time, to have printed in the RECORD, as a part of my remarks, the rules and regulations promulgated by the Civil Service Commission and the Postmaster-General, from which I had quoted, the opening clause of which reads this way:

> The following regulations governing the manner of appointment to the position of carrier in the rural free-delivery service are hereby approved and promulgated, to become effective from and after February 1, 1902.

I wish these rules, signed by the Postmaster-General and the president of the Civil Service Commission, to be printed in the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

They are as follows:

REGULATIONS GOVERNING THE MANNER OF APPOINTMENT TO THE POSITION OF CARRIER IN THE RURAL FREE-DELIVERY SERVICE.

The following regulations governing the manner of appointment to the position of carrier in the rural free-delivery service are hereby approved and promulgated, to become effective from and after February 1, 1902:

1. In pursuance of the provisions of section 3 of the civil-service act, the Civil Service Commission shall appoint, after consultation with the Postmaster-General, a board of examiners of not less than three members, who shall be officers or employees of the Post-Office Department, located in Washington, D. C., such board to be known as the central board of examiners for the rural carrier service. All special agents and route inspectors in the rural free-delivery service shall be appointed by the Commission as auxiliary members of such central board of examiners.

2. Whenever a postmaster shall receive notice from a special agent that he will visit his post-office for the purpose of investigating the feasibility of the establishment of a rural free-delivery route from his office, for which the prescribed petitions have been filed, and for the purpose of conducting the examination of persons nominated by the petitioners and any others who desire to compete for the position of carrier on the proposed route, the postmaster shall at once post in a conspicuous place in the public part of his office a copy of such notice and an announcement that he will receive the names of any persons who desire to enter the examination, and in such other ways as may be practicable shall give publicity to such notice and announcement. The postmaster shall notify all applicants of the date of the examination.

3. The special agent, after investigating the feasibility of establishing the route petitioned for, shall, in his capacity as a representative of the Commission, conduct the examination of all applicants for the position of carrier.

4. Whenever a postmaster shall receive notice from the Department of the existence of a vacancy in the position of carrier on an established rural free-delivery route from his office, if there are no eligibles as a result of a former examination for this position, then the postmaster shall at once post the notice of such vacancy and an announcement of an examination for securing eligibles for the same, in a conspicuous place in the public part of his office, and in such other ways as may be practicable give publicity to such notice and announcement; and he shall receive the names of any persons desiring to enter the examination.

The route inspector who may be directed by the Department to proceed to the post-office for the purpose of conducting the examination shall in advance notify the postmaster of the date of his arrival at the office, and the postmaster shall notify all applicants to appear for the prescribed examination, and the same shall be conducted by the route inspector in his capacity as a representative of the Commission.

5. The examiners will carefully observe the provisions of section 5 of the civil-service act, and under no circumstances shall they give out an application form in advance of an examination, nor shall they disclose any information as to the contents of said form, nor permit any person to peruse or copy the same. A violation of this regulation will be considered sufficient cause for the dismissal of the offending examiner.

6. Under the direction of the Commission the central board of examiners shall have custody of the application forms, which will be numbered consecutively and furnished by the central board as may be required to the special agent or route inspector, who will be charged with the exact number he receives and will be required to account for each form. Forms that are spoiled or mutilated shall be turned in to the central board of examiners.

7. The special agent or route inspector shall personally conduct the examinations and must be constantly present.

8. Applicants shall not be permitted under any circumstances to assist each other in the examination, and an attempt to do so will cause the immediate rejection of both the offending competitors. Political or religious affiliations of applicants shall not be given any consideration whatever, nor shall political indorsements be received or entertained. The merit and the qualifications of the applicant and the good of the service alone shall be considered.

9. The examination as conducted by the special agent or the route inspector shall require only such scholastic ability as may be necessary to enable the applicant to read and write, and shall consist of answering a series of personal questions in the applicant's own handwriting, relating, among other things, to his physical condition, his previous experience, training, and occupation, the length of his residence in the community, and his ability to furnish the necessary equipment and to provide a suitable substitute in cases of emergency, the reading of 25 addressed envelopes or cards, and such other practical tests as will demonstrate the competitor's ability to actually perform the work required.

The examination shall further consist of a careful inquiry and report by the special agent or the route inspector as to each competitor's acquaintance with the patrons of the route and the extent to which he has their confidence, his general characteristics, suitability, and fitness for the position, and his character and reputation; and in any case where the examiner has doubt as to the competitor's character or reputation he shall not only make inquiry of the persons given as references in the application, but also consult two or more prominent citizens not mentioned by the applicant.

10. After completing the examination the special agent or the route inspector shall at once forward all the papers to the central board of examiners, including a report of the results of his inquiries and observations concerning the competitors and his recommendations as to those best qualified. Subject to the direction of the Commission, the central board shall have permanent custody of such papers.

11. Upon receiving the papers of an examination the central board of examiners shall proceed to rate the same, the rating to be determined by a careful consideration of the qualifications of the competitors as shown by all the papers submitted by the special agent or the route inspector, in accordance with sections 9 and 10 of these regulations. The central board of examiners shall prepare a list containing the names of all those who become eligible as a result of the examination, arranged in the order of their rating, with the highest first.

Provided, That the names of eligibles who are entitled to preference under the provisions of section 1754 of the Revised Statutes shall be placed at the head of the list in the order of their ratings, if such persons are found to fully possess the business capacity and physical ability necessary to perform the service. After the competitors in any examination have been rated and the list of eligibles has been prepared, the central board of examiners shall furnish a copy of the eligible list to the Post-Office Department and to the Civil Service Commission.

12. For filling a vacancy in the position of carrier the person will be selected for appointment whose name is at the head of the list of eligibles established as the result of examination held for the route on which the vacancy exists: Provided, That when selection is to be made for the initial appointment of a carrier on a newly established route one of the persons nominated by the petitioners will be selected if in other respects his qualifications are equal to those of the other eligibles; and when a selection is to be made for filling a vacancy in an established route the person who may have been serving as substitute carrier on the route will be selected if in other respects his qualifications are equal to those of the other eligibles.

13. Applications of persons under 17 or over 55 years of age will not be considered, except in the cases of honorably discharged United States soldiers or sailors of the civil war or of the Spanish-American war, and of those entitled to the benefits of section 1754 of the Revised Statutes, who are physically able to perform the service required.

14. An applicant will be required to show that he possesses the necessary equipment for the service, namely, suitable horse and wagon or cart, or to satisfy the special agent or the route inspector that he will be able to supply such equipment in case he receives appointment.

15. Application shall not be received from a person who is badly crippled or deformed. Application shall not be received from a person who does not live directly on or within the territory to be supplied by the route where the vacancy exists.

16. Application shall not be received from a member of the postmaster's family, especially if other members of his family are already in the Government service, unless there is a lack of a sufficient number of other applicants.

17. A carrier who resigns will not be permitted to discontinue service until his successor is appointed and qualifies.

18. A carrier will be required to furnish a suitable substitute. Whenever a carrier becomes separated from the service the postmaster shall employ the substitute carrier, if there be one at the time, and if not, any suitable person until regular appointment can be made. The appointment of a new carrier shall operate to separate the former substitute from the service, the new carrier to furnish his own substitute as herein provided.

19. A carrier and his substitute will each be required to give bond in the amount of $500.

20. All persons who can comply with the requirements and who desire to enter the examination which may be held for the position of rural carrier on either a route proposed to be established or on an established route, should so notify the postmaster at the post-office out of which the route may extend

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Will the gentleman allow me?

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. I desire to say that the misapprehension seems to have grown out of the fact that the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GAINES] and other gentlemen have used the instructions issued by the Post-Office Department based upon these rules prescribed by the Civil Service Commission. In my remarks I used the rules "prescribed by the Civil Service Commission" itself, and not the instructions issued by the Post-Office Department based upon those rules.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Now, will the gentleman allow me, inasmuch as we want to put ourselves in the RECORD exactly as the facts may be, and straighten out any misunderstanding?

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. Yes.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. You will notice on page 4—and it is a fact that has not been heretofore, that I know of, called to the attention of the House either by placing it in the RECORD or otherwise—the rules from which the gentleman from Kentucky has just read were:

JOHN R. PROCTER, President.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I was informed about the close of the debate a day or two ago, in which the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] and the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SMITH] had addressed the House, that the rules from which the gentlemen quoted were the old rules of the rural system. You can see from the dates that I have just quoted that they are certainly older than the rules which I quoted from—that they antedate the 1st of February, 1902.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. Of course; the gentleman will recognize the fact that the Post-Office Department could not issue instructions under civil-service rules that had not been promulgated. Of course, the rules were promulgated by the Civil Service Commission before the instructions under them could be issued by the Department.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. You will find in the RECORD, on pages 2549 and 2550, the rules which were given.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky has expired.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to be given a few moments to straighten this matter out. I am sure that the gentleman from Kentucky does not want to do me any injustice, and I do not want to do him any injustice.

The CHAIRMAN. How much time does the gentleman want?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Three minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, on the pages I have read will be found the instructions for "route inspectors," relating to the examination of the rural letter carrier, and they apply where there is a "vacancy" occurring after the route is established, as I am officially informed.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. They apply to route inspectors.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. To route inspectors. On the next page you will find where I have inserted instructions for the "special agents," relating to the applications for letter carriers where the rural system is being established and where it has been established.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. Let me say to the gentleman that these instructions are issued under the civil-service rules that I have to-day placed in the RECORD. They are the outgrowth of these civil-service rules.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. The rules I allude to are the rules of this date. They took effect the 1st of February, 1902.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. So did these.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. They are the rules given to me by Mr. Machen, and if you can rely on what is stated by any officials, these are the rules now being enforced. The reason why I say that the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] and the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SMITH] were misled was because I myself have been misled by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] saying to me that the gentleman from Mississippi was quoting from rules existing previous to February 1 last. Of course it is an immaterial error. I want, however, to call attention to the fact that neither the gentleman from Mississippi nor the gentleman from Kentucky read the last provision of these rules. You will find the same provision here in both the instructions to the inspectors as well as instructions to the special agents, and it is this:

The central board of examiners will carefully review all recommendations for the selection of carriers in connection with the applications and the written and card-reading tests submitted therewith. Special agents must therefore bear in mind that their recommendations will not necessarily control; they are, however, desired by the central board as a guide or aid in its consideration of the examination papers.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. I think that is the same provision that my friend from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] referred to in his speech later.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. He did not allude to it in the very lengthy and entertaining speech the gentleman made. I am informed by a gentleman whom I asked to carefully read over his speech and see if he alluded to it, and he says he did not, and I did not hear him allude to it. Now, Mr. Chairman, I ask permission to place in the RECORD an explanation furnished me by Mr. Machen of the two sets of rules—that is, those applying to route inspectors and special agents.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. How many carriers has the gentleman in his district?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I think there are 19. How many has the gentleman in his?

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to insert the civil-service rules promulgated to take effect the 1st day of February, 1902, as a part of my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky asks permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The following are the papers referred to by Mr. GAINES of Tennessee:

POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
FIRST ASSISTANT POSTMASTER-GENERAL,
OFFICE OF GENERAL SUPERINTENDENT FREE-DELIVERY SYSTEM,
Washington, March 5, 1902.

SIR: Replying to your personal inquiry of this date, I have to say that the instructions printed on page 2521 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD are for route inspectors who are specially detailed to conduct examinations for the filling of vacancies which occur in the established service. These instructions differ from those given to special agents—not, however, in material points.

Special agents alone establish service. Under the rules we require that the petitioners for new service shall nominate applicants for the position of carrier. The rules do not, however, limit the examination to those suggested by the petitioners. Any others may apply; but with everything else equal, one of the nominees of the patrons or petitioners is to be selected. All selections, whether to fill vacancies or for original service, are made through the central board of examiners. This board carefully reviews the recommendations of the special agent, or route inspector, in connection with the examination papers which are submitted.

Very respectfully, yours,

A. W. MACHEN,
General Superintendent.

Hon. JOHN W. GAINES,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. These two rules took effect February 1, 1902, and are now enforced:

INSTRUCTIONS TO ROUTE INSPECTORS RELATING TO THE EXAMINATION OF APPLICANTS FOR THE POSITION OF RURAL LETTER CARRIER.

On February 1, 1902, the order of the President classifying rural letter carriers will become effective. After that day vacancies occurring in the force of carriers will be filled in accordance with rules of the Civil Service Commission.

The following special rules are prepared for the guidance of route inspectors, who will be detailed to conduct examinatons where vacancies exist:

1. A letter carrier who resigns will not be permitted to discontinue service until his successor is appointed and qualifies.

2. In the case of the death or removal of carriers, postmasters will be instructed to employ the substitute carrier, and if there is none, any suitable person until the regular examination can be held.

3. When the route inspector is advised of a vacancy by the Department, he will proceed to the post-office as quickly as possible, notifying the postmaster by wire, if necessary, of the day he will reach there, and instructing him to notify applicants to be on hand to take the prescribed examination.

4. Each applicant will be given a blank application, which he will fill out with pen and ink in the presence of the route inspector.

5. Each applicant, separate and apart from the other applicants, will be required to read 25 addressed envelopes or cards. The route inspector will carefully note every error made by the applicant, and the time he takes in the test.

6. Each applicant will be required to fill out a blank registry receipt and a blank receipt for money for the purchase of a money order.

7. Applications of badly crippled or deformed persons will not be considered. This will include persons who are totally deaf or blind, who have one arm or one leg, etc.

8. Applications of persons under 17 or over 55 years of age will not be considered, except in the case of honorably discharged soldiers or sailors of the civil war or Spanish war who are physically able to perform service.

9. Applications of persons will not be considered who have not the necessary equipment for the service, namely, horse and wagon or cart, unless applicant can satisfy the route inspector that he will be able to supply such equipment in case he receives the appointment.

10. The applications of women will be received, but a woman should not be recommended for appointment as regular carrier unless, in the judgment of the route inspector, local conditions and circumstances are such as to make the recommendation desirable and for the best interests of the service.

11. Applicants must reside directly on or within the territory to be supplied by the route where the vacancy exists.

12. After an examination has been held, the route inspector will carefully observe the general characteristics of the candidates or applicants, taking special notice of health and physical conditions, and in submitting his report state which, in his judgment, should be selected. Under no circumstances must political or religious affiliations of applicants be considered, nor must political indorsements be received or entertained. The merit of the applicant and the good of the service alone must be considered in submitting a recommendation.

13. In recommending a selection from among the applicants who were able to fill out the necessary blanks, route inspectors will give preference to those who, by long and constant residence in the community, are well acquainted with the patrons of the route, hold their confidence, possess the necessary equipment, and are prepared in cases of emergency to furnish a suitable substitute.

NOTE.—Section 1754, Revised Statutes: Persons honorably discharged from the military or naval service by reason of disability resulting from wounds or sickness incurred in the line of duty shall be preferred for appointment to civil offices, provided they are found to possess the business capacity necessary for the proper discharge of the duties of such offices.

14. In filling a vacancy the substitute carrier competing in the examination with other applicants, everything else being equal, should be given preference.

15. When a route inspector has doubts about an applicant's character or reputation he should not only make inquiry of two or three persons given as references in the application, but also consult two or more prominent citizens not mentioned by the applicant.

16. A rural letter carrier will be required to furnish a suitable substitute, who will be required to give bond in the same amount as the carrier, namely, $500. With the separation of the regular carrier from the service the substitute also will be dropped, but will be permitted to take the examination in competition with other applicants for the position if he can meet the requirements of rules 7, 8, 9, and 11.

The central board of examiners will carefully review all recommendations for the selection of carriers in connection with the applications and written and card-reading tests submitted therewith. Route inspectors must therefore bear in mind that their recommendations will not necessarily control; they are, however, desired by the central board of examiners as a guide or aid in its consideration of the examination papers.

INSTRUCTIONS TO SPECIAL AGENTS RELATING TO THE EXAMINATION OF APPLICANTS FOR THE POSITION OF RURAL LETTER CARRIER.

On February 1, 1902, the order of the President classifying rural letter carriers will become effective. After that date the selection of carriers will be made under the following rules:

1. In all petitions for service filed after February 1, 1902, the petitioners will be required to nominate not less than three persons whom they deem trustworthy and who are willing to accept the position.

2. The special agent who makes the investigation for the establishment of the service will also conduct the examination of the applicants for the position of carrier.

3. The special agent will advise the postmaster in due time of the date he will reach the office from which the proposed route or routes will start, and instruct him to notify the applicants named in the petition, and any others who may apply, to be on hand to take the prescribed examination.

4. Each applicant will be given a blank application, which he will fill out with pen and ink in the presence of the special agent.

5. Each applicant, separate and apart from the other applicants, will be required to read twenty-five (25) addressed envelopes or cards. The special agent will carefully note every error made by the applicant, and the time he takes in the test.

6. Each applicant will be required to fill out a blank registry receipt and a blank receipt for money for the purchase of a money order.

7. Applications of badly crippled or deformed persons will not be considered. This class includes persons who are totally deaf or blind, who have one arm or leg, etc.

8. Applications of persons under 17 or over 55 years of age will not be considered, except in the case of honorably discharged soldiers or sailors of the civil war or Spanish war who are physically able to perform service.

9. Applications of persons will not be considered who have not the necessary equipment for the service, namely, horse and wagon or cart, unless the applicant can satisfy the special agent that he will be able to supply such equipment in case he receives the appointment.

10. The applications of women will be received, but a woman should not be recommended for appointment as regular carrier unless, in the judgment of the special agent, local conditions and circumstances are such as to make the recommendation desirable and for the best interests of the service.

11. Applicants must reside directly on or within the territory to be supplied by the proposed route.

12. After an examination has been held the special agent will carefully observe the general characteristics of the candidates or applicants, taking special notice of health and physical conditions, and in submitting his report state which, in his judgment, should be selected. Under no circumstances must political or religious affiliations of applicants be considered, nor must political indorsements be received or entertained. The merit of the applicant and the good of the service alone must be considered in submitting a recommendation.

13. In recommending a selection from among the applicants who were able to fill out the necessary blanks, special agents will give preference to those who, by long and constant residence in the community, are well acquainted with the patrons of the proposed route, hold their confidence, possess the necessary equipment, and be prepared in cases of emergency to furnish a suitable substitute.

NOTE.—Section 1754, Revised Statutes: Persons honorably discharged from the military or naval service by reason of disability resulting from wounds or sickness incurred in the line of duty shall be preferred for appointments to civil offices, provided they are found to possess the business capacity necessary for the proper discharge of the duties of such offices.

14. Everything else being equal, one of the persons nominated by the petitioners for the service should be selected.

15. When a special agent has doubt about an applicant's character or reputation, he should not only make inquiry of two or three of the persons given as references in the application, but also consult two or more prominent citizens not mentioned by the applicant.

16. A rural letter carrier will be required to furnish a suitable substitute who will be required to give bond in the same amount as the carrier, namely, $500. With the separation of the regular carrier from the service the substitute also will be dropped, but will be permitted to take the examination in competition with other applicants for the position if he can meet the requirements of rules 7, 8, 9, and 11.

The central board of examiners will carefully review all recommendations for the selection of carriers in connection with the applications and the written and card-reading tests submitted therewith. Special agents must therefore bear in mind that their recommendations will not necessarily control; they are, however, desired by the central board as a guide or aid in its consideration of the examination papers.

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Chairman, I now yield thirty minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COWHERD].

Mr. COWHERD. Mr. Chairman, this debate has reached a point where there is nothing new to be said upon the subject; and I simply take the floor to give my own views and state the reasons that have influenced me in voting to support the bill in committee and in voting as I shall do for its passage. I deprecate the attempt which has been made on this floor to charge gentlemen favoring the bill with hostility to the rural-delivery service. I wish to say that since I have been a member of Congress I have never failed on any opportunity to vote for the largest appropriation that was asked for this service and the largest the Department said could possibly be used to advantage. I have always considered this to be one of the very best branches of the postal service, and that it would in the end do more for the farming community of the United States than anything the Government has ever done for them. I heartily concur in all the graceful things that have been said by the gentleman from Virginia and by gentlemen who have followed him as to the benefits to be derived by the farming community from the development and extension of this service.

Mr. Chairman, it is because I believe in this service—because I want to see it extended and developed; it is because I want to see the day come when every man in the United States may receive his mail at his door or at least within convenient reach of him—that I have voted to report this bill to the House. This service, as the chairman of the committee has said, was instituted at a cost of $300 for each route. The gentleman from Indiana cries out that this is "cheap!" "cheap!" "cheap!" and that the chairman of the committee is attempting to beat down the wages of the men who are serving the Government. It is untrue; he did not advocate a salary of $300 per annum or even of $600 per annum. On the contrary, he has insisted, if you are going to occupy the entire time of these men and prohibit them from doing anything but carry the mails, you must raise their salaries. I believe in the Government paying, as I believe in the private employer paying, full value for all services rendered. I do not believe that the lowest wage, either in Government or private employment, is the best policy. But, Mr. Chairman, I believe with respect to the Government just as I believe with regard to an individual, that no one should pay more for any service than the service is reasonably worth; and I believe that it is our duty as representatives of our people to see that they get the best possible service, and pay for it no more than it is fairly worth.

Can you do that under the salary system? If any gentleman will show me the way in which it can be done, I for one will follow him in voting for this bill. If he can not show it, then I demand that he follow us in instituting here a system that will let out in a business way to business men an opportunity to perform a business service. And that is all there is in this bill.

Now, gentlemen have wasted a good deal of time in saying, "If you are going to put these men under contract, why not put the fourth-class postmasters under contract?" Well, sir, that is practically what we do. We do not, it is true, select the fourth-class postmaster upon competitive bids, but we put him practically under contract when he goes into the service. There are fourth-class postmasters in the United States who receive $50 a year, and there are other fourth-class postmasters who receive $950 a year. If you say that the carrier must be a salaried man because he performs the service of a postmaster, then why do you not say that the fourth-class postmaster must be a salaried man? He takes the mail; he delivers the mail; he has the control of it. He is that "trusted employee" whom the gentleman from Virginia fears you can not select by contract. He issues money orders; he gives receipts; and he is paid in proportion to the service he renders; he does not receive a salary from the Government. He is paid on cancellation of stamps.

Mr. BROMWELL. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. COWHERD. Certainly.

Mr. BROMWELL. Is it not a fact that the so-called Association of Fourth-Class Postmasters has already commenced attempting to bring pressure to bear upon Congress to fix a minimum compensation for that class of officers instead of a compensation as now fixed by the sale of stamps?

Mr. COWHERD. That is true; and we know that they have for years had a representative—I have not had the pleasure of seeing him around this year—around the halls of Congress endeavoring to get the committee to report a bill that would fix the pay of postmasters at some fixed sum.

Now, if you do fix the salary of the fourth-class postmaster, are you going to fix it at $200 or $300 or $400? We know there are fourth-class postmasters in the service who are to-day receiving $800 and $900 a year and up to $1,000 a year. When the salary reaches $1,000, the office is transferred to the next class. Now, if you fix a salary for the fourth-class postmaster, are you going to fix it at the maximum now paid or at the minimum or halfway between? The man who is to-day working on a commission and receiving $900 a year is not going to be content to be put on a salary unless he is to receive the same he has been getting. Would you raise the man who is only doing $100 worth of work to $900 or reduce the $900 man to $100? It would be just as reasonable to attempt to fix a hard-and-fast rule in the case of fourth-class postmasters as it is in the case of rural-delivery carriers.

What is the fact in regard to the fourth-class postmaster? He has in ninety-nine cases out of a hundred a store, in one corner of which he sets up his little post-office. The handling of the mail is a very small part of his duty, and the remuneration he receives as postmaster is a very small part of the money he receives during the year. It was intended when this rural service was instituted that the rural carrier, like the fourth-class postmaster, should set up another business; that the transportation of the mails should be simply a part of his labor—simply one source of his income. Why, Mr. Chairman, as I remember it, in the postal service there never yet has been a contract providing for the transportation of mail (except the pony express across the plains in the early days) where the contractor was not also engaged in other business. Railroads, steamboats, stage coaches, star routes—none of these depend entirely upon the mail for their compensation, and it is owing to the fact that the transportation of the mail is only a part of their business that the Government is enabled to get the mail carried at such low figures.

Now, if the mail agent—the rural carrier—could go ahead, as was intended, and build up a business along the different routes of the country, carrying out from the little country store the various purchases that the farmer's wife might wish to make, bringing back the pound of butter, the dozen or two of eggs, and delivering them, receiving a small commission from each to pay for the labor he performs, what would be the result? It would be worth hundreds of thousands of dollars in the time saved to the farming community of the United States and in the articles that they could thereby market at a very small expense. In addition to that it would be worth hundreds—I started to say hundreds of millions, but probably that would be too much—but many millions of dollars to the Treasury of the United States in the saving that would be effected in the salary of these employees. All that can be done under the contract system. All that will be done under the contract system, but it is the present purpose of the Department, as evidenced by their official order, that nothing of this kind shall be done under the present system, but that this employee must be a salaried man, devoting his entire time to this service, taking from him the privilege of any other employment, and therefore forcing the Government to pay full value for all his time.

Now, Mr. Chairman, is that a business proposition? I submit to the gentlemen that have argued here on the other side of this proposition that as I understand the situation and the farming community in Missouri—and I am somewhat acquainted with them—they are not so particularly anxious whether the man that delivers the mail is dressed in uniform; they are not so particularly anxious as to whether he drives out in a little red wagon or not; but what they want is their daily mail, the papers and their letters delivered at the door or within reach, and when that has been accomplished they are entirely satisfied, and they would prefer to get it at a reasonable sum rather than pay a high-priced man a high-priced salary, particularly as long as the salary comes out of their pockets.

Mr. THAYER. I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. COWHERD. Yes.

Mr. THAYER. I would like to ask the gentleman if he has ever heard any complaint or suggestion from any of the patrons who are now served by the civil service that the amount which has heretofore been paid for the man engaged, namely, $500, was too large a sum, or that they thought others could be hired to do the service equally as well at a less price?

Mr. COWHERD. I answer the gentleman no. I am coming to that phase of this discussion in a few minutes, and I hope the gentleman will do me the honor to listen when I reach it.

One other argument that has been advanced by the objectors to this bill has been to this effect: Why do not you put the city carrier under the contract system? Now, Mr. Chairman, one of the reasons, and one of the most important reasons, for a measure of this kind has been the great inequalities in the rural service. There are no such in the city service. The man that carries the mail in New York or Chicago or Kansas City or San Francisco walks over paved streets, along which are good sidewalks; he finds houses that are numbered; he has the same conditions to perform his work in, and unless those conditions are present you do not give the city the service.

You do not give the city the service because it has 10,000 population or because it has $10,000 in receipts. Unless the streets and the sidewalks are there, unless the houses are numbered, and unless the regulations that have been made by the Department—regulations which attempt to put all the service upon the same footing as far as the conditions under which the work is performed are concerned—are complied with the service is refused. Can you make that possible in the rural service? Can you level the hills of New England or of northern Arkansas? Can you lay out a route over the Ozark hills in southern Missouri and make its conditions the same as those over which a man travels in the level territory of eastern Kansas? Can you make it in my district, where he travels largely over macadamized roads, the same as in the district where the roads have practically no bottom?

The service has been instituted recently throughout the entire county which I have the honor to represent here. There was no difficulty whatever in finding men to take the places. The only trouble was to adjust the differences between the men who wanted them. And permit me to say in passing that I did not have that difficulty to meet, because being from a close district, in a State that was considered debatable ground, I was not given the privilege of making the appointments.

But I am not here to complain of the Department. It has treated me fairly, and I have never complained under a Republican Administration that the appointments were not given to Democrats.

I have been told that in the institution of this service there was some kind of a pledge that the thing should be nonpartisan. I know nothing about that. It occurred before I came to Congress. I want to say here and now, in order to make my position plain, that as far as the Department is concerned I have no complaint whatever to make. I have been fairly treated and the service is good. I have no personal objections to it. I am here urging this change and reform in the interest of the whole country, and because I believe that unless it is made this system will eventually break down, and the people will lose the benefits that they ought to receive from it.

The gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HILL] told us, as I understood him, that the average price of corn in his district was from 75 cents to a dollar. Out in my country ordinarily it runs from about 30 to 35 cents. You can not equalize those conditions.

The average price of a horse is much higher up North than it is down South. The price of hay and oats is much higher. You do not equalize those conditions. And I submit to this House that no plan has been made or can be proposed, except the business plan of letting a man take it as a business venture, whereby you can make the service fairly equal in Connecticut and in Kansas.

I think the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HILL] said it cost about $380 to keep up the team and wagon, counting in the cost of feed for the horses and repairs to the wagon and wear and tear on the whole equipment. If it costs that, it costs double what it costs in my district. He says it takes two horses to carry the mail over the roads in his district. I know many of the carriers in my district, who have been carrying the mail for some two or three years, who have done the service with one horse. You can not come into this House and say you will give the man in Connecticut a salary of $850 and that you will give the man in Kansas and Missouri a salary of $600. You know very well that no such proposition can be presented to this Congress and stand here for a moment. As the chairman of the committee [Mr. LOUD] has said, whenever you fix the salary you have got to fix it at what is a fair wage for the most expensive district in the country, and the carrier that performs the work where it can be done cheaper will simply get that much more profit out of the proposition.

Mr. BROMWELL. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. COWHERD. Certainly.

Mr. BROMWELL. Could there possibly be a greater opening for corrupt influence and venality on the part of the officers of the Government—and I do not refer merely to the head officers in charge of this work, but to the inspectors who have the practical charge of recommending the salaries and the other conditions of the service—than to say that we should fix a maximum salary for these carriers and then permit the inspectors to say that the carrier in some district is only worth $500, while the carrier in another district is worth $800? Would not that be the most dangerous power to lodge in the hands of an inferior officer of this Government that you could conceive of?

Mr. COWHERD. So dangerous that I do not think any Congress of the United States would vote for such a proposition. This matter has got to stand as a fixed salary, or else it has got to stand as a business proposition on a contract service.

Mr. LATIMER. Will the gentleman permit an interruption there?

Mr. COWHERD. Certainly.

Mr. LATIMER. You spoke of the inequalities that existed in the different districts. I want to ask if in the large cities, where, as I understand the gentleman from Illinois stated in his speech, there are large buildings taking two, three, four, and five men to deliver mail, if that inequality does not exist there just as much where they are allowing men to ride in elevators and paying the men the same amount of salary as they pay the men who travel in the streets?

Mr. COWHERD. These inequalities do not exist in the cities. In the first place, the carrier in the large buildings carries the largest load of mail, so that there is not much advantage in having a business route. Then, again, the carriers' routes change, and these men delivering the mail in the large buildings with elevators this month the next month are in the suburbs delivering the mails. You can not do that in the country service. In the next place, they work eight hours a day, and they practically walk during all that time; and whether the carrier is walking in these vast buildings or along the paved streets, it makes but very little difference as to the character of the service performed. No man has offered or will offer to this House a proposition that in any way attempts to adjust these inequalities in the rural-delivery service.

Now, as to the question of the reasonable salary. We fix the salary here at $600. Now, I want to appeal to gentlemen from the agricultural districts of the different States of the Union. In a few years, if this service is increased, you will have twenty or thirty of these routes in many of the counties of the United States, and I hope in all of them—twenty or thirty of these routes established—and the carrier will come and say to you, "You voted on the Post-Office appropriation bill for $1,000 a year for the city carrier, and the city carrier walks for eight hours a day over the streets of the city, where he is protected from the winter's blasts, but I go out on the road for 25 miles. I am exposed to the inclemency of the weather—to rain and hail and snow. I have to provide a horse and wagon, feed the horse, and keep the wagon in repair, and yet you refuse to give me as much as the city carrier." How can you explain to that man and to his friends that you voted for a thousand dollars for the city carrier and voted against a thousand dollars for him?

I appeal to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. THAYER], who asked me the question a moment since, if he is from a country district—and I know not whether he is or not—I appeal to him if he comes from a country district, how he is going to explain to the carriers there how he voted for a thousand dollars to the man in the city and voted against giving a thousand dollars to the man who carries the mail in the country. I do not believe that any gentleman upon this floor can justify that kind of a vote.

Oh, we have heard gentlemen get up and say that they feel sorry for the man who would yield to pressure of these poor Government officers. I have heard gentlemen say that they would surrender their commissions and walk out of Congress before they would permit any Government employee to dictate to them how they were to cast their votes. Brave words, Mr. Chairman, easily spoken. But I submit that experience here shows the man who talks the boldest yields the easiest. We all know that strong influences among our constituents influence our votes.

Mr. FLEMING. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. COWHERD. Certainly.

Mr. FLEMING. I state that I realize that there are many difficulties in this matter. The question I wish to ask you is this: You are speaking of the hardships of these men carrying the mail in the country districts and the difference in their pay and that of the city carrier who gets a thousand dollars a year. I ask you how a Congressman would justify himself in voting only $600 a year for one and a thousand dollars for the other, or how will you or any other Congressman justify yourselves in voting a thousand dollars for a man in the city and compelling the man in the country to submit to a competitive bid, and maybe have to take it for $500 a year or even less. What are you going to say to that man?

Mr. COWHERD. I have already gone over that question.

Mr. FLEMING. Can not you answer that more fully? You say that the salary is $600 under the present system, and by putting it under contract the bidder may be made to take it for $500 instead of $600. Now the man who carries the mail receives $600, as the law now stands, under the salary system, but when it is put to private bid, how are you going to justify that when it may be made $400. How are you going to explain that difference between the city carrier and the country carrier when you go to the country districts?

Mr. COWHERD. He is not made to take it. He takes it as a business venture. The country carrier is transporting the mail as the railroad does, except for a shorter time. The city carrier is simply delivering the mail. Now, I have shown that in the country and in the city there is a different condition, and you can not institute a fair comparison between the city and the country carrier.

There are few inequalities in the city service to be adjusted. There are many inequalities in the rural service that defy adjustment; therefore a salary system which is fair for all in the one instance is unfair in the other. I will say to the gentleman from Georgia that if you could fix a reasonably fair salary, which the service could stand and at such a rate as would not stifle its development, and assure me the salary would stop at that limit, I would vote for a salary. I do not believe it is possible to do it.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. I would like to suggest that in the case of the country carrier, under this bill, Congress does not fix his salary, but he fixes it by his own competitive bid.

Mr. BROMWELL. I want to suggest that if it was possible to limit the number of bidders in the city-carrier service, as it would be in the country-carrier service, you might apply the contract system to the city carrier; but you take the city carrier's route, and the probability is that if it were open to bids you would have, instead of three or four bidders, some three hundred or four hundred bidders, and the result would be it would take the entire time of the Post-Office Department to open bids and award contracts for carrying the mail upon routes in the city.

Mr. LATIMER. I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. COWHERD. Certainly.

Mr. LATIMER. Does the gentleman believe that this contract system will save money to the Government?

Mr. COWHERD. My candid opinion is that in some districts the price will be less than it is now. I say it will be less than $600 a year in some districts because the Second Assistant Postmaster-General reports that in the star-route service, where they are now requiring the delivery to boxes along the routes, along the 25-mile routes the average pay is $411. In some sections I think the service will cost more; but whether it will cost more or less, you will get it for what it is worth in that section of the country where it is performed, and you will not be paying $900 for a service that can be done for $400, or paying $400 for a service like that of the gentleman from Connecticut that can not be done for less than seven or eight hundred dollars.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired.

Mr. LOUD. I will yield the gentleman from Missouri ten minutes more.

Mr. COWHERD. Now, one other matter I want to submit to the House, and that is on the pay of these carriers. I have here a little paper issued in my district. I know the editor of it and I know he has no interest in the free-delivery service. He is a Democrat, and there are no Democrats in the service in the seven or eight routes that run out of the town. Here is an article in which he demands that the pay of the rural free-delivery carrier be increased 50 per cent. The carriers now are getting $600, so that that would amount to $900 a year. I submit that if this is to remain a salaried service and the carrier is to devote all of his time to the service, and is not permitted to do anything else during that time, if he is to keep a horse and keep a wagon, you will not be able to justify a salary of a smaller amount in the country than you do in the city, and I think in the end you will have to add something for horse hire. What will be the result? The result will be, as frequently stated on the floor of the House, the cost of this service will run up to sixty-five or seventy millions of dollars a year.

In times of prosperity—and gentlemen on the other side of the Chamber are telling us of the great wave of prosperity which we are riding upon to-day—in times of prosperity people do not inquire closely into the taxes, and the service might run along during the prosperous years. But just as sure as there comes a year of adversity, just as sure as there comes the lean kine—and they are as sure to come as the revolving suns bring the coming years—just that sure these appropriation bills are going to be carefully scanned, and the people are going to know where every dollar of their money goes. What will be the result? You will come with a great deficiency in the postal bill; you will come with one branch of the service costing sixty or seventy-five million dollars and bringing in a comparatively small return, and then and there that service will be stopped. It will not be extended to another rural route in the United States.

I address gentlemen here living in sparsely settled States, where you can not find, frequently, a route of 25 miles with 100, or 50, or even 25 families to serve. They talk about this service paying for itself. It can not pay for itself there, whatever it does in a populous territory.

When this enormous cost stops further development, how will your people be served? When hard times once more brings us back to economy in public expenditures, what hope have you that your people can have the benefit of a free delivery?

Then and there the gentlemen from the South, gentlemen from the West, gentlemen from the extreme Northwest will find out that they voted into this bill as a permanent service a measure that has forever prevented them from getting the service which they desire and which their people need.

Gentlemen continually talk here about the city service. They say, "You are paying a large sum for that service. Why not cut down that expense?" Now, the rural free-delivery service, although I think it will add to the revenues of the Government, can never be, in my opinion, a self-sustaining service. Around the limits of a large city—out in the suburbs of some of the thickly settled districts—it will eventually pay for itself; but can you ever expect it to do so in those wide areas of our country where the population is scattered? In such localities it can never pay for itself. Hence it is a service that is costing the largest amount of money for the smallest return; and I feel that for this reason it ought to be put on such a basis that it will cost no more than the actual worth of the service. But the city service will be maintained not only to meet the demands of the country's business, but to raise revenues to keep up the Department.

Mark you, the city of New York pays $10,000,000 out of something like $116,000,000 of annual revenue of the Post-Office Department. Ten million dollars, almost one-tenth of the revenue of the Department, comes from one city. The city of Chicago pays over $6,000,000. I might go on and recite the large revenue paid to the Post-Office Department by 20 or 30 of our large cities. Now observe that upon actual counts and tests, it has appeared that practically half of the postal receipts come from the local mail arising within the city and never getting out of it. So that the service is no tax whatever upon the country. The net receipts from New York are two or three times as much as the total cost of maintaining the postal service there. So you can not reduce the city service without great loss in revenue.

Mr. BROMWELL. Before the gentleman takes his seat, I would like to have him touch upon a point which has been frequently referred to here—and I take it as evidence of a lack of information on the part of some members of the House. I have been expecting, in case I should make some remarks to-morrow, to allude to this point myself; but the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COWHERD] states a proposition so clearly and clothes it in such elegant diction that I know, if stated by him, it will make more impression upon the House than anything I could say. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. COWHERD. I hope the gentleman will take all the time that he wants. [Laughter.]

Mr. BROMWELL. I want to suggest a thought to the gentleman that he may elaborate it to the House. I refer to the fact that the star-route service as it exists to-day under recent lettings—those lettings which were made a year ago and those made this year, for which the returns are not yet in—is an entirely different service from the old star-route service under which the Brady scandals grew up, and entirely different from the star-route service which now exists in two sections of the country, and which may continue to exist there for the next year or for two years yet to come. I know the gentleman can clearly explain to this House the great improvements that have been made in the star-route service in the western sections of the country, and that the fears that are entertained that great scandals and frauds may arise under this contract system if it is adopted are entirely without foundation.

Mr. COWHERD. I know, as a matter of fact, that is largely true. Some two or three years ago there was a change made in the method of carrying the mail along the star routes. There was a change made in the method of letting the contracts, and since the contractor has been required to personally supervise the service and the contract can only be let to a man living along the route there have been very few complaints. Of course there are always complaints of any service that serves a great number of people. There are complaints of the rural free-delivery service, and yet I think it is exceedingly satisfactory. And I want also to add that where the star-route service has been changed in accordance with the new regulations I think that is a satisfactory service.

Mr. THAYER. I would like to ask a question of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BROMWELL]. Is it or is it not true that we blush for the great American people every time we see one of these star-route deliveries going from one place to another?

Mr. COWHERD. I would like to answer that question for the gentleman from Ohio. I will state to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. THAYER] that the people out in my section possibly do not blush so easily as do those in Massachusetts. [Laughter.]

Mr. BROMWELL. Possibly that is because they do not have so much occasion to. [Laughter.]

Mr. COWHERD. Very recently, Mr. Chairman, they established a rural free-delivery service through one of the counties which I represent, and as a part of that service they put on what is known as a postal wagon. That is one of the new departures in this service. It is practically a railway postal car, only drawn by horses, and it serves the carrier along its line and takes up and delivers the mail and carries a clerk in the wagon, who sorts it, just as is done in the postal cars. Now, before that postal wagon was run on the route from Lee Summit to Lone Jack there was a star-route service. I have received a petition signed by about 20 residents of Lone Jack, asking that the postal wagon—which is the wagon furnished by the Government, newly painted, beautiful, a work of art, I have no doubt, "a thing of beauty and a joy forever"—asking, I say, that that wagon be taken off and that this old star-route wagon be put back, because they say the star-route wagon perfomed practically the work of a railroad—it brought out express and hauled passengers, and it took their produce into the market. I think they are mistaken in making the request. I think the postal wagon can do the same thing, and will eventually do the same thing, under the service; but I simply offer that as an example to my friend from Massachusetts to show him that the people in that district, at least, were not blushing for the star-route service.

Now, I want to say in conclusion, Mr. Chairman, that I do not propose to be misunderstood and held up before the country as an enemy of the rural free-delivery service, and I do not intend to permit the gentlemen who take the floor here to advocate a salary system to place me in that position. I say here and now, as I said in the beginning, that I believe it is the very best arm of the Government service. I believe the carrying of the mail to the farmer, putting him in touch with the outside world, breaking up the isolation that has so long been the bane of country life, resulting, too, as it does in the building of better roads over all the country, is one of the greatest blessings that can be brought to any farming community. But I advocate this bill because I fear, and I fear from a knowledge of the facts, knowing, as I do, how continually we are urged to increase the salaries of the employees in almost every other branch of the postal service, that when this service is distributed over the entire country there will be gathered under its banner another army of soldiers ready to march upon the Capitol demanding an increase of pay, and when, with the development alike of service and salaries, the country is brought face to face with an enormous deficit in the postal revenues, the result will be the breaking down of this service. The city will keep its service, because it pays so much the Government can not afford to stop it. The place that will suffer will be the country district. And it is because I like this service and want to see it maintained, it is because I want to see it developed to the very uttermost possibility of development of which it is capable, because I want to see it serve every man, woman, and child in the United States that I advocate this bill. [Applause.]

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Chairman, I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN].

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. Mr. Chairman, I am a friend of the general principles of this bill, and I hope it can be amended so that I can give it my support. I can not support it without certain amendments, one of which I will discuss before I get through, and which I believe ought to satisfy every man from my section of the country.

As the distinguished gentleman [Mr. COWHERD] who has just taken his seat has said, we who favor the contract principle are not enemies of the free rural-delivery system. I am a friend to the system. I have supported the appropriations for its development. Free rural delivery of mails will greatly bless the country sections and add much to the educational and social advantages of the people. I believe in it now and I expect to support the appropriation for it. I am a friend of the carriers. I would be glad to see them get every dollar they can earn. I would do them no wrong, I would do the system no wrong, and I do not believe, after thorough consideration of this matter, that under a fair contract system free rural delivery will be damaged. As to the present carriers, they should be continued under their present contracts for two years, and perhaps for four years, as suggested by the gentleman from Illinois.

But, Mr. Chairman, one of the most important arguments that can be made against the permanency of the present system and in favor of the contract system is that the present system will promote throughout this country the greatest political machine ever known, while a suitable contract system, properly safeguarded, can never become such a machine. Although certain civil-service rules have been prescribed by the Department for the selection of carriers, yet in its best aspects I have not the utmost confidence in the civil-service system, and I do not believe there will ever be a civil-service system which will do absolute justice to both parties in this country in the rural free delivery.

However honest and earnest it may be in an endeavor to act impartially between the two political parties, I believe that the party in power, the Administration, will get the overwhelming bulk of the appointments under it. I believe that when rural free delivery is perfected under the present system throughout the United States, with fifty or sixty thousand free rural-delivery carriers under the control of a partisan Administration, going by every farmer's gate, passing through every section of the country day by day, it will be the most powerful political machine that this world has ever known; and whether it belongs to my party or the party of my opponents, it is a dangerous power for any party to have against the people.

As the people are to bear the burden of this system—for the people, after all, pay the taxes—it is the interest of the people that we ought to consult, and not merely the interests of political parties, or even of the rural free-delivery carriers. Of course if we have from fifty to sixty thousand rural free-delivery carriers they will deserve recognition, they will deserve good compensation, they will deserve good treatment at the hands of this body; but, as has been suggested here, I believe that with that great army of officeholders, in sympathy with and holding under the party in power, demanding an increase of salary from Congress, with from 100 to 200 of them in each Representative's district, coming in contact with his constituents daily, Congress would not long resist their demands.

Many gentlemen already want the rural carriers' salary put at $1,000, and some even suggest $1,200. Representing the people, it seems to me it ought to be a matter of some moment with this body whether we shall continue a system that may finally entail an expense annually upon the people of sixty or seventy million dollars, or so change it that its expense will finally be only thirty or thirty-five million dollars, which will be the probable expense at $600 per route when the country is fully covered by it. Thirty million dollars is an item worth saving to the taxpayers of the country. As to the question that the gentleman from Georgia asked of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COWHERD] just now, if you will amend this bill properly and pass it, the complications that the gentleman from Georgia was afraid of can never under any circumstances arise. We will never have to face the question then as to how we will defend our actions before our country constituents. My knowledge of country constituents convinces me of their wisdom, their intelligence, and patriotism. They are apt to look at things honestly and understand them thoroughly, and I have no fear of their verdict when facing them after a faithful discharge of duty.

Another thing. I believe, judging from the facts, that there has not been a more partial and partisan administration of any branch of this Government during my experience in this House. I am going to show you that in eight Southern States, from the Potomac River to the Texas line, that on the 1st day of February there were only 487 rural free-delivery routes established, with 13 others ordered but not established. There are 61 members of Congress representing that great section, Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, Florida, Alabama, Mississippi, and Louisiana—great States, containing as fine a rural population as exists on the globe.

They have only 487 routes established, with 13 ordered, making an even 500, with 61 Representatives here. I take my figures from the Department's pamphlet.

Now let us go to the grand old Republican State of Ohio, with its 21 Representatives, 4 of whom represent city districts having city delivery carriers, leaving only 17 country districts, including many large towns. The State of Ohio on that date had 629 routes already established, with 48 ordered, a total of 677 routes, as against 500 in those 8 great Southern States. The State of Ohio had 177 more routes than the entire 8 States to which I have referred.

Mr. BROMWELL. If the gentleman will allow me, I will suggest that the superintendent of this service is an Ohio man, and he knows how to take care of his own. [Laughter.]

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. Mr. Chairman, I appreciate that, and therefore we will waive Ohio. Let us go to another grand old Republican State. What is the strongest Republican State to-day, with the greatest influence in Congress to-day? Does anybody doubt that it is the State of Iowa? Let us go to Iowa and see what the condition is there. Iowa has 698 routes established and 20 already ordered but not established, which would make in the State of Iowa 718 routes, against 500 in the 8 Southern States, and the 8 Southern States have 61 Representatives, while the Republican State of Iowa has 11.

A MEMBER. Including the Speaker.

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. Including the honorable Speaker. I would probably do the same as the superintendent of rural free delivery has done, for when I am able to assist my friends I listen to their demands.

Mr. FLEMING. I should like to ask the gentleman from North Carolina this question. I admit that the gentleman has shown the partisanship exercised beyond any question and I am not trying to defend it. Will this postal delivery in the country by contract change that in any respect? Would not there be the same temptation under contracts as under salary?

Mr. BOUTELL. It would not be political.

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. In my judgment, if these routes were let by contract this political pressure that has been used to secure these routes in these States would not have been used. When a Congressman knows that the routes are to be submitted to bids there is no doubt whatever, in my judgment, that that pressure would not be used.

Mr. FLEMING. They would not have wanted it.

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. It would not have occurred. I believe that under the contract system in your State and my State and in the other States that I have named, and in the sections that are not dominated by Administration influence, the routes will greatly increase in number. Otherwise I believe that the great influences that have secured this great preponderance in other sections will continue to assert themselves until they are satisfied, and then we can expect our sections to be rapidly covered with routes.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. I should like to have a little more time.

Mr. LOUD. I have agreed to yield all the rest of the time. I will give the gentleman three minutes more.

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. I regret that I am not able to get more time than that. I will read the amendments which I desire to offer.

Now, as I have given reasons why I think the contract system will be better than the existing one, here are some amendments which I believe ought to be adopted. I believe that the system will fail unless it satisfies the patrons of the route. I believe the success of the system depends upon having carriers who are acceptable to the patrons. In the summer time throughout the agricultural sections the men are busy on their farms, and the people who will look after the mails, who will attend to the registered letters and the post-office money orders, who will get the carrier to do shopping, and who will make the requests of the carrier to do certain little things for them in town, will be the children and ladies along the route.

I believe that no route will be a complete success unless the carrier is satisfactory to the patrons. I believe that the contract system, as proposed, will be a failure unless safeguards are thrown around it which will insure the patrons being given a proper power in the selection of the carriers. In that belief I have drawn an amendment which I shall offer at the proper time, and which I hope will be adopted. It is to insert in line 1, page 3, after the word "service," the following:

And who shall file a certificate signed by a majority of the bona fide patrons of the route stating that his designation as carrier will not be objectionable to them.

And in line 5, page 3, after the word "paragraph," to insert the following:

And provided further, That whenever a majority of the patrons of the route shall petition for a change of carrier the Postmaster-General shall at once proceed to secure another carrier for the next ensuing fiscal year as hereinbefore provided.

Now, Mr. Chairman, that will leave it where it ought to belong, with the people, not to select their carrier, but with the power in them to reject a distasteful and unsatisfactory carrier; something like our jury system. We have no right to select a juror, but we have the right to reject one. Now, if you will give to the patrons along the route the privilege to reject a carrier who is unsatisfactory to them, and give the successful bidder the privilege to see the patrons to secure such a certificate, and whenever they say he is not objectionable then he ought to be qualified, and if he is objectionable to the majority of the patrons of the route he ought not to be the carrier on that route. [Loud applause.]

Mr. LOUD. I now yield to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. SHACKLEFORD].

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Mr. Chairman, at the commencement of this session I had the honor to offer a bill providing for the repeal of the tariff on wood pulp and printing paper. I shall not argue the merits of the bill at this time. Everybody but the paper trust concedes that it should pass. The people believe that "a tariff on printing paper is a tax on intelligence." Not only do the people favor the repeal of the tariff on wood pulp and printing paper, but a large majority of this House are ready to vote for its repeal. Why, then, does not the bill pass? Because the Ways and Means Committee of this House will not report the bill so that it can be put upon its passage.

The press of the country is full of censure of Congressmen for their failure to give some relief from the unjust exactions of the paper trust. Such criticism is unjust. The fault is not with members of Congress generally, but with the Ways and Means Committee that is smothering this and kindred measures by refusing to report them out for consideration on this floor. If the press of the country desires the overthrow of the paper trust let the guns be turned on this great committee.

While I will not now argue the merits of the proposed bill, I will read from a paper written by a prominent protectionist and an ardent Republican:

[By Fred B. Whitney, A. B., LL. B. Read before the Illinois Press Association, February 19, 1902.]

Self-preservation is the first law of nature, and this paper is unanswerably written in the struggle of "the survival of the fittest"—a monopoly—the paper trust or the American publishers.

I shall deal briefly—lest you forget—and chronologically with facts and figures, stating authorities, and establish the point that the American publishers are subjected to unnatural laws of trade through lack of united action and intelligent protection of their business interests, and shall propose a remedy for the evil—a tariff revision on wood pulp.

To disarm unthinking critics, let it be suggested that this is not a political problem, but a business proposition for the protection of publishers from the pilferings of a trust that does not owe its growth or success to protection of American labor but to a monopoly of raw material through protection and combination—a principle that no political party ever promoted or defended.

The writer is a high-protection editor, but stands with Congressman BABCOCK, chairman of the Republican Congressional committee, in his fight for a tariff revision upon certain articles, as of iron and pulp, etc., in which labor is a small element, and secondly, in which a trust has gained a monopoly of the raw material of this country. President Schwab, of the steel trust, suggested before the Industrial Commission—page 456, of the Report of Trusts—that a tariff is not essential where the manufacture from raw material is largely by machines and not labor—and Commissioner Thomas W. Phillips, on page 664 of the Final Industrial Commission Report, advocates my second proposition.

PRE-TRUST CONDITIONS OF PAPER AND TARIFF.

In 1890 news print sold at $9 per 100 pounds. Improvements of machinery, increased consumption through cheaper and larger newspapers, and competition forced the price down year by year, and in 1897 news print sold at $1.60 per 100 pounds. In 1897 the duty on pulp wood was nothing. Mechanically ground wood and wood pulp was about $1.20 per ton, news print $3 per ton, and no print was imported.

DISGUISED TRUST BEFORE CONGRESS.

Pleading poverty and impending bankruptcy, W. A. Russell, first paper trust president; Hugh Chisholm, the present president, and other trust mendicants appeared before the Ways and Means Committee (p. 1753, vol. 2, of the hearings) and refuted by bare denials the statements of the publishers' representative—Mr. John Norris—that the paper manufacturers were in an embryonic trust and proposed to increase print to $2.30 per hundred pounds, relying upon legislative aid to prevent possible competition from Canada, with her limitless supply of cheap spruce for pulp. I quote from the hearings and call particular attention to the false representation of the trust promoters in their absolute denial of even the thought of a trust in paper, or an increase to $2.30 per hundred pounds, both of which came at once after the Dingley Act.

Volume 2, page 1756, Ways and Means Hearings:

Mr. TAWNEY (member of committee). You state that this combination comprises practically all the paper mills and pulp mills in the United States. Do you know that to be a fact?

Mr. NORRIS (publisher). I do—every large paper manufacturer that I know—and I think, as the best customer of the paper companies, I know all of them.

As manager of the New York World he bought one-thirteenth of all print paper made—110 tons per day.

I felt that it was due to you that this information should be submitted to you in order that in any kind of revenue or tariff reform you could consider how far such a combination, organized for private interest, and taxing knowledge and reducing the facilities for information, should be permitted to take advantage of any Congressional regulation or tariff restriction to further the charter of monopoly.

(Page 1754.) Mr. TAWNEY. Do you think taking off this duty would have any effect on the trust or combination controlling prices?

Mr. NORRIS. It would simply make impossible any combination in so far as it attempted to raise the price of paper. It would be an automatic check upon any monopoly.

(Page 1579.) Mr. RUSSELL (of the Embryonic Trust, its first president). I deny that there is a combination formed, or practically formed, or that any combination or consideration of this matter by the paper manufacturers which contemplates raising the price of paper at all. We understand the power of the press, the influence it has, and we fear it just as much as anybody. Some gentlemen have told me that Mr. Norris said that if the alleged combination of which he spoke of was formed, it proposed to put the price of paper up to 2½ cents a pound. It is now, we will say, 2 cents. Nothing could be further from the truth and there is no evidence whatever that any such thing is contemplated.

The newspaper representative in rebuttal insisted that a trust was in embryonic state and that there was no need of new or increased tariff legislation, because our natural resources and advantages enabled the United States to continue to undersell the world.

Mr. Chisholm, now president of the trust, subsequently unknowingly corroborated the publisher's contention as follows: "If the paper industry should determine to capture the markets of the world, there is no nation that could stand against us with our natural resources and our national traits of character."

In spite of a publisher's protest, the Ways and Means Committee could not withstand the trust lobby or rely upon pledges of no increase in the price of print paper to publishers, and the duties were fixed with an increase from $1.20 to $1.67 per ton for pulp, and news print from $3 to $6 per ton.

Do not forget that previously practically no news print was imported—hence no revenue—because the United States could undersell the world with cheap free wood. At once this double increase was prohibitory and guaranteed the safety of an open combination of paper mills with arbitrary price powers from conditions of "a corner" on the water power and adjacent pulp timber, as will appear shortly in my argument.

PAPER TRUST FORMED.

"To understand the power of the press," "fear it," and "get further from the truth," the honorable Mr. Russell proceeded suddenly to the "consideration of a combination" and launched the International Paper Company, which soon adduced evidence "that there is no evidence whatever that the alleged combination of which Mr. Norris spoke was formed to put the price of paper up to 2½ cents per pound." Mr. Russell did not lie as to price. It went from 1.6 cents to over 3 cents per pound under the trust, and probably the trust never thought of a little 50 per cent increase to 2½ cents.

TRUST FINANCIAL HISTORY.

I shall briefly present the financial history of the trust as told by a standard journal of finance—the New York Commercial and Financial Chronicle—give pages for extended inquiry, and ask you to carefully note, in passing, the official utterances of the trust president on its success, policy, increase of land, property, and business; also its yearly statements, that show abnormal profits, etc.

The trust was incorporated January 17, 1898, in New York State. On February 1, 1898, Hatch & Foote, brokers, issued a statement, as follows:

The International Paper Company is capitalized with $25,000,000, 6 per cent, payable quarterly, cumulative preferred stock; $20,000,000, common, and $10,000,000, 6 per cent first consolidated mortgage gold bonds.

The appraised value of property to secure issue of bonds is $40,000,000. The net earnings now are more than enough to pay 6 per cent on bonds, 6 per cent on preferred stock, and 10 per cent on the common.

Competition can hardly prove successful if attempted, for the valuable water power and timber lands—400,000 acres—could not be easily duplicated or acquired.

Mr. Russell is the president; Hugh Chisholm, vice-president, and W. Miller, accountant. (Chronicle, vol. 67, p. 177.)

The first preferred dividend was declared in July, 1898, of 1¼ per cent, leaving a large surplus ($408,594) available for future dividends. Recall the fact, at this time, you paid about $2 per hundred pounds for print paper.

On August 27, 1898, appears the first official statement of the president of trust.

The mills are new and of the highest type of construction, and produce 70 to 80 per cent of the news paper of the United States. The water and steam power is 143,500 horsepower, propelling 100 pulp and paper machines and producing 1,475 tons of news and printing paper per day. The company holds title to 450,000 acres of timber in New York, New Hampshire, Maine, Vermont, and Michigan, and has a Government license to cut timber on 1,132,000 acres of woodlands in the Province of Quebec, Canada. (Chronicle, p. 448.)

December 31, 1898, volume 67, page 1459, of the Chronicle, appears the statement of the trust president when the stock was listed on the New York Exchange.

August 5, 1899, official statement of President Chisholm appears, as follows:

The profits are large and future assured; company controls 85 to 90 per cent of newspaper trade in the East. There is no serious competition, and prices are well maintained. Company controls about 1,000,000 acres (increase, 650,000 acres in last year) of timber in the United States—in New York, New Hampshire, Vermont, Maine, and Michigan—and in Canada it owns 1,600,000 acres of timber (increase of 468,000 in one year). Company uses 500,000 cords per annum and develops 155,000 horsepower, and has 100,000 horsepower available to develop—and this ability gives a very strong position. Canadian timber can all be brought down by water, shipped by canal to Glens Falls and from there to 28 mills by rail. (Chronicle, vol. 69, p. 281.)

President Chisholm stated, August 23, 1899:

The company has spent a large sum of money during the year past in improvements and is now engaged in building a factory which will make 10,000,000 paper bags per day. The company is also equipping mills to enable it to largely increase output of manila paper. These improvements and enlargements will call for expenditures of a large sum of money during the coming year. (Chronicle, September 2, 1899, p. 495.)

September 16, 1899, volume 69, page 593, Chronicle status of the International Paper Company. Regular preferred dividend declared, but not on the common stock; and a director said:

We are realizing greater profits than ever before in our history, but we felt that money earned could better be used for improvements, and hence our action.

October 28, 1899.—A $5,000,000 paper-bag company of Maine has been formed, with the International Paper Company the majority stockholder. (Chronicle, vol. 69, p. 909.)

The International Paper Company reduced its floating indebtedness from $1,500,000 to $800.000; business remarkable and shows healthy increase. (Vol. 70, p. 483.)

August 17, 1900, the Chronicle states that the product of the mills for the coming year is practically placed. (Chronicle, vol. 70, p. 743.)

President Chisholm reported for the year ending June 30, 1900:

	1899-1900.	1898-99.
For repairs and property improved		$1,000,000
Gross income	$18,707,635	15,063,568

ANNUAL REPORT ENDING JUNE 30, 1901.

President Hugh J. Chisholm says:

The gross sales for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1901, amount to $2,000,000 more than for the preceding. The policy adopted by the company to bring all its plants to the highest point of efficiency has been continued during the past year, and more than $1,100,000 has been expended for repairs and maintenance and charged to operating expenses of the company. In addition to this sum, over $1,300,000 has been expended in cash in permanent improvements and additional new mills and charged to the plant account.

The extensive improvements and additions which have been under way at different plants of the company are now nearly completed.

The earnings and balance sheet follow:

The fiscal year 1898-99 began June 30, 1898. Hence this $111,957.94 error in estimating for the first five and one-half months' business as to the first three items only of the January 17-June 30, 1898, column. All the other figures are official and accurate.

The figures in the statement show that had the trust declared a division of its net cash it could have paid off 33 per cent of the vast aggregate of its preferred, common, and bonds, $52,907,000, after a period of thirty-one months. It did not dare to reveal such a financial oppression of the publishers as these figures show; and consequently high salaries, vast accumulations of water power, timber, and securities were charged to operating expenses, as the official statements of the trust show, that its permanent property increased $7,959,450, and its increase of stock and bonds for the same period was $4,663,843, leaving $3,295,607 as an absolute charge on the real but not actual ledger profits of the combination. In addition a floating indebtedness of $1,500,000 was paid from the earnings and a sinking fund of $39,000 was started to retire the $3,031,386 divisional mortgage bonds that were given to certain trust stockholders as an absolute gift to equalize the plants that were bonded and unbonded before the trust merger.

The timber holdings were increased by 2,000,000 acres, and "operating expenses" paid the bill. About $2,000,000 was charged to the same account for the high trust officials, who received about as much in the trust salaries as they did in the income from their plants before the combination.

The startling statement, however, is this, that even after raiding the "cost of raw material and manufacture account" for about $10,000,000 for the unreasonable trust salaries, a "corner" on timber land and available water power and new plants, and after paying $4,764,475.50 dividends at the rate of 6 per cent on preferred stock and one dividend of 3 per cent on common—having previously paid $2,610,381 interest on bond issues that represented a $3,031,386 absolute "bond gift" and a $9,866,000 bond issue to finance the mortgages that represented a 60 per cent valuation of the plants and machinery merged into trust—after all this tax on the American publishers—the trust treasury challenges financial manipulators and publishers with the fact that it has $5,735,315 available in cash, accounts payable, and merchandise on hand and a surplus for dividends of $3,519,988—a sum large enough to pay 23 per cent on its issue of common stock of $17,442,800.

Thus far I have revealed the abnormal and enormous returns upon the capital invested as represented by the preferred and common stock of the trust, and now I shall attempt to show the astonishing and burdensome tax imposed upon publishers by trust print prices that have doubled at times from $1.60 per 100 pounds before the trust, for the reason, as the officials publicly announced, that "capital might have a fair return for money invested."

THE STOCK, COMMON AND PREFERRED, WATERED.

At first, the trust promotors did not claim that the common stock represented value received, but President Chisholm before the Industrial Commission now declares that the common trust stock was exchanged for value received in actual assets and property. On the stock exchange his declaration would be taken as a joke, on general principles; but I shall show the declaration to be false and prove to you that the International Paper Company common stock did not even represent "water," but a lighter substance, "promoters' hot air," as the actual value of the plants and machinery merged into the paper trust did not represent the preferred stock issue, which was watered and also salted with a $10,000,000 bond issue to finance the mortgages, that probably represents 60 per cent of the actual value of the mills merged into the paper trust.

A census bulletin, No. 99, September 30, 1901, is authority for the facts that four industrial combinations have been organized in the pulp and paper industry in the past decade, with a capital of $40,320,498, invested in land, buildings, machinery, tools, implements, and live capital utilized, employing 11,582 wage-earners, with wages of $4,996,528.

If the International Paper Company's preferred and common stock represented value received in property, as President Chisholm insists, the Hon. W. R. Merriam's census force dreamed about the other three combinations. Are you awake and aroused to a realizing sense of the true amount of actual valuation of trust property upon which publishers are paying increased print prices that trust property may realize "fair return" on the investment, as the paper president suggests? To cite special instances to prove the general proposition suggested by the census returns, I submit a few of many conclusive proofs.

CONCLUSIVE PROOF OF WATERED STOCK.

Of the 98 paper machines consolidated into the paper trust, 43 were of recent construction and pattern and the others junk or deteriorated to an extent that the paper president spent millions on them in spite of the fact that he said August 28, 1898, in his first official statement to the New York Stock Exchange, "The mills are new and of the highest type of construction."

Mr. Russell's mill, that had not made money for ten years, went into the trust at $22.000 per ton daily output ($10,000 per ton is a fair figure for building a new mill).

Warner's mill was merged at about $8,000,000, and five years before its capital was $300,000. These examples are typical of each mill in the trust merger.

PUBLISHERS BONDED FOR $35,000,000.

Modern paper mills can be built for $10,000 per ton daily output, and consequently the trust 1,500 tons' daily output could be duplicated for $15,000,000. It is not unfair, but generous, to state that the trust property merged was not actually worth $22,000,000.

Consequently the paper trust has bonded the American publishers for $35,000,000 at 14 per cent per year, and the increase of print prices from 60 to 100 per cent is the security that a monopoly of water power and 2,500,000 acres of pulp timber creates by a prohibitory wood-pulp tariff and retaliatory Canadian export duties.

TRUST INDUSTRIAL CONDITIONS—COMPETITION.

Competition is a nonentity in the news-print market, as every mill in the country quotes but one f. o. b. mill price.

The Great Northern Paper Company was started, but the Financial Chronicle states that the sales agent of the International became an officer of the Northern, and the laws of supply and demand were adjusted to the uniform high prices under regulated production.

A threat of divided territory restored the trust jurisdiction of prices in the Wisconsin mills district and the West.

Labor receives 2 per cent less wages and the value of its production has increased 20 per cent since 1890 census, (Bulletin 99.)

RAW MATERIAL MONOPOLY.

The paper trust has an absolute monopoly of the spruce timber adjacent and available to the valuable water power in this country. It controls over 2,500,000 acres of timber land. The census bulletin for September 30, 1901, on paper and pulp, states that while 598,229 cords of domestic spruce, valued at $2,855,872, were consumed in the manufacture of wood pulp for paper, only 134 of 763 reported establishments consumed domestic spruce. This statement, in connection with that of the paper trust president that the trust mills used 500,000 cords per annum and develop 155,000 horsepower—"an ability giving a very strong position"—is conclusive proof of the fact that the paper trust has an absolute monopoly of the domestic pulp for print paper, and that it has the sole benefit of practically every cent of the pulp tariff imposed by the United States and the export duty of Canada. Is it a wonder that "there is no serious competition and prices are well maintained," as President Chisholm officially stated, August 5, 1899? (Financial Chronicle, vol. 69, p. 281.)

TRUST EFFECT ON NEWSPAPERS.

To live, the newspapers have reduced the size of papers, and profitable small country papers have been reduced to items of expenses for their publishers. It is unnecessary to give details and offer causes of the increase of the price of print—the fraud of the present trust officers before the Ways and Means Committee and the startling profits, increase of trust property and cash surplus, as told in the New York Financial Chronicle, present facts and figures that should alarm every American publisher and cause a united effort to relieve the newspaper fraternity and the country of a trust that annuls every law of trade and legitimate production and distribution of wealth.

REMEDY FOR PAPER-TRUST EVIL.

The paper trust's increase of the American tariff provoked Canadian reprisals. The Province of Ontario prohibited the export of any logs from Crown lands and Quebec imposed a license fee of $1.50 per cord upon all logs cut for American use. The burden of these reprisals, the advance in wood prices, with its increased cost of paper, fell upon the publisher, who could not shift the burden upon his customers. Canada's spruce forests are limitless, extending from Labrador to the Yukon on the west and from the St. Lawrence to the Hudson Bay on the north. It encouraged the wood-pulp industry, but was forced to resent the action of the trust through Congressional enactments. The publishers attempted a reciprocity treaty through the joint high commission without success, and the paper trust fought vigorously every step taken by the publishers in order that its monopoly of the United States pulp supply should quarantine "no serious competition" from new mills that would immediately enter the field if pulp could be obtained upon equal conditions.

NEW MILLS.

Paper mills require cheap and ample water power, cheap spruce timber, cheap routes to market, improved machinery, and concentration in manufacture. If Canadian timber and pulp were free from duty, American mills would be built at once at Sault Ste. Marie and Niagara Falls, where they could develop unlimited and inexhausted cheap water power and produce cheaper and more tons per day with $15,000,000 invested than the International Paper Company does with $58,000,000.

Water routes and railroads offer direct and cheap methods of distribution from the aforesaid points on the American soil.

The trust may argue that the removal of the tariff would injure wage earners. The 1900 census states that the four combinations in paper and pulp employ 11,582 wage earners, and the value of the product is $30,725,020.

The same census of 1900 states that the American publishers number 15,305, employ 94,604 wage earners, with wages of $50,333,051, and the value of the products is $222,983,569.

I have shown by the census that wages have been reduced 2 per cent under the trust régime, but for the sake of argument and time I grant the trust's labor contention and submit that the greatest good to the greatest number, as displayed by the enormous differences in favor of the publishers and their 75,000,000 customers who are deprived of larger and cheaper publications, demands the immediate removal of the duty on wood and wood pulp for the manufacture of printing paper, 85 per cent of which is directly and the other 15 per cent indirectly under the domination of the International Paper Company.

SENATOR JOHN SHERMAN'S FEARS

in a speech in the Senate on the protective tariff are now too true. He said:

> The great obstacle and menace that stands in the way of the success of this tariff bill, that which more than all else will determine the length of its life, is whether the manufacturers of this country are willing to maintain free and fair competition in their various productions, so that the people may have the benefit of that which they claim as their right—free and full competition in domestic markets of domestic products.
> The great danger of this tariff is that capitalists and labor alike will combine and confederate in order to cheat the people of that which they have a right to enjoy. This protective policy must not degenerate into monopoly—into trusts or combinations to raise the prices against the spirit of the common law. If the notion prevails that it is right and just for the people who engage in the same pursuit to pool their issues, and by various devices to cheat the people, then the protective-tariff system will disappear as rapidly as it sprung into existence.

No statesman to-day can better describe the condition of the paper trust and tariff.

FACTS, NOT THEORIES.

The trust's absolute monopoly of raw material and the destruction of competition are facts, not theories, and the publishers of this country must follow the prophecy of the illustrious statesman, John Sherman, in destroying the protective tariff on the paper trust's monopolized raw material.

TARIFF CHANGES.

Tariff changes proceed slowly, and the trust, with its millions, has power to delay reform. This trust has destroyed competition, created a monopoly of raw material; it ignores the press, legislature, and the law. Its policy is directed by great executive ability and legal ability with cash.

The courts decided that the trust mode of organization of monopolies was illegal. Then the great corporation method of the Diamond Match and the paper trust attempted to evade the spirit of the law, but the courts are refusing to enforce their contracts and are annulling their charters in Michigan and Illinois. The tariff is greater than the courts in the regulation and destruction of the paper trust.

The first campaign of the warfare with the trusts gave victory to the people, and now the publishers in their own interests can and should annihilate the paper trust with the "power of the press" that the trust feared before the Ways and Means Committee, where its first president denied even the consideration of combination to raise prices. The paper trust owed its birth to false representations before the committee, where its promoters lied to obtain a prohibitory tariff that guaranteed a monopoly of the paper market in the United States.

PUBLISHERS' TRUST.

If the American publishers will trust the "power of the press" and foreclose a few political mortgages on the political honors of a few trusted men at Washington, the tariff can be removed on pulp, competition restored, and print prices lowered 60 to 100 per cent to the American publishers.

CONGRESSIONAL PITFALLS.

The pitfalls of Congressional legislation are many, deep, and puzzling, but I shall propose a resolution for the Illinois Press Association that can not be evaded in Congress unless the penalty of "political ostracism" is paid by Senators and Congressmen who oppose the united interests of publishers. I know the power of the trust, but I know also the power of the press is greater in Congress if the newpapers stand half as united as the mills of the paper trust.

I have indulged in facts and not fancies and given authority for statements of the paper trusts finances, revealed its enormous and abnormal profits, increases in its property, and its unwarranted manipulation of prices.

Mr. LOUD. I now yield twenty minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. SALMON].

Mr. SALMON. Mr. Chairman, I intend to support this bill with my vote, but before the vote is taken I am anxious to state the reasons why I shall support the bill. I believe that it is a good measure for the benefit of the rural free delivery. I have been interested in the rural free delivery since my attention was first attracted to the benefits it would give to the people in the country.

When I entered Congress, two years ago, there was but one rural free-delivery route in my district. Since that time there have been established some 15 or 16, and I believe that every one of them is giving great satisfaction to the people along the routes. I believe that this system will be continued and extended until the entire country will be covered by its benefits.

Now, it has been argued here that there was more or less politics connected with this bill, or with this system. I care not whether there are politics in it or not, there can be no more partisanship exercised under this bill than there is at the present time. I know, and I am willing to yield all this to the fact that the Administration that is in power has the right to the large end of the loaf, and I can only ask that the Administration yield to me and to the minority party a portion of the appointments that are to be given out. But, so far as I am concerned in this matter, I have no complaint to make. I have been used fairly, I have been used well by all the Departments. In this rural free-delivery matter I have been consulted, and I have had my requests granted, so far as I could reasonably ask.

But I notice that those who are opposed to the bill, while they are arguing that it is not upon political grounds, are, with one exception, those who have had already established the greater number of rural free-delivery routes in their districts. Therefore it strikes me that in the minds of some who are opposed to this bill there is a feeling that the powers that they will exercise under it are not as great as under the present system.

My friend, the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. FOSTER], who styled himself a new member, in his speech the other day said before the end of the coming summer he would have 100 rural free-delivery routes established in his district. His speech was filled with commendation—and, I might say, filled with "taffy"—for the favored few who would be appointed as carriers in his district, as well as for the Department who made the appointments.

But unreasonably, as I thought at the time, and unjustly he criticised the chairman of the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads for the course that he was taking; and he insinuated that the chairman of the committee was not in sympathy with the rural free-delivery system, but was proposing to revolutionize it to its detriment. I do not believe, Mr. Chairman, that the system proposed by this bill is intended to establish an inferior service. I believe that it will improve the service rather that deteriorate it.

We come then to the change that is made. The change is only as to the compensation the carriers are to receive for their service as such. In every other respect the contractor will be subject to the rules and regulations of the Department the same as the carrier who is appointed; and he must at all times observe those rules and regulations as though he were an appointee. His compensation, however, is regulated by a different system. He receives for his services what he deems them worth after careful and deliberate consideration. Under the appointive system his compensation is controlled by the Department. It fixes the amount that he is to receive. Under the competitive system he fixes the amount himself—he says what he will do this service for. Now, it is an absurdity to claim that any man will do this work without receiving just and fair compensation for it.

Mr. BROMWELL. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. SALMON. Certainly.

Mr. BROMWELL. These salaries will probably be fixed by the special agent who establishes the route. Now, there will ultimately be 50,000 routes. Is it then safe to vest in the hands of a mere clerk of the Post-Office Department the power to fix a salary at his discretion?

Mr. SALMON. I say that it is not a safe policy; and, furthermore, I say that it is an unreasonable way of fixing the salary. Suppose a man is sent from here to fix the salary of the carrier who is to transport the mail over a route of 25 miles. The inspector fixes the salary by merely going over the route once. He knows nothing of the changes in the seasons; he knows nothing of the variation in the condition of the roads as the seasons succeed each other. The man who is carrying the mail is the best judge of the requirements to which he is to be subjected.

The system of bidding which is proposed by this bill is very different from what it was in the old times, when, for instance, the construction of bridges was put up to be bid for. Under that system one man would bid against another, lower and lower, and a man might often take a contract at less than the price for which he could afford to do the work; but here the man sits down in his own house and consults with his own family and friends.

He knows the route that he is to go over; he knows the work that he is to perform; he can calculate how much time it will take him each day of the year to carry the mail on that route. And he says, "I can do it for so much money." He takes into consideration not only the time he will spend, but the conditions under which he is situated—the advantages which the contract will be to him.

He says, "I can use one horse a day in going my rounds with the mails, which will take me on the average five hours; and when I return I will put that horse in the stable and take my other and go out on my lot and plow corn or do anything else about the farm that will occupy the rest of the day." The next day he changes the work on which he puts the horses. And so he goes on through the year.

How would it be with a man appointed to do that service under the policy proposed by the opponents of this bill? We will suppose a man has been appointed. He is a Government employee; that is his business; that is his work; and when he has finished that work he expects to receive compensation for it sufficient to support him during his whole time. I say that the service would not be as well conducted under the appointive system as under the contract system.

The man appointed is not interested in saving his time as the other man is. He says to himself, "This is all I have to do for the day. When I have made my rounds, I can go home, and I have nothing more to do." All he wants is to get his wages—to get his good pay for his whole time. Yet he renders service for only half the time.

Not so with the man who takes this service under contract. He calculates that it is to occupy him half his time, and he provides for a proper and profitable use of the other half. He is interested in going over his route as rapidly as possible. He is interested in saving his time while making his round; not stopping to talk with the man who has leisure to sit on the fence and talk with him. He hastens through his work, and when it is done he goes home to attend to his other work; and I say that the man who has a job of work to do, who goes out and does it with his might, does it better than he who dallies along with it and takes more time than is necessary for its completion.

The service therefore that would be rendered by the man who contracts to do this work would be better service than the other. It has been suggested here by the opponents of the bill that there would be contracts taken for less than a man could afford to do the work. I submit that is not necessarily true; but if he did do it for one year for less than the work was worth, and for less than what he should receive, it would be corrected the next, and it would be adjusted in that particular, so that he would receive a just and fair compensation for the service that he rendered. Under the appointive system it would be otherwise.

The man who gets the appointment is the favored man, and his neighbors who are about him, knowing the service that he performs and knowing the amount that he received for that service, would be envious of him, would be dissatisfied, because they would say he can make more money out of the little work that he does than they can make by working from sun to sun. This would be regulated in a way that would be satisfactory to the people of the neighborhood. It has been suggested that a less reliable man would get the contract for doing this work than would be appointed.

That to my mind is not true either. He has to be taken from the neighborhood that is to be served by this route. He has to be one of that community. He has to be a resident there and known by all the people there in that community; and do you suppose that an irresponsible man, a man who is dishonest, a man who can not be trusted, or a man that will not do the work that he has to do in a manner that will be acceptable to the people, would be permitted to get a contract of that kind without objection?

And the discretion that is given to the Postmaster-General here is sufficient to reject all such thought as that. The claim that is made that the Postmaster-General has too great power and could use it for political purposes makes no impression upon my mind, either. I care not to which party he may belong. He must show a decent regard for the sentiment of the people that are to be served by this rural free-delivery service; he can not turn down a man and reject him merely upon the ground of his politics.

If he is a man that lives in that district and is a man of good moral character, can read and write, and has all the qualifications required by this bill, it would be an imputation upon the character of that man that his neighbors would never permit, whatever party they may belong to, and I therefore feel that we are safe, so far as that goes, in having the privilege used of rejecting an applicant upon that ground. For this and for many reasons I feel that this bill has been drawn the very best that it can be drawn.

I would not object, really; I would not object if it were left to the people of the district, but when we leave it to the lowest bidder who can fulfill all the other requirements of the bill, I believe that you are leaving it to the people of that district who are to be served. I think that the committee deserve great credit for formulating the bill so carefully and so concisely as this has been framed, covering so well the ground that it covers, and I hope that the bill will pass, for I believe that the service will be greatly benefited by putting it upon the contract principle. [Applause.]

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 11728) to classify the rural free-delivery service and fix the compensation to employees thereof, and had come to no resolution thereon.

HOUSE BILL WITH SENATE AMENDMENTS REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, House bill 8587, for the allowance of certain claims for stores and supplies reported by the Court of Claims under the provisions of the act approved March 3, 1883, and commonly known as the Bowman Act, and for other purposes—to the Committee on War Claims.

PERSONAL REQUEST.

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. GRIGGS] to make a personal request.

Mr. GRIGGS. Mr. Speaker, it was agreed by the supporters of the bill before the House that I should make the closing argument for the bill. That will happen to-morrow under the rule that has already been adopted by the House. I have been put on the committee to attend the funeral of my friend who died a day or two ago [Mr. POLK] and whose funeral occurs to-morrow. I desire simply to ask the consent of the House, with the understanding that it will not delay the vote on the bill that will be taken on Monday, that I be given one hour at the meeting of the House on Monday to conclude this debate.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia asks the unanimous consent of the House, because of the facts stated, that he be allotted one hour on Monday to close the debate in favor of the pending bill. Is there objection?

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. Chairman, I think the majority of the committee were willing to conclude the debate to-day and take a vote to-morrow. The gentleman has had ample opportunity to speak to-day. The gentlemen who are with me in managing this fight are not here. It was understood there was to be nothing but debate to-day and to-morrow, and therefore in their absence I must object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made.

Mr. LOUD. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly (at 5 o'clock p. m.) the House adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, March 8, 1902.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D.

THE RECORD.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the Journal will stand as approved.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I desire to correct the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is it the RECORD or the Journal?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. The RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Then that will come after the approval of the Journal. Without objection, the Journal will stand as approved. The Chair hears none.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I desire to correct the RECORD on page 2509 of yesterday's proceedings. After I had concluded my remarks and was in the act of resuming my seat, I was interrupted by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. ROBINSON], and the following colloquy occurred:

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. How many carriers has the gentleman in his district?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I think there are 19. How many has the gentleman in his?

There, Mr. Speaker, the RECORD stops as printed this morning; but the gentleman from Indiana continued and answered the question thus:

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. None.

Now, that part is taken entirely out of the RECORD, and when the RECORD came to me last night by the carrier for the Public Printer I found the following changes were made in the colloquy:

How many carriers has the gentleman recommended in his district?

The word "recommended" being inserted in the question put to me puts an entirely different question to me, and if it had been asked I would have given an entirely different answer, because I have not recommended all the carriers that have been appointed in my district. Now, then, the final answer of the gentleman from Indiana, in which the word "none" appears in the stenographic report brought to me last night was stricken out entirely and in its stead the following language was inserted:

I have something like 50 routes, but no carriers to my credit.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I saw that those changes had been made, and the carrier said to me that Mr. ROBINSON desired to call the changes to my attention. I looked over it and saw how entirely the changes had varied the question, and that it put me in a different attitude from that in which I was really put by the question first put and answered by me, and I sent the gentleman this message, which I thought as kindly a one as I possibly could send, that as it was a colloquy between himself and myself, have it eliminated entirely from the RECORD or inserted entirely; but instead of that only a part appears, and that is as I have just read, to wit:

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. How many carriers has the gentleman in his district?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I think there are 19. How many has the gentleman in his?

Now, the RECORD should stand as corrected:

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. None.

So that, Mr. Speaker, if there is to be construed an imputation upon the character of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GAINES] that he is opposed to the present Loud bill in this House because he has a few carriers scattered over his illustrious district, carrying the mails to the honest farmers of his district, then a like imputation rests upon the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. ROBINSON], and in all justice, Mr. Speaker, I ask that the RECORD speak as I spoke; that the RECORD speak as he spoke; nothing more and nothing less.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry. Does this require unanimous consent?

The SPEAKER. It does not. The correction of the RECORD is privileged, but if the gentlemen do not agree in respect to it, a resolution of the House will have to be submitted.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. In view of the fact that the statement made does not correctly give the proceedings of yesterday, in which I am fortified by the statements of the stenographer who took the debate, that it does not either state the facts that occurred here, or the facts about which we were speaking in so far as I am concerned, then I shall object to the correction of the RECORD to read in that manner.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I had the stenographic report last night myself in my own hands and have quoted a copy of it in my remarks.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee must realize the fact that this is not a matter within the control of the presiding officer, and there is nothing before the House now unless he offers a resolution or makes a motion.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I make the motion that the RECORD stand as stenographically reported by the Reporter of this House, and that would put the word "none" in the RECORD as the answer of the gentleman from Indiana identically in the reply he made to me.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the gentleman had better reduce his motion to writing, so that there will be no controversy. If the gentleman is not ready he can draw it, and the Chair will permit some unanimous consents to come in.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I will do that, Mr. Speaker.

BRIDGE ACROSS MISSOURI RIVER AT SOUTH OMAHA, NEBR.

Mr. MERCER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 4607) to provide for the construction of a bridge and approaches thereto across the Missouri River at or near South Omaha, Nebr.

The bill was read at length.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read at length.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The amendments recommended by the committee were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. MERCER, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

SEC. 2. That in the said western district there is hereby formed a third division, which shall be known as the Harrison division.

SEC. 3. That all process, civil and criminal, hereafter issued against any person or persons residing in either of the counties of Baxter, Boone, Carroll, Madison, Marion, Newton, or Searcy, which counties shall constitute the Harrison division, shall be made returnable to the courts for the Harrison division, to be held at the city of Harrison.

All process, civil and criminal, now pending in the courts, respectively, at Fort Smith or at Batesville, against persons residing in any of the counties hereby incorporated in the Harrison division, shall be disposed of and determined in those courts, respectively.

SEC. 4. That the terms of the United States circuit and district courts for the Harrison division of the western judicial district of the State of Arkansas shall be held at Harrison, in the county of Boone, on the first Mondays in March and August.

SEC. 5. That there shall be appointed, in the manner required by law, a clerk, who shall keep his office at the city of Harrison.

SEC. 6. That all acts and parts of acts in conflict with this act be, and the same are hereby, repealed; and this act shall take effect and be in force from and after its passage.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

Amend lines 12 and 13 by striking out the word "first" in line 12 and inserting "second," and strike out "March" and insert "April."

In line 13 strike out "August" and insert "October."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The question is on agreeing to the amendments.

The question was taken, and the amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. DINSMORE, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

COMMITTEE ON BANKING AND CURRENCY.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Banking and Currency be authorized to have printed and bound such matter for the use of said committee as it may deem necessary in connection with subjects considered or to be considered by said committee.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I would ask the gentleman from New Jersey if that resolution is in the usual form and limits the amount of printing to $500?

Mr. FOWLER. I did not hear the gentleman's question.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Does the resolution offered by the gentleman limit the expenditure for printing to $500, the limitation applied by the rules?

Mr. FOWLER. There is no limitation here, but I do not apprehend that it will be any considerable portion of $500. It is the ordinary printing for the committee's own purposes.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. That is what I wanted to know.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The question was taken; and the resolution was agreed to.

SPANISH CLAIMS COMMISSION.

Mr. RAY of New York. Mr. Speaker, I present a conference report. I ask unanimous consent to omit the reading of the report itself and read the statement.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York presents a conference report and asks unanimous consent to dispense with the reading of the report and that the statement be read. Without objection, that course will be pursued.

The conference report is as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8586) amending the act of March 2, 1901, entitled "An act to carry into effect the stipulations of article 7 of the treaty between the United States and Spain, concluded on the 10th day of December, 1898," having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

The Senate recedes from its amendment to the House bill, and agrees to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

"That section 4 of the act entitled 'An act to carry into effect the stipulations of article 7 of the treaty between the United States and Spain, concluded on the 10th day of December, 1898,' approved March 2, 1901, is hereby amended by adding thereto the following provisions:

"'Such rules and mode of procedure shall conform, so far as practicable, to the mode of procedure and practice of the circuit courts of the United States. The said Commission created by this act is vested with the same powers now possessed by the circuit and district courts of the United States to compel the attendance and testimony of parties, claimants and witnesses, to preserve order, and to punish for contempt, and to compel the production of any books or papers deemed material to the consideration of any claim or matter pending before said Commission.

"'That the said Commission is also vested with all the powers now possessed by the circuit and district courts of the United States to take or procure testimony in foreign countries. Such testimony may be taken, pursuant to the provisions of existing laws and the rules and practice of the district and circuit courts of the United States, so far as applicable, before the Commission or any commissioner or commissioners appointed under the provisions of this act.

"'That the marshal of the United States for the District of Columbia or his deputies shall serve all processes issued by said Commission, preserve order in the place of sitting, and execute the orders of said Commission; and outside of the District of Columbia the writs of said Commission shall be executed by United States marshals or their deputies in their respective districts.

"'That said Commission or any commissioner appointed by it to take testimony in foreign countries is hereby authorized to appoint an officer to serve any subpœna or process issued by said Commission or commissioner.

"'When testimony is to be taken before any commissioner appointed by said Commission within any district or Territory, the clerk of any court of the United States for such district or Territory shall, on application of either party or of his agent, issue a subpœna for such witness, commanding him to appear and testify before the commissioner at a time and place stated in the subpœna; and if any witness, after being duly served with such subpœna, refuses or neglects to appear, or after appearing refuses to testify, not being privileged from giving testimony, and such refusal or neglect is proven to the satisfaction of any judge of the court whose clerk issues the subpœna, such judge may proceed to enforce obedience to the process or punish the disobedience, as any court of the United States may proceed in case of disobedience to process of subpœna to testify issued by such court; and the production before such commissioner of any paper or writing, written instrument, book, or other document may also be required in the manner prescribed in section 869 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.'"

The House recedes from its nonconcurrence with the Senate amendments and agrees to the same with amendments as above set forth and stated.

GEO. W. RAY,
JOHN J. JENKINS,
S. W. T. LANHAM,
Managers on the part of the House.

S. M. CULLOM,
H. C. LODGE,
JNO. T. MORGAN,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The statement was read, as follows:

Statement to accompany conference report on the disagreeing vote of the two Houses on the bill H. R. 8586, "An act amending the act of March 2, 1901, entitled 'An act to carry into effect the stipulations of article 7 of the treaty between the United States and Spain concluded on the 10th day of December, 1898.'"

The amendment of the Senate struck out all of the House bill after the enacting clause and inserted new provisions, and also amended the title in such a manner as to make an entirely new and independent act.

The amendments agreed upon restore the title of the bill, so as to make the action of the two Houses, if agreed to by the respective bodies, an amendment to the original act creating the Spanish Treaty Claims Commission, and accomplishes the purposes sought to be established by both Houses, viz:

1. The amendment as agreed upon makes the rules and mode of procedure authorized by the original act conform, so far as practicable, to the mode of procedure and practice of the circuit courts of the United States.

2. Power is conferred upon the said Commission, the same as now possessed by the circuit and district courts of the United States, to compel the attendance and testimony of parties, claimants and witnesses; to preserve order and punish for contempt committed in the presence of the Commission, and to compel the production of books and papers material to the consideration of the matter pending before the Commission.

3. The Commission is also authorized and empowered to take testimony in foreign countries, and to that end is vested with the powers possessed by the circuit and district courts of the United States, and such testimony is to be taken before the Commission or commissioners appointed by it pursuant to the provisions of existing law and the rules and practice of said courts.

4. The marshal of the District of Columbia is to execute process issued by the Commission in said District, and the marshals and deputy marshals of the United States are to execute process without the District of Columbia, and in foreign countries the Commission or commissioners may designate some suitable person to serve such process.

5. When testimony in the United States or any district or Territory thereof is to be taken without the District of Columbia, the clerk of the United States court in the district where the testimony is to be taken is to issue the subpœna, and if the witness neglects or fails or refuses to appear or to testify after appearing, such contempt is to be reported to the court from which the subpœna issued and such court proceeds to punish for the contempt or disobedience.

6. The amendments and bill as agreed upon substantially removes the objections heretofore urged against vesting the Commission with the power to punish for contempts, and confers power upon the Commission to procure testimony necessary to the matters pending before it in all the States and in all the Territories of the United States and in foreign countries. No power is conferred not now possessed by the circuit and district courts of the United States except the designation of a commissioner authorized by the act to take testimony in foreign countries.

GEO. W. RAY,
JOHN J. JENKINS,
S. W. T. LANHAM,
Conferees on the part of the House.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, this conference report is on a matter that led to a considerable discussion when the original question was before the House. The form of the proposition in the conference report is perhaps clear to those who have fully studied it, but I for one would like to hear some explanation from the chairman as to how it affects the constitutional difficulties that were suggested when the bill was formerly before the House. It was a matter on which the House was very evenly divided, or nearly equally divided, and the idea of the Committee on the Judiciary was that the constitutional questions could be avoided that were involved in the bill as discussed at that time.

Mr. RAY of New York. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. BARTLETT. Before the gentleman proceeds I should like him to answer this question also. I do not see anything in this conference report, which virtually reports a new bill, which provides for the payment of the witnesses. Your bill provides that all the testimony in the United States shall be taken before the clerk of a circuit court.

Mr. RAY of New York. It provides what?

Mr. BARTLETT. For the taking of testimony in the United States of people who do not live in the District of Columbia before the clerk of the circuit court.

Mr. RAY of New York. Oh, no; the gentleman is entirely mistaken.

Mr. BARTLETT. I so understood it, but I may not have caught it correctly. In other words, it provides that the clerk of the circuit court shall issue the subpœna to compel the attendance of witnesses before the tribunal which is to take the testimony. I think I state that correctly.

Mr. RAY of New York. That is right.

Mr. BARTLETT. Now, if you locate the commission to take this testimony in cities or towns where a circuit court is held, then you necessarily compel the witnesses sometimes in my State to go as much as 100 or 150 miles in order to give that testimony, and if they do not go they are subject to process for contempt provided for in this bill.

Mr. RAY of New York. It is not provided in this bill.

Mr. BARTLETT. Ought you not to provide some means of paying these parties who are compelled to come and testify for the Government, or for the party suing the Government, who are compelled under this process to testify at the risk of being subject to contempt proceedings if they violate the subpœna?

Mr. RAY of New York. We do not need to put it in here. Mr. Speaker, the provisions here are simply an amendment to section 4 of the original bill creating the Spanish War Claims Commission. The Commission found itself without power to take testimony in foreign countries at all; without power to take testimony in the island of Cuba, where the most of the witnesses will be found, although some of them may be in Spain. It will be impossible for either side to bring these witnesses to the United States to give testimony in the great majority of instances.

Now, the original bill and the general law provide in terms for procuring witnesses, and of course paying witnesses, under the terms of the existing law; and no witness will be compelled to attend either in behalf of the Government or in behalf of the claimant without payment of fees provided for witnesses.

Mr. BARTLETT. May I interrupt the gentleman again?

Mr. RAY of New York. Certainly.

Mr. BARTLETT. As I caught the reading of the conference report, it strikes out all of the original bill passed by the House and substitutes the Senate bill.

Mr. RAY of New York. Oh, no; the gentleman did not hear correctly. Now, the Senate struck out all of the House bill and inserted new provisions. The Senate amended the title, substituting a title of its own, so that they had an entirely independent act, and did not purport to amend the original act.

Now, the House did not agree to that. We did not undertake new and independent legislation, and this statement that has been read simply explains what the Senate did originally in that regard, and it is set forth in the statement that that action has been changed by the conference. We have restored the provisions of the House bill with certain modifications, and we have restored the title that was in the House bill, so that the amendments agreed upon by the conference committee are substantially the House bill with modifications, and with some provisions proposed by the Senate.

The conference agreement is this: The rules that were authorized by the original act are to be made by this Commission in conformity to, so far as possible, the rules and practice in the circuit and district courts of the United States, so that the practice before this Commission will be the same as the practice in the circuit courts of the United States. That is certainly wise and proper.

The next provision is one that will enable this Commission to maintain order here where it sits in the city of Washington, and to punish centempt committed in the presence of the Commission—a necessary power—or else it could not hold orderly sessions.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman whether the bill as amended by the conference report does not authorize this Commission to issue subpœnas to enforce attendance of witnesses by process of contempt?

Mr. RAY of New York. I was coming to that. We expressly provide, in lieu of what was in the House bill before, that all process for witnesses shall be issued by the clerk of the district or circuit courts of the United States, or the Territorial court, if it be such, and that if the witness fails or neglects or refuses to appear and testify, that the punishment for the contempt shall be in the court issuing the subpœna. In the District of Columbia it would be in the United States courts here; in the Territories it would be in the United States courts there; in the State it would be the district court of the United States for the district in which the subpœna issues. We did that in order to obviate and remove, so far as possible, the objections that are raised here.

Mr. LACEY. That is the identical question I wanted to hear my friend about. I wish he would read that part of the bill as the conference committee have agreed upon it, for I would like to see if it obviates the difficulties that we were discussing the other day when the bill was up.

Mr. RAY of New York (reading):

When testimony is to be taken before any commissioner appointed by said Commission within any district or Territory the clerk of any court of the United States for such district or Territory shall, on application of either party or his agent, issue a subpœna for such witness, commanding him to appear and testify before the Commission at a time and place stated in the subpœna; and if any witness after being duly served with such subpœna refuses or neglects to appear or, after appearing, refuses to testify, not being privileged from giving testimony, and such refusal or neglect is proven to the satisfaction of any judge of the court whose clerk issued the subpœna, such judge may proceed to enforce obedience to the process or punish the disobedience as any court of the United States may proceed in cases of disobedience to process of subpœna to testify issued by said court, and the production before such commissioner of any paper or writing, written instrument, book, or other document may also be required in the manner prescribed in section 869 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

Mr. LACEY. Will the gentleman yield again?

Mr. RAY of New York. Yes.

Mr. LACEY. That does not answer my question; that only provides as to testimony to be taken outside of the Commission. I want to know, and would like to have the gentleman point out that part of the proposed measure which provides for taking testimony before the Commission and the disobedience of the subpœna issued by the Commission itself.

Mr. RAY of New York. Well, I have already stated that; but I will read the provision. The Commission sits here in the District of Columbia. Section 4, which is amended, provides for the making of rules and regulations by the Commission. It did not provide what those rules and regulations should be; that part of the bill is therefore amended as to the rules in this manner:

Such rules and mode of procedure shall conform, so far as practicable, to the mode of procedure and practice of the circuit courts of the United States. The said Commission created by this act is vested with the same powers now possessed by the circuit and district courts of the United States to compel the attendance and testimony of parties, claimants, and witnesses, to preserve order, and to punish for contempt, and to compel the production of any books or papers deemed material to the consideration of any claim or matter pending before said Commission.

That the said Commission is also vested with all the powers now possessed by the circuit and district courts of the United States to take or procure testimony in foreign countries. Such testimony may be taken, pursuant to the provisions of existing laws and the rules and practice of the district and circuit courts of the United States, so far as applicable, before the Commission or any commissioner or commissioners appointed under the provisions of this act.

Now, we have provided (and I have read the later provision) that wherever a subpœna is issued to compel the attendance of witnesses, it must be issued by the clerk of the United States court in the District of Columbia or elsewhere; and the power of punishment in that regard is vested in the court. But the Commission itself may punish for contempts committed in its immediate presence and may keep order. There is no possible constitutional or other objection to that, because the Constitution says that we may create tribunals inferior to the Supreme Court, and the decisions of the Supreme Court are to the effect that we may vest these inferior tribunals with the power of those courts. But we have so limited the power that this Commission may simply keep order and punish contempts committed in its immediate presence. Witnesses are compelled to attend by the courts of the United States, and if there be contempt in regard to the matter the United States courts will provide for it.

Mr. LACEY. Will the gentleman yield to me for five minutes?

Mr. RAY of New York. I will yield to the gentleman, but I want to retain the floor.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, this question is one that was discussed perhaps a couple of weeks ago, the gentlemen from Massachusetts [Mr. MOODY] and myself calling the attention of the Committee on the Judiciary to the very doubtful constitutional authority to enact certain portions of this bill, and also the doubtful propriety of enacting them even if the constitutional right existed. A part of the objection raised at that time has been met by amendments; another part of the objection still remains in the proposition of the conference committee, and that is this: That Commission is vested with the power to issue subpœnas and to enforce attendance of witnesses and to have the general powers with reference to contempt ordinarily vested in a court. In these days when the question of a power, the extreme power of the courts to issue the process of injunction and to follow that process up by proceedings for contempt in all sorts of controversies, is the subject of general dispute, and Congress is appealed to to enact legislation to limit these powers in the Federal courts, we are met by this proposition of the conference committee to enlarge the powers of a mere commission and give them the authority to issue subpœnas and to arrest for contempt.

Heretofore in matters of this kind the powers of these commissions and of tribunals that are not courts have been limited. Such tribunals have been vested with power to issue subpœnas, and in case of disobedience to a subpœna that constitutes a misdemeanor, and the party charged with such an offense is entitled to his day in court. In this case it is proposed to give to this mere Commission—a board of arbitration substantially—the powers of a court as to contempt.

Mr. LANHAM. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. LACEY. Certainly.

Mr. LANHAM. Do you not think that this Commission is a tribunal under all proper construction and by constitutional authority?

Mr. LACEY. I do not think it is a tribunal within the meaning of the Constitution, because the Constitution provides for "tribunals inferior to the Supreme Court." Now, this is not "inferior to the Supreme Court." In a certain sense it is superior to it. At least it is independent of it.

Mr. LANHAM. Oh, no.

Mr. LACEY. It is substantially above all the courts; it is a tribunal in and of itself with the final right to settle these questions. It is not given the authority of a court in the broad sense of creating a tribunal or a court. There is no writ of error from this court to the Supreme Court of the United States. It is a commission, as the Interstate Commerce Commission is a commission. It is a commission organized just as any other commissions are, merely for the purpose of investigating and reporting upon certain things. Imagine the Industrial Commission issuing warrants of commitment for contempt!

Now, as to the power to enforce attendance before a tribunal or commission of this character, I think we ought to draw the line and not give this Commission the power of committing for contempt. The power to compel the attendance of witnesses—to enforce their attendance by indictment as for misdemeanor in violating a subpœna—ought to be given just as it is given to courts-martial or Congressional committees. A court-martial can summon a private citizen who is not an enlisted man or an officer of the Army. If he disobeys the subpœna the court-martial can not bring him up for contempt. But he can be punished by a court for a misdemeanor. The proposition here would be in a case like that to give the court-martial power to punish a citizen for contempt. We refuse to do that; we merely provide that in case of a citizen refusing to obey the subpœna he may be indicted and punished in the courts and may have his day in court, instead of having his day in a court-martial. We are unwilling to trust a court-martial with these high powers to arrest and imprison a citizen, and we ought not to trust it to a mere commission such as this is. I think it is a mistake to accept this proposition in the form it is set out in the conference report. I call the attention of the House to it, and in doing so I believe I have done my duty, whatever the result may be.

Mr. WARNOCK. Will the gentleman [Mr. LACEY] yield for one question?

Mr. LACEY. Certainly.

Mr. WARNOCK. Suppose this Commission has no power to compel the attendance of witnesses, would not that leave all their investigations practically ex parte?

Mr. LACEY. Not at all. I am not suggesting they should have no power. It is the method as to how to get at it. We had the question up the other day as to the power of the receiver and register in the land office to bring witnesses before them. They have the power to issue subpœnas, but no power to punish for contempt.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. LACEY. Just a minute more to answer the question.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from New York [Mr. RAY] yield?

Mr. RAY of New York. I yield a minute more.

Mr. LACEY. Just long enough to answer the question.

Mr. WARNOCK. Yes; I would like to know.

Mr. LACEY. And instead of authorizing the receiver or register to punish for contempt the action of witnesses in refusing to appear it becomes a misdemeanor and they are punished by indictment, just as though they refused to appear before a Congressional committee. The committee can not punish a man for contempt, but the courts will punish him. This authority ought to be given to the courts and not to the Commission, and you get the witnesses, but get them in a way by which their rights are protected by proceedings in courts of justice.

Mr. RAY of New York. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman misrepresents to the House the conference report, not that he intends to, but simply because he does not understand it. When we had the matter here before, gentlemen objected because it was said the power to punish for contempt ought to be relegated in a matter such as this to the circuit and district courts of the United States. Now, the House voted their proposition down more than two to one, but still we thought that if we could avoid that objection on the part of any member that we would do it; so the Senate and the House conferees unanimously have eliminated the power of this Commission to punish for contempt except in certain cases, to issue subpœnas, and have provided that the subpœnas shall be issued by the clerk of the court, and that when there is any contempt committed, that the contempt shall be punished under the laws of the United States in the court and by the court issuing the subpœna. Now, I hope that will settle that matter.

We also provide for the taking of testimony in foreign countries, and there will be no power to punish for contempt there. We do provide that this Commission shall have the power of the district and circuit courts of the United States, and that it may punish contempt in its presence, because we provide for the keeping of order by the Commission where they hold their sessions here in the District of Columbia.

Mr. LACEY rose.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield to a question?

Mr. RAY of New York. I have given the gentleman his time.

Mr. LACEY. But, Mr. Speaker, the gentleman says that I misrepresent a proposition, when I try to get information from him.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from New York yield?

Mr. RAY of New York. Why, I yield to a question.

Mr. LACEY. If the gentleman's statement is correct, I have no objection to this bill. I have tried to find out from him what particular provision there was in relation to the issuance of subpœnas through the Commission in Washington, and whether or not the process of contempt would issue from that Commission in case of violation of the subpœna.

Mr. RAY of New York. There is not a word in this amendment about the Commission issuing subpœnas. There is a provision in it that the clerk of the United States court shall issue subpœnas. Now, I have asserted that five or six times, I have read it, and I trust the gentleman understands it.

Mr. LACEY. Well, if the gentleman will point out that paragraph or part of it which authorizes the clerk of the district court of the District of Columbia or the circuit court to issue subpœnas for the Commission sitting in the District, and enlighten my ignorance upon that question, I will be glad to have him do it. This is a conference report, and there is no need for any feeling upon the subject. The gentleman is here to give us light, and I suppose I have a right to ask him for it without being lectured.

Mr. RAY of New York. Why, certainly, and I am glad to give it, but I do not want the gentleman to ask me to point him to a provision of the amendment to the original act which is not in the act, and which is not in the amendments proposed by the conference. He asks me to point out the provision where this Commission is authorized to issue subpœnas, and I tell him over and over again that there is nothing of the kind either in the amendment agreed to or in the House bill, but that we do provide that the clerk of the United States court in the District shall issue the subpœnas, and that the court itself shall punish the contempts. The clause reads, as I remember, "in any district or Territory."

Mr. LANHAM. Let us have a vote; that is enough.

Mr. RAY of New York. Now, then, both the Democrats and Republicans on the committee—both Senate and House members—are all agreed. No power is invaded that should belong to the courts, nor is the liberty of any citizen endangered, and I trust that the conference report will be agreed to. If it is in order, I would like to move the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks the previous question on the adoption of the conference report.

The previous question was ordered.

The conference report was agreed to.

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 11728) to classify the rural free-delivery service and fix the compensation of the employees thereof.

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of privilege.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SIMS. My statement has reference to the report of the committee of conference on House bill 10308, for the establishment of a permanent Census Bureau. A bill was brought into this House, Mr. Speaker, for making the Bureau permanent, and it was recommitted to the Select Committee on the Census with special instructions as to the bill they should frame, a part of which special instructions was this:

And with a provision therein to place the present employees within the classified service.

A bill was brought in, in response to that instruction, containing this section:

SEC. 5. That all employees of the Twelfth Census Office at the date of the passage of this act above the grade of skilled laborer shall be, and are hereby, placed under the provisions of the civil-service act approved January 16, 1883, and the amendments thereto and the rules established thereunder; and all new appointments in the Census Office hereby created shall be made in accordance with the requirements of the civil-service act above referred to.

The bill passed exactly in that form. It went to the Senate and that section was amended, not by striking out any word, but by adding these words——

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Speaker, I think too much time has been consumed already.

Mr. SIMS. I only ask for five or ten minutes; that is all it will take.

Mr. LOUD. I shall have to object. I make the point of order that this is not a question of privilege. If it is, it is an ex post facto privilege. It is something that has been disposed of by Congress. The bill has become a law. I have already yielded an hour this morning.

Mr. SIMS. The statement of privilege that I have to make is, that the House was misled and deceived by the statement of the chairman of the Select Committee on the Census and by the report of the conference committee, and I was proceeding to show that fact. The Senate added only, at the end of line 14, and the beginning of line 15, "without further examination," and at the end of line 18, "to the clerical force." That amendment came over with the others, was nonconcurred in, and went to conference. I insist the conference committee had no right to strike out any part of the text of the section, except as to the Senate amendment, which in no way changed the meaning and intent of the section, but was merely an addition to the section in the way of phraseology.

The SPEAKER. The point of order has been make by the gentleman from California that this is not a question of privilege, because the matter has been disposed of by the House. There is no question but what this would have been a proper matter, possibly, to have considered when the conference report was before the House, because the report was before the House and was read.

Mr. SIMS. No; it was not read, and that is the very thing I wanted to show. The statement only was read.

The SPEAKER. The report was not read, but the statement was read only, and it is clearly not a matter of privilege to any member of the House. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from California that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

THE RECORD.

Mr. SWANSON. Pending that, Mr. Speaker, I desire to submit a request for unanimous consent about a matter that would save some time.

The SPEAKER. In respect to what matter?

Mr. SWANSON. In respect to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr GAINES] and the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. ROBINSON].

The SPEAKER. A correction of the RECORD?

Mr. SWANSON. A correction of the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. That is a privileged matter. The gentleman will submit his request.

Mr, SWANSON. I ask unanimous consent that the RECORD be made to read in this way, and it has been agreed to by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. ROBINSON] and the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GAINES]: After the answer of the gentleman from Tennessee, "I think there are 19. How many has the gentleman in his?" The stenographer did not get all Mr. ROBINSON said in that connection, and consequently what he did take was misleading; and the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GAINES] and the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. ROBINSON] agree that the following be inserted as Mr. ROBINSON's reply, which explains fully what he intended to say:

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. None to my credit—no carrier; but I have about 50 routes in my district.

I ask unanimous consent, in behalf of both of those gentlemen, that this be inserted.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, that order will be made.

There was no objection.

RURAL FREE-DELIVERY SERVICE.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from California, that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 11728.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, Mr. GILLETTE of Massachusetts in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 11728.

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Chairman, I yield one hour to my colleague, the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. GRIGGS. Mr. Chairman, a large amount of irrelevant matter has been injected into this debate from its beginning down to the present moment. I shall not charge all of it to one side, because upon the injection of irrelevant matter upon one side or the other it is sometimes necessary in reply to bring in other irrelevant matters. I shall not attempt to do more in the time allotted me than to answer, as far as I can, a few of the objections urged against it. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. LANDIS], in his argument against this bill a few days ago indulged in an unwarranted, gratuitous, and inexcusable attack upon the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

The truth is, his entire speech was directed so consistently against the committee and its chairman as to make it appear that perhaps the gentleman had some personal grievance in his breast, either against the committee as a whole or against the distinguished chairman of the committee. The gentleman says that the members of this committee—"genial, accommodating gentlemen, have been overpersuaded by the gentleman from California." I want to say to the gentleman from Indiana that, barring one member of that committee, every single gentleman on it is as honest, as courageous, as capable, and as intelligent as the gentleman from Indiana; and I do not know if I would not be justified in going a little further.

I knew a man once who had some trouble with a party of gentlemen in the smoker of a sleeping car. He knew all of the party but one. After his little difference with these gentlemen he left the smoker; but, thinking over his wrongs, a little later he returned, stuck his head in the door, and said: "Gentlemen, barring the stranger, you may all go to the devil." He went back, and after brooding a little further over it, he returned to the smoker and announced, "Gentlemen, I don't bar anybody; the entire party, stranger and all, can go." [Laughter.] I do not believe I will bar any member of the committee. That committee is composed of men who are as faithful, as earnest, as true, as honest, and as capable as the gentleman from Indiana.

I have heard of a preacher who once went to a town and a committee from the church called on him before the day on which he was to preach. One gentleman said to him, "Don't say too much about swearing in your sermon to-morrow, because Brother So-and-so sometimes indulges in swearing." Another brother said, "Don't indulge in too strong declamation against strong drink, because we have some brethren who are addicted sometimes to that habit, but who are otherwise good men."

And so brother after brother came until the category of crime and sin had been gone over, and he had been advised not to talk against anything. Finally he said to a brother, "I am advised not to talk against this, and not to talk against that, until I have left nothing to talk about. What shall I say?" The good brother, after cogitating a while, replied: "Well, I don't know; you might go for the Jews; they haven't got a friend in town." [Laughter.]

The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. LANDIS] must have proceeded upon the presumption that the Post-Office Committee and its distinguished chairman probably had not a friend in the House, and attacked them without gloves. [Laughter.] He did not touch upon the bill. The fact is, he knows nothing about what is in the bill and less about the free rural-delivery service. He says that this service was instituted four years ago, when every gentleman on this floor who has paid the slighest attention to the service knows that it was instituted under the Postmaster-Generalship of Mr. Wilson. It was increased four years ago, and it was increased upon the recommendation and by the support and vote of these very gentlemen who have been denounced in this House as unfriendly to the rural delivery.

Ah, Mr. Chairman, there was a time, and I remember it well, when even the pulchritudinous gentleman from Indiana was not ready to jump into the breach in defense of this service and the defense of its administration. Two years ago the great Appropriations Committee of this House came in here with a deficiency that had been created in this service by this administration—by these very gentlemen whom they are now so anxious to defend, and criticised them severely for having spent $150,000 more than had been appropriated.

What happened? Where was the gentleman from Indiana then, when this great Appropriations Committee with a unanimous report proposed that Congress say to the Post-Office Department that no money shall hereafter be spent on this service unelss it has been already appropriated? When that report came in and appeared as if it was going through this House without a word in defense of the administration, without a word from anyone in defense of the service, it was left to me, a Democrat from the wilds of Georgia, to defend the Republican First Assistant Postmaster-General, who hailed from the State of Indiana. [Laughter.]

Where was the gentleman from Indiana then? I judge from the tenor of his remarks the other day that he was waiting to be assured that the service was popular before placing himself at the head of the cohorts and indulging himself in the pleasant belief that he is the savior of the rural delivery. He does not claim, as he so facetiously charged against my friend from California, to be its "papa," but its savior. [Laughter.] "I have saved this service for the farmer boys in the country. I have lighted the fires upon the hearths of the farmers of Indiana." He is not the papa of this service, that is true. But, my friend, before you assume to be its savior, first inform yourself of the conditions surrounding its establishment and surrounding its progress during the last five years.

Now, I do not believe there is a single, solitary man in this House, I do not believe my friend from Indiana believes that there is any hostility to the rural delivery service on the Post-Office Committee. I do not believe there are a dozen men in the House of Representatives, be they from city or country, who would put one single block in the way of its final glorious success. We know it is a success, and we fought for it in its infancy. We sat by its cradle and rocked it when it was young, when the gentleman from Indiana and some other gentlemen who are assuming to be its saviors here to-day were either not conscious of its existence or were somewhere else looking after other cradles. [Laughter.]

My friend from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] made a strong argument against the bill from his standpoint, inveighing against the danger of change. He says we would revolutionize this service, and therefore put it in danger of destruction. Why, nobody knows better than the gentleman from Virginia that this service is here to stay, and that no bill simply applying to the details of the administration can even affect it unfavorably, much less destroy it. My friend from Virginia is too conservative. I was struck the other day by a definition of conservatism given by my colleague, Mr. HOWARD, in a cloakroom talk.

My friend said, "Conservatism is a cube with its corners cut off and its edges trimmed, so that it might be ready to roll in whatever direction necessity might demand." [Laughter.] That, Mr. Chairman, represents in very large part the conservatism in the House in reference to this particular bill. This great show of conservatism is a cube rounded and smoothed in order that it may go in whatever direction, in the argument against this bill, may be necessary to secure its defeat.

My friend from Virginia, after opposing this change because of its revolutionary tendencies, because of his fear that it would destroy the system, defends in the next breath a complete revolution that was effected the 1st of February last in the appointment of carriers and which has not yet been tested anywhere in the country. He is afraid of change when the committee proposes a change that it presents simply as a business proposition and believes will redound to the best interests of the service; but when a change is made by the Department the gentleman defends that revolution and attacks the other. His reason, and his principal reason, as it appears from his argument, is that he is afraid of the result of the change—afraid of the destruction it might visit upon the entire rural-delivery service.

Another great argument of most of the opponents of this bill is the frauds in the star-route service twenty-five or thirty years ago. Why should gentlemen go back to ancient history? Why should they go back to frauds committed, tried, punished, and ended thirty years ago, in order to attack not a service, but the administration of a service. This is not an effort to make the rural delivery a star-route service. It is simply an effort on the part of this committee to make the rural-delivery system the most effective rural-delivery service in their power, to enable the Government to extend it over the entire country. This opposition is based entirely on the supposed similarity of the proposed service to the former star-route service, to which I shall refer again later on.

Gentlemen say, "Why not put postmasters under the contract system?" Seventy thousand fourth-class postmasters in the United States are now practically under the contract system. They hold their positions by appointment, but their pay is graduated according to their cancellation of stamps. They are paid no fixed salaries, but in accordance with the service performed.

Yet gentlemen say we must make a salary for the rural carriers, a salary which shall be applicable alike in Maine and Florida; applicable alike in the Rocky Mountains of Colorado and on the plains of Indiana. It is impossible, gentlemen, to do it. It is impossible so to regulate this salary as to make it equitable and just to the people as well as the carriers without in some way graduating it to meet the difficulties of different routes situated in widely separated sections of the country.

That being true, this committee, without any idea of injuring this service, without any idea of decreasing its efficiency in the slightest degree, sought earnestly and long for some method of so arranging the pay for carriers that the rural free-delivery service might be extended everywhere, that it might be extended to the remotest recesses of the country, that it might be extended into corners where it is impossible to extend it under the present regulations, with routes of the prescribed length and with the prescribed number of families, in order that all the people, no matter where they live, whether in the valleys or in the mountains, on the plains or in the hills, might enjoy the benefits of this service.

It appeared that great inequality of service existed everywhere, not only in Congressional districts but in every county, and we thought the best and most feasible plan of enabling the Department to extend this service everywhere was to submit the contract to competition and let the carriers bid on it.

I had the pleasure of listening the other day to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. THAYER], and I am sorry he is not now in his seat—the gentleman from "God's country," as he styles himself. The gentleman places the friends of rural delivery against and its enemies for the bill. I had the pleasure of coming to Congress one session before my distinguished friend from Massachusetts.

I say I had the pleasure, because it gave me the opportunity of meeting one man from the Worcester district who was broad enough and big enough to believe that God's beneficence extended to the limits of the universe and was not confined entirely to the Worcester district of the State of Massachusetts. I met a gentleman, Republican though he was, who believed that the sun shines and the rains fall in some other sections west and south of the Worcester district of Massachusetts.

The gentleman said that when he looked at the conveyances used for carrying the mails in the star-route service from Worcester to somewhere out in his county it made him blush—not with the maiden blush of modesty, but the ancient but honorable blush of shame. My friend from Massachusetts, as was suggested yesterday by my friend from Missouri, blushes too easily. In his description of "God's country" he said that less than a dollar and a half or a dollar and seventy-five cents a day is considered pauper wages in the Worcester district of Massachusetts, and that it has been impossible to get a man to carry the mails on a rural route at a salary of five hundred a year.

Yet in the very next breath he tells us that he blushed with shame on beholding the star-route service from Worcester to some point near by in that district. Nobody to work for $1.50 a day! And yet men in the star-route service, according to my friend, were working for very much less than $1.50 a day. I can not reconcile the two positions. If it is impossible to get men to work for $500 a year in the Worcester district, it seems to me it would be impossible to get men to take contracts at less than that price in the Worcester district.

Gentlemen talk about the discrimination this committee would make between the city and the country communities in this matter. The committee does not propose to make any discrimination between the two. We propose, as far as we can, to give the country people the very best service that the United States is able to give them. We are not going to be put in the position of being in favor of extending facilities to the people in cities and not being willing to extend the same facilities to the people in the country.

It has been upon the report of this committee, it has been by the work of this committee, that every increase in the rural free-delivery service has been made, and I think I am not violating a confidence as a member of that committee when I say that at one time the Post-Office Department recommended in its estimate a million dollars for rural delivery. The subcommittee, after consultation with the head of this bureau, thought that a million and a half would be necessary—a half million more than had been estimated for—and upon the motion of the gentleman from Georgia, who, with other gentlemen on the floor of this House, has been charged with being in a collusion to destroy rural mail delivery, it was on a motion of mine that this amount was increased to $1,750,000, and there was not an opposing vote in the committee.

We are as good friends of rural delivery as you gentlemen; we have worked for rural delivery as well as you gentlemen, but we recognize some obligation to all the people of the United States. We recognize the fact that with an estimated force of from 45,000 to 50,000 carriers, at the present salary of $600 a year, this service will soon cost $30,000,000.

Recognizing that fact, and knowing from experience that we shall never be able to keep their salaries at that figure—and I do not believe that any gentleman wishes to hold these salaries so low—knowing that it can not be done, we recognized the fact that within six years, according to the Department estimate, there will be from 45,000 to 50,000 carriers, at a salary of at least $700 to $800 a year; it will require an appropriation of $40,000,000 to keep up this service.

Mr. HILL. I will ask the gentleman, does not the Department in making that estimate largely increase the number by including in the estimate foot carriers on shorter routes at a greatly reduced cost from that of the mounted carrier, and in that way bring the number up, and has not the gentleman in making his estimate of $30,000,000 entirely left out the saving which would be made by abolishing star routes and abolishing fourth-class offices, and entirely forgotten the increase of the service, and the consequent increase of receipts, which would go far toward cutting down the $30,000,000 of which the gentleman spoke?

Mr. GRIGGS. I am very glad that my friend from Connecticut called my attention to that point at this particular time. In reply to his first question I will say that I do not know, because it is the first I have ever heard of foot service by the rural carriers.

Mr. HILL. I mean on the short routes.

Mr. GRIGGS. Yes; I understand you; but you can not make a route less than 10 or 15 miles through the country, and you can not get white men in the United States to take the job of walking around through the country to deliver mail. They will do it on the paved streets in the cities, but they will not do it in the country. The Department says, in reply this morning to the inquiry of my colleague [Mr. BOUTELL]:

> We estimate that the territory available for rural free delivery will require from 45,000 to 50,000 routes, and that it will take six years to put it in.

That is the estimate of the Department. The gentleman asks if I have left out of this calculation the saving in the abolition of star routes. Yes; and if my friend will study the figures on the star-route service and the postal service during the last four or five years he will agree with me that it ought to be left out. The appropriation this year for the star-route service is greater than it ever was before.

Mr. LOUD. By a million and a half.

Mr. GRIGGS. Last year it was about, in round numbers, $5,000,000, and this year it is about six millions and a half. I went back, I will say to my friend, as far as 1887 with these figures. I am sorry that I do not have them with me this morning, but I went back more than ten years, and this appropriation for the next fiscal year of six millions and a half is greater than it has ever been before in the history of the service by from a million to a million and a half dollars.

Mr. HILL. Will the gentleman not admit that the reason for that increase is that there is an increased cost of about 35 per cent by reason of the very restrictions thrown around the star-route service that he proposes to throw around the rural-delivery service, so that the increase to the star-route service is not because of the increased number of routes, but because of the increased cost by reason of the very thing that you propose to tack onto this bill?

Mr. GRIGGS. I can not admit that, because after most earnest questions from myself and from the chairman of the subcommittee on that particular line we were unable to get a definite reply from the Post-Office Department with reference to it.

Mr. HILL. I will state that I will give the gentleman the information so far as I have got it. I have heard it stated on the floor of this House in this debate that this star route had been increased about 35 per cent by reason of these restrictions, and my recollection is that I have received the same information from the Department.

Mr. BROMWELL. May I not ask the gentleman from Connecticut a question before he is seated?

Mr. HILL. Certainly.

Mr. BROMWELL. Is that not a complete answer to the proposition of the gentleman from Indiana and others who have denounced this service as a cheap service?

Mr. HILL. Not at all.

Mr. BROMWELL. If the rural free-delivery service is placed under contract, and this star-route service shows that within the last two lettings, a year ago and this year, there has been an increase in the expense, does not that answer the criticism of the gentleman from Indiana?

Mr. HILL. Absolutely not. It simply shows that the professional contractors are getting a larger profit out of the business. That is all it shows.

Mr. GRIGGS. I would suggest to my friend from Connecticut that it has been impossible for us in our official investigations in this matter to obtain the information that the gentleman seems to have obtained somewhere.

But I want to say further in reply to the gentleman's question that the regulation of the Second Assistant Postmaster-General requiring the delivery of mail in boxes along the star route has increased in some degree the cost of this service, and that the regulation that the bidder shall live along the route has increased in some degree the cost of the service; but it is not believed, as I understand, in the Department, and it is not my belief and not the belief of the committee, that it has increased the cost one million and a half dollars over the last fiscal year.

I merely stated that fact with reference to the star routes, not because I am a cheeseparer in these matters. So far as I am concerned, I believe the rural-delivery service ought to be extended as a matter of course. I do not believe that it is necessary for petitions to be filed, indorsed, referred and re-referred, and inspected and reinspected, and laid off and mapped out, and then, after a year or a year and a half of investigation, the route established.

I do not believe in that. I believe that when a petition or a desire or even an intimation comes from a community that it is desirous of rural service I believe it ought to have it. I do not believe the question ought to be asked now by the Department whether or not a particular route is self-sustaining.

That inquiry is not made with reference to the star routes or the establishment of post-offices, and if you should apply the same rule we would have no star routes, and if that rule were applied to fourth-class post-offices three-fourths of them would have to be abolished. I say if this rule were applied to the star routes and post-offices the people of the country away from the railroads would have no mail service. Gentlemen say we are attacking rural delivery, when the regulations of the Department make it impossible to put rural delivery in a large section of the United States. Yet, Mr. Chairman, the effort of the committee to cure this defect in the administration is denounced as an effort to destroy the service.

Now, I want to say another thing. Many gentlemen from my section of the country are very much afraid that there will be obnoxious carriers in case we adopt the contract service.

Why, Mr. Chairman, there can not be any more danger in the one case than in the other. That danger is ever present, and to avoid this in this service or in any other service, requires eternal vigilance on the part of the Representative. We have endeavored to surround it with such restrictions that no man obnoxious to a community can secure a contract. He must go to the Department before his bid will be considered with a clean sheet; he must go with the recommendation of a good moral character; he must go with a certificate and satisfactory evidence that he is a legal and actual resident of the district or territory in which the proposed service is to be performed.

He must show that he is an individual who is trustworthy, with a good moral character, able to read and write, and must have sufficient intelligence and ability to properly perform the service. Now, gentlemen say that under this proposed regulation they are afraid of that. Gentlemen know that I am as much opposed to this as they are, and I shall be very much opposed to anything that makes that more imminent than it is in the service already established.

So far as I am concerned, before I would agree to anything that in my opinion would render it likely throughout the South—before I would agree to do that, I would submit to any regulation of the Department; I would submit to any salary to carriers or any method of appointing them to prevent that.

And I will go further; I would stand with my people in favor of its destruction, if necessary, in order to prevent it The administration of this Department is in the hands of department officials, and it is left to their good judgment and their discretion under this bill just as it is under any sort of regulations they may have established or can establish at any other time.

Now, my friend from Connecticut [Mr. HILL] found a mare's nest the other day. I have heard it said that lawyers differ as to the construction of laws, but laymen never. My friend from Connecticut is not a lawyer.

Mr. HILL. I hope not. [Laughter.]

Mr. GRIGGS. But, in the language of the boys down my way, he is a "jodarter" when it comes to construing law. He is afraid of this word "paragraph" in here, and I tried my best to get an opportunity to explain it the other day, but my friend from Virginia who had the floor declined to yield me time to do so. My friend from Connecticut charges that because of the presence of that word "paragraph" one man can secure and sublet all contracts for rural service in the entire country; yet the same section of the bill declares that not more than one contract shall be let to one person. We used the word "paragraph" simply because that was the only paragraph in the bill relating to the employment of carriers.

If it will get the support of my friend from Connecticut, I will consent to vote for an amendment to that effect. When you come to the "papa" business, the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HILL] is almost the papa of the contract system, because I believe he did first suggest it to us. He placed it on our front doorsteps and got away in the darkness and is now fighting his own child, calling it ours. [Laughter.] I say if the gentleman from Connecticut insists that it will be better to change the word "paragraph" to "bill," I shall for one be willing to strike it out, if by so doing we can obtain his support.

Mr. LOUD. It can not be that he is the step-papa of this proposition. [Laughter.]

Mr. GRIGGS. I don't know. I judge from our talk about the matter that he was really its papa, but it might have been that the chairman of the committee and the gentleman from Connecticut were its joint progenitors. [Laughter.]

Mr. HILL. No; I disclaim any partnership of that kind.

Mr. GRIGGS. My friend thinks that the words "under such regulations as the Postmaster-General may prescribe, a substitute carrier may be employed," renders this service, if the bill should pass, open to the objection that one man can bid for every service in the United States and take it; and yet my friend, lawyer though he be—not, must admit that the Postmaster-General can not make regulations contrary to the law, contrary to the statute. This statute says that no person shall be awarded a contract for more than one route. Then how can one person get all the contracts?

My friend must admit that that was simply conjured up in his imagination, and that he was running from the signpost in the darkness, as the boy did whom we used to read about in the second reader, a long time ago. There need be no fear on that point. The bill itself provides specifically that no person can take more than one contract.

Now, gentlemen talk about a discrimination against the country and in favor of the city. I have not a city in my district. It is purely an agricultural district; and is made up almost exclusively of small tradesmen and farmers. If I were mean enough, I do not think anybody in this House would charge me with being fool enough to want to discriminate against my own constituents. It is a question at last as to whether the prophecy of the opponents of the bill shall come true, that it will decrease the efficiency of the service.

If it decreases the efficiency of the service it would be a discrimination. If it does not decrease it, but renders the Post-Office Department able to scatter it all over the country, then it would not be a discrimination against the country, but would assist in securing them what they ought to have—the full benefits of the service.

Gentlemen say that the star route is unpopular. My venerable friend from Connecticut [Mr. SPERRY] insists that the star route service has always been unpopular. I would like to know what anybody would offer instead of it. Unpopular when it is the only thing you can have? A man is popular or unpopular, comparatively, and an institution is popular or unpopular, comparatively speaking. The only man could not be unpopular. If there is nothing better, if there is nothing worse, if there is nothing but that, how can it be popular or unpopular? It is simply a service devised as the best means of carrying the mail to the people who live off the railroad.

I say to gentlemen who live on the railroad that the star-route service is all these people have, and they do not want to lose it. It is not all they can get, however. Rural delivery is a popular service. It was useless for me to say that, because everybody can see by the way in which members fall over one another in their desire to indorse it that it is an extremely popular service. There are sections where it can not go; there are sections where the star-route service must continue to supply the people. I believe if you adopt the contract service you can extend the rural-delivery service, because it ought to be as easy to put a rural-delivery route into operation as it is to make a star route.

Gentlemen say we want to make of this service a star-route service. It is not true. We do not desire to make of this service a star-route service. We want it to remain a rural-delivery service. We want it to carry the mail to the home of every man, but we want it to do so in the cheapest and most economical way, and we believe that the people will stand by us in our efforts.

My friend from Indiana inveighed grandiloquently against "cheapness;" and my friend from Connecticut [Mr. HILL], good business man that he is, hastened to say he could not agree with the gentleman on that proposition. What this committee desires to do is to give the people the best service possible at the very least expense, because in the end the people pay the expense.

Gentlemen talk with contempt about a salary of $600. I do not know what the average income of the people is in the district of the gentleman from Connecticut or the gentleman from Indiana who talks so loftily about "cheapness" in connection with this service. But I do know that in the South the average annual income of men throughout the country is not $600. Clerks, ministers, school teachers in Georgia work for salaries less than that.

A MEMBER. And in Connecticut, too.

Mr. GRIGGS. I believe that Georgia does as well as Connecticut, and that is why I did not say "Connecticut, too." School-teachers receive salaries of not more than $40 a month in Georgia, and many much less, and are glad to get it. Some of them work for six, some for eight, some for nine, and some for ten months in the year. Four hundred dollars a year is considered a pretty good salary for teachers throughout the country in Georgia.

Mr. THOMPSON. Are the teachers required to have a horse and buggy to carry them to and from the schoolhouse?

Mr. GRIGGS. No, sir; but if my friend will add $200 to the $400 he will admit that the teacher could supply himself every year with a new outfit.

Mr. NORTON. Oh, do not economize on the poor devils. [Laughter.]

Mr. GRIGGS. Mr. Chairman, that is the stock argument against this proposition. My friend from Ohio says, "Don't economize on these poor devils." I presume he means the rural carriers. But I say to my friend from Ohio that so far as the district from which I come considers matters of this sort, they believe it is my duty to economize on these "poor devils" in order that we may not extort money from those who pay the taxes.

When my friend interrupted me I was going on to say that the average salary in the average Congressional district of the United States is not $600. Four hundred dollars would cover it; and I believe that is a high estimate. I believe that even in the Worcester district of Massachusetts $400 would cover the average salary of the average man.

Mr. THAYER. Will the gentleman allow me a moment?

Mr. GRIGGS. With pleasure.

Mr. THAYER. I wish to inform the gentleman from Georgia that there is not a man who digs sewers in Worcester County who does not see more money than that in a year.

Mr. GRIGGS. I had no idea from what my friend said the other day there was such a thing as a sewer in the Worcester district—in "God's country." [Laughter.]

Mr. THAYER. The gentleman is not acquainted with that kind of a country.

Mr. GRIGGS. Thank God, I am not. What I have seen of it convinces me of the truth of the declaration of some gentleman in this Hall forty years ago—that its chief products are rocks and ice. I thank God we have not a country like that where I live.

But, seriously, I want to ask my friend from Massachusetts to answer me candidly whether there are not clergymen in his district who get less than $600 a year salary?

Mr. THAYER. I do not think there is a man preaching in Massachusetts, either in my district or any other part of the State, that does not get, at the very lowest, one-third more than that sum.

Mr. GRIGGS. One-third more than $600?

Mr. THAYER. Yes, sir.

Mr. GRIGGS. That is $800. Now, does not the gentleman believe that a clergyman is worth as much as a rural mail carrier?

Mr. THAYER. I think he would be worth more down in Georgia. [Laughter].

Mr. GRIGGS. What about Massachusetts? The gentleman is correct in his facetious reply. A clergyman is worth more than a rural carrier in Georgia; and will the gentleman deny that he is worth more than a carrier in Massachusetts? I wait for the gentleman to answer.

Mr. THAYER. I think that a gentleman of the clerical profession is far above the politicians who the gentleman is afraid are going to transfer political control down in Georgia from the Democracy to the Republicans because the Republicans appoint them. But I want to say to the gentleman from Georgia that there is scarcely a laboring man in Massachusetts engaged in any vocation who does not receive at least $1.75 a day; and I want to say further that in my district, where four of these routes have been established, there is one of them on which it has been absolutely impossible for a year and a half to find a single person to take the job at $500. The office is not filled; the Government is waiting for a carrier.

Mr. GRIGGS. And yet the gentleman from Massachusetts says that when he sees the vehicle of the star-route contractor who performs service from Worcester to some little town in his district, his face mantles with the blush of shame because of the poor character of the outfit.

Mr. THAYER. I want to say distinctly that we were ashamed that the United States Government would use the poorest equipment that was to be found in our section of country to carry the mails—a vehicle with the tire wired——

Mr. GRIGGS. I hope the gentleman will not take up all my time.

Mr. THAYER. I thought the gentleman was willing that I should ask him a question.

Mr. GRIGGS. I am perfectly willing to allow the gentleman to ask a question. The gentleman says that he blushed with shame over that. Now, where did that man come from who took that contract? He must have come from Massachusetts. He must be from the Worcester district; yet he took a contract that does not enable him to carry the mail with a decent equipage.

Yet the gentleman says that every laborer in that district gets from a dollar and a half to a dollar and seventy-five cents a day. One statement answers the other. I can not understand it otherwise.

Mr. THAYER. If the gentleman will allow me, I can not speak with authority, but I think this man is one of those miserable creatures who take a subcontract from a contractor who is located here in Washington, and he was unable to carry out his contract. His team was so poor and attracted such attention that the newspapers took it up and commented upon it. I do not know where the man came from. He may have come from Georgia for aught I know. [Laughter.]

Mr. GRIGGS. That was a Massachusetts team and a Massachusetts man. He undertook this business in the district of the gentleman from Worcester.

My friend from Indiana [Mr. LANDIS] assumes a very lofty attitude, as does the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. THAYER], with reference to salaries. I stated upon this floor during the absence of the gentleman from Massachusetts, and it has not been denied by anyone except himself, that the average salary of the average person in every Congressional district in the United States is not more than $600 a year. The gentleman from Massachusetts denies it so far as his district is concerned, and I must accept his denial.

Mr. THAYER. Just a word. I have never denied that the average salary of an average man was not more than $600. But you must remember that this mail carrier does not get the $600 for himself. He must employ two horses and a vehicle and care for them, and I say the average compensation for a man and two horses in my district or in any district in Massachusetts for a year is over $600.

Mr. GRIGGS. Mr. Chairman, two horses are not a necessity in this service. Men have been performing this service in Georgia—as poor a country as my friend would have us believe he thinks it is—for several years with one horse, and they can continue to do so. Horses wear out and men wear out. It might be better for the people from the Worcester district of Massachusetts, for fear that their present distinguished Representative would wear out, to send two Representatives here.

Mr. LANDIS. I will say in that connection that I received a letter a few days ago from a carrier in my district who stated that during the recent winter he had been compelled to have three horses in order to carry his route.

Mr. FLEMING. But two of them were sick.

Mr. LANDIS. And I will say to the gentleman in that connection——

Mr. GRIGGS. I hope my friend will be as brief as possible.

Mr. LANDIS. I will ask that the gentleman's time be extended. I would ask the gentleman, if the Post-Office Department allows $240 a year for the postman in a city who uses a horse and cart for that service, if that is not evidence of the fact that a horse and cart practically stand the carrier $240 a year, and if an allowance of $240 a year is essential for one horse and cart, would not $340 or $350 be a fair allowance for two horses and a cart for a rural free-delivery carrier.

Mr. GRIGGS. I will answer my friend in the fewest words possible, because I have not the time to say all I would like to say. Two hundred and forty dollars a year is a very high allowance for a horse and a wagon.

Mr. LANDIS. It is a liberal allowance.

Mr. GRIGGS. A wagon made in the gentleman's own State, with a cover, provided for this service, is being used in my district, in my own county, and my information is that it cost $60. I believe he has two horses, and they did not cost him over $150. There is $150 for the cost of his horses and $60 for the cost of his vehicle, or a total cost of $210.

Mr. CURTIS. What about the harness?

Mr. GRIGGS. I will add $20 for that, making $230.

Mr. CURTIS. What about the feed?

Mr. GRIGGS. I will come to that. Now, that is allowing $230 for the cost of the horses and the wagon. The life of that team and of that wagon is at least ten years, and 10 per cent a year of the cost would cover the expense of replacing the horses and wagon. Twenty-five dollars a year would cover that cost. The cost of feed for a horse in the country is a very small item, indeed.

Mr. LANDIS. Well, how much?

Mr. GRIGGS. In Georgia—and I presume the same thing is true in Indiana—in Georgia a man can ordinarily feed a horse and take care of him in the country for four or five dollars a month.

Mr. LANDIS. He can not do it in Indiana.

Mr. GRIGGS. He can ordinarily buy corn at from 40 to 65 cents a bushel the year round. He can buy corn in the harvest season at from 40 to 50 cents everywhere throughout the State.

Mr. HILL. What do you make the annual cost of equipment and maintenance in Georgia?

Mr. GRIGGS. I make the annual cost of equipment and maintenance, say, $150, and that is exceedingly liberal. Now, so far as I am concerned I will say to my friend that I do not think $600 would be an adequate salary without an allowance, and I do not believe the salary will remain at that figure. I believe $600 will be an adequate salary if you add to that an allowance, $100 or $150, for maintenance.

Mr. HILL. Now, if the gentleman will allow me——

Mr. GRIGGS. I fear I have not time.

Mr. HILL. I will ask that the gentleman's time be extended.

Mr. LOUD. One moment, about the extension of time. There can not be any extension of time, because the time is all used up.

Mr. HILL. We will get some time from our side.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that the time of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. GRIGGS] has expired.

Mr. HILL. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may have five minutes more.

Mr. GRIGGS. Make it ten.

Mr. HILL. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman have ten minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Unanimous consent is asked that the time of the gentleman be extended ten minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Chairman, I want to state that there is an hour and twenty minutes promised on my side of the question, and there is not that amount of time remaining. If the other side desire to yield, why, they can do so.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the Chair understand the gentleman from California to object?

Mr. LOUD. I shall have to object.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman, I think with the consent of the committee, that the other side will give the gentleman from Georgia five minutes.

Mr. GRIGGS. I can not accept that.

Mr. HILL. I ask the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] if he will not allow the gentleman five minutes' time?

Mr. SWANSON. I will yield five minutes' time to the gentleman.

Mr. GRIGGS. Will you make it ten?

Mr. SWANSON. I will give the gentleman ten minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia yields ten minutes to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. HILL. Now, I should like to ask the gentleman from Georgia, in view of his statement that the allowance of 10 per cent for deterioration of equipment, cost of maintenance, interest on capital, etc., together with horse feed, can be maintained in Georgia for $150 a year, how it is that as a member of the Post-Office Committee he has voted for an appropriation this year of $650,000, to provide the following compensation in Georgia:

In Americus, $200 a year; in Atlanta, Ga., $221 a year; in Augusta, Ga., $200 a year; Columbus, Ga., $225; Macon, Ga., $200——

Mr. GRIGGS. Now, Mr. Chairman——

Mr. HILL. This is my time. Rome, Ga., $200; Savannah, Ga., $200. This is on an average of 33⅓ per cent higher, and he, as a member of the committee, has already voted and sent in a bill covering that appropriation. I would like him to explain the discrepancy between his present statement and his vote.

Mr. GRIGGS. My friend well understands that this is based on the estimates of the Post-Office Department. The gentleman knows that I am only one member of the Committee on the Post-Office, and that I do not belong even to the majority of the committee, and have very little influence with the Post-Office Detartment.

Mr. HILL. These figures are not the basis; these are the actual amounts paid this year.

Mr. GRIGGS. I know that.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. They found they could get that much and just got it.

Mr. GRIGGS. I will say to my friend that I base my statement on the cost of keeping a horse in the country and not in a city. I never lived in a city and do not know what it costs to keep a horse in a city.

Now then, I want to say in behalf of this committee that it is their desire to equalize these routes so that adequate compensation can be paid in every district throughout the country for this service and no more. That is the sole idea of the committee. We do not intend to cripple the service; we would not cripple it if we could, and we could not cripple it if we would.

Our idea is, if this bill can be passed, that it will so equalize the service that rural delivery can be extended everywhere, and we do not believe it can or will be extended everywhere under the present system.

Gentlemen talk about the mileage basis of pay. You can not establish that, because, I have no doubt, in the hills of my friend's [Mr. HILL] district it costs more than in the plains in the district of my friend from Indiana to carry this service.

There are such inequalities in it, as I have said, that almost every district is different from every other district in the service, and that is the occasion of this bill. The committee hopes that through the contract service rural delivery can be extended to its utmost limit. That is all the Post-Office Committee is attempting to do. We do not propose to pay a carrier, because he happens to be in the Government service, a higher salary than the average income of the man to whom he carries the mail every day. It is not justice to the farmers along the route.

Now, the gentlemen from Indiana and from Massachusetts intimated a few moments ago that we are afraid of these rural carriers. I have not uttered a word that authorizes that conclusion. I am, I confess, not impervious to influences in my district. I confess that. I confess that I have not yet reached that high position where I am blind to what my friends and constituents at home may request me to do.

I confess that I am not deaf to the appeals of my constituency yet, though, unlike the gentleman from Indiana, I hope I am not ready to rush to the extreme limit of what anybody might demand in order to keep from being coerced. The gentleman from Indiana said that the chairman of this committee and this committee were afraid that Congress would be coerced; and then, in order to make himself safe from coercion, he went to the very highest limit that anybody ever thought of as a salary for any letter carrier in the country—$1,100.

Of course the gentleman from Indiana can not be coerced. There was once a Hebrew in my town named Jacoby. Old man Sam Mack got full one day, and he went into Jacoby's store and decided that Jacoby's head was the dancing end of his anatomy. So he took Jacoby by the feet and danced him around on his head.

Eventually Jacoby escaped, and, rushing up the street, met the chief of police and exclaimed: "Mr. Chief, come down to my store, and come right now." The chief asked: "What is the matter?" He said: "Sam Mack is down at my store; he is down there drunk, and he made me so mad I had to run out of my own place of business." [Laughter.] The gentleman from Indiana is so determined not to be coerced that he at once rushes to the extreme limit of demands that anybody can make in this service and agrees to a salary of $1,100.

Now, the members of this committee, I believe, are as honest and as able and as capable and know as much about the mail service of the country as any other 17 gentlemen that can be congregated together in this House or from anywhere else. I believe that the chairman of the committee knows more about the post-office service than any other 10 men combined in the United States, whether in the service or out of it, whether in this House or out of it.

So far as I am concerned, I say that freely. But the gentleman from Indiana knows, and every member of the House knows, that the gentleman from California owns no member of the committee. He would not control it if he could, and he could not control it if he would. We have presented to you what we believe to be the most feasible plan, the very best plan for extending this service to all the people. We want the blessings of rural delivery to go to every home in the United States. We do not believe, under the present plan of administration—under the present system—that it can be extended to all the homes of all the people because of its great cost.

Now, as far as I am concerned, I shall never stop to consider that again. This vote, in my opinion, will end all controversy as to the system. As far as I am concerned, if this House votes down this proposition, my position henceforth will be to give the people the service. I shall say, let them have it; extend it throughout all the country; put it in the mountains of the West, establish it in the plains of the South and West, put it throughout the mountains of New England, let all the people have it, without stopping to count what it may cost. [Applause.]

I am not going to offer any proposition, so far as I am concerned, and I am not going to support any proposition as far as this service is concerned, except that which I believe is best for the service and best for all the people. I am willing to give it to the people throughout the whole country, and I shall not stop to consider, as far as I am concerned, the few dollars it may cost to give it to them. [Applause.]

Mr. LOUD. I now yield fifteen minutes to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. McRAE].

Mr. McRAE. Mr. Chairman, I ask the attention of the committee while I briefly review the growth of this service, giving my objections to the carrier system and my reasons for supporting the contract system. In 1895, I believe it was, there was inserted in the regular appropriation bill authorization to use for experimental rural free-delivery service $20,000. It does not appear that this was all used, however, and $10,000 of it was reappropriated in 1897.

In 1898 $50,000 was appropriated in the regular Post-Office appropriation bill for that purpose. In 1899, in the regular appropriation bill, there was appropriated $150,000. In 1900 there was appropriated $300,000, and that year there was a deficiency of $150,000 appropriated by the Appropriations Committee in the urgent deficiency bill. In 1901 there was appropriated $1,750,000. In 1902 there was appropriated $3,500,000 and a deficiency of $491,000. There is recommended for the next year $7,529,000.

So that you see how steadily this appropriation for experimental service has increased, and how in the last few years it has bounded from thousands to millions. I want to speak for a district that made in the last decade a greater increase in population and more in manufactures and other industrial pursuits than perhaps any district in the South, and yet it is without a single rural free-delivery route. Notwithstanding this, it is argued by some that this service has been fairly distributed over the country.

What I shall say will be not against this system, but in favor of it. The friends of this bill are the real friends of the rural free delivery. I believe that if you adopt the carrier system with the increased salaries that will follow you will make it impossible for communities like those of my district to ever have this system extended to it. If you want to make it of universal application, you should begin on a practical, economical plan that will make it possible. I want to show you some of the representations upon which the Bureau that has this service in charge has secured at least some of the appropriations I have mentioned. When the chief came before the Committee on Appropriations to obtain the first deficiency of $150,000 in 1900, he was examined, and I have here his hearing, but in view of the limited time I have I will only refer to such parts of it as appear to me to be pertinent to the point I desire to make.

In answer to the question what it would cost, he said: "I can show you places where people have offered to do the work for $200 a year. When we first started the service we had different people bid on it, and we had bids as low as $120."

In closing, upon the question of salaries, because it was pertinent for the committee to know from an officer who had created a deficiency of $150,000 in an experimental service what he could have it done for and why he wanted an increase, he answered: "If they will stand pat on the salary I will guarantee to find all the men in the country to work the free rural-delivery service for $400 a year."

Mr. BOUTELL. Who was that?

Mr. McRAE. Mr. Machen, the chief of the Bureau. Now, without any legislation fixing the salaries he pays the carriers $600, and if you go on and continue this service under the civil-service law the salaries will soon be $1,000. And if the salaries are increased to $1,000 a year, is there a member of Congress who will stand in his place and tell me that there can be a universal extension of the service throughout the country? No. The majority have proposed to reduce the revenues of your Government $70,000,000, and they had my cordial cooperation in that effort. But while that measure has the approval of the country, it must fail unless we reduce expenses somewhere.

Let me call attention to the pertinent fact that with the income from the war-tax law, the estimated revenue for next year aggregates only $712,000,000, while the estimates for appropriations amount to $742,000,000, a deficit of $30,000,000. I concede that $54,000,000 have been estimated for the sinking fund, which may or may not be used, but gentlemen will see how close we are to the danger line when we undertake to reduce our revenues $70,000,000 in the present condition of the Treasury, and at the same time increase expenses.

As a Democrat in favor of rigid economy, I appeal to all who claim to be Democrats to support every proposition to reduce expenditures and taxes, and at the same time I warn the majority of this House of the danger from a fiscal standpoint which they are to incur in voting down this bill. What does it mean? Defeat this bill and extend this service where it is needed with a carrier under the civil-service law and you must increase taxes, issue bonds, or increase the rates of postage. One of these results must follow as certainly as night follows day.

You can not escape it. Is there a man here who will rise in his place and say he is willing to increase postage on letters from 2 cents to 3 cents, or that he will vote to increase taxes in order to defray the expenses of this service, or that he would consent to the Government issuing bonds, as may be done under the bill passed by the last Congress? If you are not ready to do one of these three things, be careful what plan you adopt for the extension of this service. If by hasty, extravagant legislation you make either necessary, then prepare for the wrath of the people whom you must confront in November. Under the contract system the service can be extended wherever needed at only a small increase over the star-route service.

The prosperous times that now surround us will not continue always, and I tell the gentlemen who say they do not care what it costs that a proposition to increase the number of officeholders 50,000 or 60,000 is one of the most momentous and dangerous propositions, in my judgment, that has been presented in this Congress or in any other in recent years.

Think of it. By voting down this bill you declare that you will not have contractors with fixed terms of service, and that you want officeholders, and for life. From the standpoint of economy and good administration my argument against such a scheme ought to commend itself to Republicans. But I ask all Democrats to advert to the platform declaration of your party in 1896 against a life tenure. I will read it, and I hope it will burn itself into the convictions of all who profess the Democratic faith:

We are opposed to life tenure in public service, except as provided by the Constitution. We favor appointments based on merit, fixed terms of office, and such an administration of the civil-service laws as will afford equal opportunity to all citizens of ascertained fitness.

As against a system that invites bids from every citizen along each route, it is proposed to put from 40,000 to 60,000 persons upon the salary roll, to be taken care of from the time they enter the service until they die; because I know, as every member of the Appropriations Committee knows, that it is utterly impossible ever to get rid of any bureau when once established permanently.

We can not even weed out the inefficient clerks in the best-regulated bureaus of the Government. Fasten these men upon your pay roll and they will stay there, to be supported by taxes as long as they live, unless the system you adopt has the effect to weight down the service so that it must be stopped; and if that is done, those who have not the service will never get it, and those who have received it to some extent will get no more. Will anyone argue that it would be right to give it to one section and refuse it to another, as has been done?

I want to answer briefly some of the objections made to the carrier system. I could not help but be amused at the suggestion of the gentleman from Virginia that the contract carrier will be less polite than the officeholder. Why, sir, when did the gentleman learn that by giving a man an office for life you make him polite? Candidates are often polite while they are seeking the office; but the gruffest and most insulting people we meet anywhere are those who feel themselves intrenched by the civil-service law—protected for life against removal and indifferent to those who do not hold office. It does not affect all persons in this way; but it is a mistake to assume that life tenure conduces to politeness.

It is argued that these contractors will be the agents of the people, not of the Government. Why, Mr. Chairman, can we not make the contractors the agents of the people and the Government and make them responsible? I remember that in my little service here we once had a Sergeant-at-Arms who was supposed to be only the agent of the members. He stole $85,000 of our money, including $365 of mine, of which I have never gotten a dollar. Congress at once, by law, made the Sergeant-at-Arms a disbursing officer of the Government and placed him under bond. And now the Sergeant-at-Arms of the House is the agent of the Government, not our agent. We can as easily make the contractor the agent of the Government as we can carriers. So there is nothing in that argument.

You can do by regulation for the contractor just what you can do for the officeholder. But it is objected that these contractors would be "cheap" men. Mr. Chairman, if we get competent men, that is just what we want.

We will then get three contracts where we now get two, and I will undertake to say that if you will pass this bill, I will get all the men needed in Arkansas on all routes not exceeding 20 20 miles in length for $300, if you will permit them to do express work.

In my country, in the industrial pursuits, labor is paid as high a price perhaps as in any district in the United States, ranging from $1.50 to $5 a day in the mills. That is the usual salary of the operators in the mills; but the farm hands can not command exceeding $15 and $20 a month, and never exceeding $25, and then they do not work twelve months in the year either. Clerks can not command salaries exceeding $50; expert bookkeepers can not get over $75 a month. Ministers and school-teachers preach and teach all over my country for from $300 to $500 a year, in the rural districts, and in the towns rarely ever get $1,000; and yet you want to put upon the country 50,000 mail carriers in uniform drawing $1,000 a year.

You can get young men—competent young men—to do the work for $300 and $400. Yea, Mr. Chairman, you will find on every mail route in my State, and I believe in every other State in the United States, some man who has but one leg or but one arm, or some physical defect that disables him from active manual labor, who would be glad to get these routes of 20 miles for $300 a year. I know one of the best mail carriers that I ever saw, who takes the mail out of my own town, 18 miles and back again, and does it for $340 a year.

He is a courteous, competent man, able and willing to do such work; but as he only has one arm he can not do farm labor. Why should such men not have a chance to earn a living? Why should not this service have this labor? The service has been extended in the most thickly settled parts of the country, where the roads are good, where the people are convenient to post-offices, and refused in sparsely settled communities where the people are miles from any office. In my country, where they can not get a post-office within 5 miles of them, and where the roads are bad, the Department does not give us any kind of service. It is often impossible to get an office established, and if we do we only get special service. Under the contract system, if you will permit these people to do express business and carry telegrams and packages, they will supplement their pay, and by the competition in bidding the Government will get the benefit of this and the contractors will still get living salaries in every community, and give the people the service in that respect so much needed and wanted.

Now, under your carrier system this is not likely to be done. Under our contract system it will be done. So, Mr. Chairman, I appeal to this committee in behalf of a section of country that is in need of better mail facilities to go slow upon a system that will by reason of its expense prevent improvement where most needed.

I believe the mail is the greatest educator that we have for grown up people, and I have repeatedly, from the first Congress I entered until the last, advocated the increase of the appropriation for star-route service in order that more people might have the benefit of mails; but I have been defeated in every proposition I have made, and now, lastly, I appeal to you not to so hedge about this system with officeholders and so discriminate against the private citizen that it will make it impossible for people in our country to ever get the benefit of it. [Applause.]

[Mr. DAVIDSON addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. SWANSON. I yield twenty minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. KERN].

Mr. KERN. Mr. Chairman, I do not rise for the purpose of questioning the integrity of the intentions, or the ability of the eminent gentlemen who compose this committee. On the contrary, I believe that the men who compose this committee are absolutely honest, thoroughly able, and highly honorable. I shall not attempt to discuss this question from any standpoint of personality, but I shall rather attempt to go into the principle of the matter.

I am opposed to this bill because I am an unfaltering and uncompromising supporter of the free rural mail delivery system. I am opposed to it because, in my opinion, if it is enacted into a law it will seriously impair the usefulness of that system. I am opposed to it because, in my belief, it will bring the system now so much admired by the people into contempt with the people. I believe that the passage of this bill will in its effect amount to the planting of a powder magazine under the system which will, in its final operation, lead to its sure destruction.

This bill proposes to inaugurate the radical change of substituting the contract system in the employment of the carriers on the free rural mail-delivery routes which have been established in this country and which are hereafter to be established for the system of employing the carriers by appointment under the merit system and paying them a fixed salary for their labor. This proposed departure looks to me like retrogression. It looks to me like taking a step backward in the administration of the affairs of this Government. The watchword of this and every other Congress that meets here should be progress instead of the reverse. Every step we take here should be a cautious but sure step in advance instead of to the rear.

The contract system has been tried in every department of our vast and intricate Government machinery from the school districts and the township up to the performance of the most important functions of the National Government. The objections to it have been revealed by a long line of experience. They seem to inhere in the system itself. They can only be cured by the abandonment of the system. One need not go far in his investigations to discover the fact that the higher and more progressive thought of the country unqualifiedly condemns it.

It is true that it does at times result in cheaper service for the Government, if cheapness be the end sought. It seems to me that in this instance the end in view should be a decidedly different one. We should not merely ask ourselves the question, in determining how to cast our votes on this bill, how can we obtain the cheapest possible service, but it is the part of wisdom to inquire, in this important connection, how can we obtain the best possible service for the people whom we are seeking to benefit, and how can we best promote the happiness of the people and sow the seeds of good will and the most cordial relations among them instead of the seeds of hatred and discord?

The ends last named will certainly not be attained by the adoption of the contract system in the rural free mail delivery department of this Government. There never was a greater breeder of discord and dissension among the people than this very contract system which we have heard so eloquently eulogized by the other side on this floor during the last few days. It has always been a veritable apple of discord. Why, the accursed thing has again and again set father against son; son against father; sister against brother and brother against sister; brother against brother and friend against friend; neighbor against neighbor and citizen against citizen. It has caused quarrels enough to disturb the peace of the world. It has stamped more bitter frowns on human faces and made more men unforgiving and implacable enemies than all other causes—and I except none—on earth combined.

The objection is seriously urged by well-meaning men on this floor that the appointive system, if continued in this Department, will lead to abuse and to the improper and corrupt use of political power. I have no shadow of a doubt in my mind that there will be some abuses committed under the appointive system, and that there will be attempts made by peanut politicians to prostitute the free rural mail-delivery system for selfish and partisan purposes. The complete elimination of the possibility of these things, which are universally condemned by all good men—and these are happily greatly in the majority in this country—would perhaps necessitate a radical change in human nature as it is now constituted.

The only remedy I know for the cure of this evil is to enlighten public sentiment. Arouse the community against the contemptible scoundrels who undertake to debauch the most sacred and useful institutions of the people for great or trifling private gain and it will be sure to meet with the rebuke and punishment which it so richly deserves. Hold them up to the scorn and the contempt which their unmanly and unpatriotic conduct merits. An extended free rural mail-delivery service will help very materially to facilitate all just efforts to reach and inform the people to arouse their righteous indignation and their justifiable scorn against methods of that kind.

They can be taught without much difficulty, to repel the selfish advances of the interested fixer and to despise his shrewdest and most cunningly contrived manipulations. I for one do not permit the anticipations of danger from this source to frighten me into casting a vote against a principle which my better judgment tells me is unsound and against a policy which I consider not only unwise but totally vicious and most certainly destructive of a system which, I take it, we are charged with building up and not undermining and tearing down.

But when it is intimated that under the blessed boughs of the contract system the atmosphere is pure and uncontaminated and that that system enjoys immunity from manipulation, abuse, corruption, and fraud, the estimable gentlemen who convey the intimation seem to me to be indulging in biting sarcasm and keenest satire, while the knowing smile significantly and perhaps keep their peace and say nothing. There has been more fraud perpetrated, more unfairness indulged in, and more crime committed, and more guilty men have escaped just and deserved punishment and have successfully dodged the penitentiary in performing the work of awarding government contracts than in any other field of chicanery, rascality, and criminal endeavor.

It is not because the criminals connected with this work of awarding Government contract have been more numerous than in other fields of human effort, but because the temptation has been infinitely greater and the probabilities of detection and arrest decidedly smaller. On this point I defy successful contradiction. Carefully sealed envelopes are stealthily opened by many a man charged with the solemn duty of awarding the contracts, and the bids of his competitors are shown and their contents disclosed to the favorite with the pull without the slightest compunction of conscience whatever.

Rake offs are cheerfully accepted and stipulated for in the coldest and most business-like manner. Good bids are rejected for inadequate reason in the interests of the most flagrant kind of partiality and favoritism. Corrupt combinations are formed to avoid the disastrous results of reckless and ruinous underbidding. The crime of bribery dates from the invention of the contract system. The contract system gave it its birth in the most natural way. It is the legitimate mother of crimes unnumbered and innumerable. It is the bane which lies at the root of the evils of all of our great cities to-day, and which has poisoned and now poisons municipal politics throughout the length and breadth of this great country.

The contract system has never won or increased the respect of any man for his Government. The winner in the contest as well as the loser was compelled to engage in a distasteful and disgusting cutthroat business to attain his victory, which is, as a rule, if it is honestly won under the ruinous competition of this day and age, not worth the having; and perhaps he would be better off if he had lost it, too, and the triumph had gone to some other unfortunate victim. I know of many cases where the winner came out loser and of some where prosperous business men have become hopeless bankrupts and pitiable objects of public charity, and of some where they wound up the miserable transaction in suicides' graves.

I take it, Mr. Chairman, that the free rural mail-delivery system, which in this country is still in its infancy and which is so promising of bright results for the future, is too splendid an institution to have its chances for survival imperiled at this stage of its development by injecting into its make-up the deadly virus of the accursed contract system. If the contract system is to be granted a renewal of life, why commence to reanimate it in connection with this new and in every way vigorous branch of the Postal Department of our Government?

I fail to see the reason why the rural carrierships should be let to the lowest bidder while postmasters and other employees of the Government, whose work is no more important, and in many cases not nearly so important as the work of the rural carriers of the mails, should be paid a fixed salary. If the principle on which the proposed departure is to rest be sound, and I deny its soundness, and the intended policy wise, and I deny its wisdom, then I fail to see why all of the jobs which the Government has to give should not be let to the lowest bidder and the much-praised auctioneering principle and policy given universal application. If it would result in economy, fairness, and an improved public service in the case of the free rural mail carriers, then is it not reasonable to expect the same effects to follow the same causes in connection with other governmental positions? It is contended that some routes are more easily and can therefore be more cheaply carried than others. This contention is correct. But so can some jobs be more easily and therefore more cheaply performed in the Treasury, Pension, and other departments of the Government. Yet in these departments employees in the same grade receive a uniform wage, although they do not by any means render equal service.

The rural mail carrier is a workingman. He is required to work hard for his living for small pay. He is compelled to brave all sorts of inclement weather. Rain, snow, or storm, scorching summer heat or the bitterest cold of winter is not accepted as an excuse for his staying at home. The laborer is worthy of his hire. Every workingman in this country is entitled to living wages and a little more. While I am a believer in strict governmental economy, I do not believe that this Government should set the example to the country of paying starvation wages to workingmen. It should rather set the example of paying liberal wages to the men and women who perform the actual work, hold no sinecures, and do the hard knocking in the service of the Government.

We do not hesitate to pay a conquering hero in the Philippine Islands a salary of $20,000 per year, outside of the perquisites which attach to this position of glorious expansion and benevolent assimilation, but we engage in all sorts of cheeseparing and debate on this floor for many days on the question of whether a rural mail carrier shall receive $500 or only $250 per annum for the hard and useful toil which he performs. I believe in spending less money for conquest and more for the dissemination of intelligence.

I believe in spending less money for the manufacture and use of the murderous implements of bloody warfare and more for education. I believe that when the free rural mail system was established in this country a great and mighty torch was planted on this hemisphere, which will shed its rays of calcium light to the remotest and darkest corners of it. It will bring blessings to the people, where all the wars bring curses in their train.

The farmers of this country are entitled to the best mail service which this Government can give them. The farm is the cradle not only of the statesmanship of the future in America as it has been in the past, but of the leading business talent and the dominant professional talent which will have in its hands and under its guidance the business and professional affairs of the country as well. Our statesmen are not reared in luxurious palaces and antique castles. Their names are not adorned with high-sounding titles. They come from the lonely farmhouses uncontaminated with vice and unaffected by the enervating influences of wealth and luxury. Our great characters come not from the top heap of human society, but they rise from the bottom up.

Every farmer is a business man in every sense which that term implies. He is certainly as much entitled to have his letters brought to the door of his humble home as is the man who resides within a more pretentious edifice inside the limits of a city.

He, like his fellow-men who are more fortunately located, is also interested in the daily doings of the world in which he lives. He is therefore entitled to receive his newspapers which contain the record of the history of the world as it is made regularly and in seasonable time. The free rural mail-delivery system is simply a sensible supplement made to our great educational system, and it should be cherished, fostered, and preserved.

I desire to say in addition that the wage system has become a fixity in our Government. Experience has proved the expedience and efficiency of that system. The demand among the people is not for an abridgement of this wage system, but for the extension of it. The workingmen of this country, among which I include the farmers, are this day demanding that the navy-yards be placed on the same practical and altogether satisfactory basis that the Government Printing Office stands on, and on which it is being so successfully conducted. I place the contract system in the same category with the antiquated fee system still prevailing in many of our courts.

Both are totally vicious and are ruthlessly condemned by the dearly bought experience of many years. I place it in the same category with the abominable and fossilized piecework system which prevails in the mail-bag repair shop conducted by this Government in this enlightened city. This shop is a proper subject for the investigation of the humane society. In that shop women with children to support are compelled to eke out a living on incomes which some days do not exceed the munificent sum of 40 or 50 cents.

This shop is a disgrace to this country. Its very existence is an outrage and an atrocious black splotch on the otherwise fair escutcheon of this great Government. It is one of the very worst sweat shops within our borders. The system in vogue there, in the interests of preserving our good name, should be speedily abolished, and the wage system should be substituted for it, and the people who are compelled by force of unfortunate circumstances to eke out a living amid those unpleasant surroundings should be paid fair and living wages for their hard and unremitting toil. I mention this fact only to show to you the evils of systems other than the one which this bill threatens to destroy in connection with an important department of the Government.

Let the farmers of this country have the free mail-delivery service untrammeled, unencumbered, and unimpaired. So perfect the system that in the fullness of time every farmer under our flag can have his mail delivered to his home every day. Bring his mail to him as well as you take it to the bank and the counting house and the exchange, and give him a chance to get his own communications to the men he does business with into the mails. Bring his newspapers to him regularly and promptly and you will greatly raise the standard of intelligence in this country.

On the universal education of the people and on the average degree of intelligence that prevails among them depend the safety and the purity of our free institutions. It was the great Jefferson who wrote that he would rather live in a country with newspapers and without a government than to live in a country with a government without newspapers were he compelled to take his choice between the two.

His great mind grasped the vital principle that an enlightened people can be trusted to be orderly and to exercise a broad and general justice in the end. He well knew that in the presence of ignorance, selfishness, and cupidity, with these the predominating factors in life, no sort of government could be beneficent or could long endure. Let the light shine. Light the torches of intelligence all along the line. Disseminate knowledge; plant facts; spread education. Do nothing that will have a tendency to tear down the great aid to education and enlightenment which this newly born rural mail-carrier system is.

Mr. KERN. Only one more minute, Mr. Chairman, and I am done.

Mr. SWANSON. I yield two minutes more to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. KERN. Be not stingy with the carriers. Do not let the charge of cheapscrewism hold good against you in this connection. Pay them good and fixed wages and then require of them that they perform their work honestly, efficiently and impartially, and without partisan predjudice or bias. Make of it a system to which this country can point with just pride as it is now doing and has just reason to do to its efficient and nonpartisan railway mail-clerk system and its magnificent printing office.

Place all in the same grade and class, on the same footing, with the same requirements, and on the same pay, and let that pay be adequate and reasonable. This Government can not afford to be niggardly with its honest, useful, and faithful toilers, and subject them to the manipulations of the cold-blooded auctioneer. I shall cast my vote against this bill, because I honestly believe that if it becomes a law it will destroy the free rural mail-carrier system. [Loud applause.]

Mr. SWANSON. I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. TALBERT].

Mr. TALBERT. Mr. Chairman, as the gentleman who has just taken his seat has so eloquently said, the establishment of the system of free rural delivery is intended primarily and to be maintained afterwards in the interests of the great farming class of this country in common with all others living in the country, that class and that industry which is the foundation stone of all happiness, of all greatness, and of all prosperity; and from the time that I first entered this House in the Fifty-third Congress I have been an ardent supporter of this free rural-delivery system in the interests of that large class of people who are only recognized, so to speak, by this Government, by the auditor, and the tax collector once a year and sometimes oftener.

It is singular and strange to me that whenever a system is evolved and put into operation here which tends to elevate and to upbuild that class, to make country life more desirable, to diffuse general knowledge and intelligence throughout the country amongst the great mass of the people—people who are isolated naturally—that there should always appear on this floor so many eloquent advocates against that system, who all want to say at once that this will cost too much, because, forsooth, it applies to that class. You never hear anything about economy when the managers of great corporations, the great controllers of trusts, and the great monopolists come here and want anything. They have advocate upon top of advocate; but, strange to say, when something is proposed for the great mass of the people—the farmers of this country—who produce that which feeds and clothes the world, and who after feeding and clothing themselves and every other citizen, and every other class and profession, send enough abroad to pay the balance of trade of this nation in its business with other nations, you find so many crying out it will cost too much. Why begin to economize on the farmers?

About the very first speech, or among the first speeches, that I made was made in the Fifty-third Congress in the interest of an appropriation of $20,000, which was introduced by Mr. Moses, then a member of the Post-Office Appropriation Committee, as an amendment to that bill. I advocated it in a speech, Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi and several others advocated it, and it passed, and that was the first practical appropriation that the Postmaster-General ever made use of which started this great system. This sum was then increased from session to session and from Congress to Congress till it reached its present proportions. I have heard men get up on this floor here, who had hardly thought of Congress then, and claim to be the great organizers and starters of this system. It is not strange that so many should now want to daddy the project. I heard of it before I ever came to Congress, and have only done what I could to push it along, because I saw it was good.

Now, the first argument against this system is that it will cost too much. If the people in the country are entitled to a service at all, they are entitled to an efficient service. Look over the bill that is to come up for consideration soon, from the Post-Office Appropriation Committee. You find there the enormous sum of $17,000,000 or $18,000,000 appropriated for free delivery in the cities and large towns all over this country of ours. I am not here to militate against or oppose that appropriation. I say let them have it, because it is right. In addition, they have appropriations for street-car tickets, bicycles, and every other facility in addition to the large salaries that these city carriers get. But I ask in the name of common sense is it right to deny a similar privilege to the people in the country? I maintain that the country people are as deserving of such things as our city people. If you wish to economize, why is it that you do not incorporate the contract system in this bill for the free delivery of the mail in the large cities and towns of this country? Then at least you could have claimed to be consistent. But you want to commence your parsimony only on one class of citizens.

I do not wish to impugn the motives of members upon this great committee, but it does seem to me that it is a move toward disorganizing and destroying this great system of rural free delivery which the farmers have so much interest in, about the only thing the Government does to help make country life more desirable. Who is it that fights your battles for you? Who is it that pays 80 per cent of the taxes if it is not the people in the rural districts? And I say that whether you intend it or not, if this bill should pass it would prove the death knell of free rural delivery; and, in my humble judgment, there are some gentlemen here who would destroy that system under the pretended head of economy.

When the agricultural appropriation bill comes in here there is always some smart Alec who gets up and moves to strike out the appropriation for the small pittance to purchase seeds to send out amongst the farmers. Strange it is that there is always somebody here to fight that great class who have the burden of this Government upon their shoulders. I for one am sick and tired of hearing these silly little cries against the appropriation for these great people. I am an economist. I stand for economy; but at the same time I stand for an efficient service in the affairs of this Government. Under the contract system you can not get an efficient service. Why is it that you say it costs too much? I care not how much it costs, so we get value received, and so we give this service to the people of the country, who are always ready and willing to defend it in time of peace and in time of war, and this service will eventually pay for itself.

You may say you do not intend to cripple the service; but, my friends, the spider may not have said that he intended to eat the fly when he invited him into his parlor. So it is with you here in your cunning way. You ask men to vote for something here that will deprive the people of the country of this convenience—of this great civilizer and enlightener—which will let the people who live in the country know that we regard their wants in some other way than by sending the tax assessor and tax collector to them. Let them feel that they have an interest in this great Government as well as all of the other classes who are safely living in the great cities and towns.

Now, I do not stand up here to claim that the farmers own this country. It is not their country; it is not the lawyers' country; it is not the doctors' country; it is not the city man's country; but it is our country, and all should work together for the mutual upbuilding and benefit of each and every class. I say do not make fish of one and flesh of the other. Give to the country people the same conveniences and the same amount of money as you do to the people who live in the cities. Ah, my friends, if it was not for the sturdy yeomanry and the honest nobility who live in the country, with their conservatism and virtue, to stand out against the corruption and vice of the congested cities and towns, it does seem to me sometimes that the great Creator would have to burn it up in self-defense.

Of course I speak in a general way, because I know that thousands of good and virtuous people live in our great cities. But I say give us something that will enlighten the country, that will do justice to the country boys who are already too willing to leave the farms, to leave their homes in the country and go to the overcrowded towns and cities, where they can part their hair in the middle and wear standing collars so high as to resemble a whitewashed fence around a lunatic asylum. [Laughter.] Let them stay in the country, beautify and build up their country homes and make them happy. God made the country, but man made the cities and towns. Let us take care of all of them—good, bad, and indifferent—by doing justice to all alike. [Laughter and applause.]

I am against the enactment of any such measure as this, because it means the dissolution and disarrangement and disorganization of the plan which has been adopted in establishing the carrying of the mail free to the people of this great country of ours. The farmers of this country alone have no protection. Every other class has been protected. The farmer is left alone, as it were, to battle with the soil and climate and adverse circumstances, unsophisticated as he is, knowing nothing about the tricks and traffic of trade and the whittling process of speculation, knowing nothing about the grinding and oppressive operations of trusts and combinations, but ready to do his duty as the honest yeomanry of the country, the man always ready to respond to his country's call. Then let us do him justice as well as the others. I will stand for him, and I am willing to live and die, sink or swim with him. I am opposed to this bill, which means a disarrangement of the plan which gives the farmers what they ought to have. Let the present arrangement stand as it is, at least for the present. [Loud applause.]

Mr. SWANSON. I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER].

[Mr. LEVER addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. SWANSON. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MIERS.]

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, the people have more interest in this bill and the Post-Office appropriation bill than in any other that will be presented to Congress. Our mail system is unique and its degree of perfection is the wonder of everyone. It is made to serve the rich and the poor. Two cents will carry a letter to the business man on Wall street or to the cabin of the humblest citizen in the Republic. The system is being perfected until mail of all kinds is carried to the citizen farthest remote from the city as well as the closest. The general appropriation bill carries an appropriation of $137,916,598.75 for the purpose of disseminating mail to all classes. A very important bill is the one that raises the money to be appropriated, not by direct taxation, but by a tariff. It is paid by the poor as well as the rich. All consumption is made to pay into the Treasury of the United States. The people are therefore interested in tariff bills. During the time allotted me it is not practical to fully discuss the many virtues of the mail service nor the many unjust features of the tariff that raises the revenue. I will therefore confine myself to a discussion of the tariff that in my opinion adds nothing to the revenue, but builds and protects the trusts and masses the wealth of the country in the hands of a few.

There are many questions of great importance now confronting the American people and their Representatives in Congress, such as the Philippine question, the Cuban question, the canal question, the Chinese question, and the anarchy question, but I do not hesitate to say that none are of more importance than the question of the trusts.

In the terrifying growth and multiplication of these monopolistic combinations, and in their apparently irresistible power, resides the chief danger to the American Republic to-day. That it is a most grave danger no thinking man of patriotic fiber can deny. Even the Republican party, which is responsible for the trusts, recognizes the danger, or, at least, sees that the people recognize the danger, and, accordingly, that party has repeatedly, in its platforms, declared in one breath that the trusts must be regulated, while in the next breath it has declared for the high tariff, which alone has made the trusts possible and given them their supreme and despotic power.

The Republican party is the sole progenitor of the protective tariff; the tariff is the mother of trusts; therefore the Republican party is directly responsible for the trusts. This, Mr. Chairman, is a syllogism which is perfectly clear and logical and can be doubted or denied by no man.

But some say, Why all this tumult and panic about the trusts? What harm do they do? Do they not, on the contrary, do good? Wherein do they differ from other large business firms and companies? In so far as these are honest questions, propounded in a fair spirit, they deserve a fair answer.

In the first place, the trusts are not at all like the large business companies or corporations of former times. They differ from them not merely in dimensions, but also in their very nature and essence. Formerly a business house was formed to compete with other business houses in a certain line of commerce or production. The larger or more powerful it was, the larger and more powerful would be its competition. But even if it sought to monopolize trade in its particular line, it could rarely succeed in doing so, even for a short time, because other large and important houses would certainly spring up to dispute the field with them. Or, supposing that a house or corporation was the first in a new and unworked field, and thus had a monopoly at the start, it could not retain it long, for the same reason. Thus "competition" became and long remained the watchword of business, and it passed into a proverb that "Competition is the life of trade." And so it was. Through competition prices were regulated in a salutary and rational manner, and the people were sure of having good goods at fair prices, because if one firm tried to sell inferior goods another firm would come to the front with superior goods at the same price, or if one firm overcharged, the other competing firm would force it to come down to the proper and reasonable figures. In the same way competition acted as a conservator of good wages for laborers and employees in general. If one company tried to reduce wages, the result was soon seen in inferior work and goods, and the rival company, by keeping up the standard of wages and products, would win the lion's share of the popular patronage.

But now all this is changed by means of the trusts, and the watchword "competition" has given place to the watchword "combination" or "consolidation." The trust is not simply another business company entering the field in competition with other companies already therein. The trust is a combination of all the firms and companies and corporations in any particular line of business, so as to make one great consolidation of the many single companies or firms, and thus to stifle all competition and secure an absolute monopoly of the business. The trust not only absorbs all the separate houses and firms in that line of business, but also gets control of all the sources of supply for the goods handled in that business, and so prevents the formation of any new firms or companies outside of the trusts. It thus has the public at its mercy, so far as that line of goods is concerned. [Applause.]

This is a plain but correct statement in brief of the nature and operation of a trust, and the definition is so familiar to everybody that I should apologize for repeating it, except that it is necessary as a component part of the argument.

But the apologists for the trusts—and some of the apologists, by the way, were found in the inner circle of the Republican National Committee in 1900, and imprudently voiced their defense of the trusts at a dinner party late in the campaign, as may be remembered, greatly to the alarm of the more cautious party managers—the apologists for the trusts, I say, acknowledge the correctness of this definition, but they maintain that such combination is a good thing for the public; that it enables prices and output to be properly regulated, prevents overproduction, etc., and they even claim that it has benefited labor by increasing wages, and has benefited the purchasing community by diminishing prices.

Both of these claims are proved false by many authoritative statistical facts, including the figures of the last United States census, just published. According to the figures of the census on manufacturing, which have been completed for 33 States and Territories, the average wages of the laborers in all the manufacturing industries have declined 8 per cent since 1890. Specifically, in those 33 States and Territories 1,004,590 wage-earners received an average of $418.48 each per year, or $1.39 per day, in 1890; and 1,463,365 wage-earners in these same States and Territories received an average of $387.53 each per year, or $1.29 per day, in 1900. This shows an average decline of 8 per cent in those years, and there is nothing unfair in the comparison, because both 1890 and 1900 were prosperous years. The period of this decline, remember, was a period when the trusts came into power and when their reign was becoming more and more supreme with every passing year, until now they have nearly every branch of industry by the throat and can do to labor whatever they will.

But this average decline of 8 per cent in wages does not tell the worst of the story, for in some of the more important manufacturing States the decline has been truly alarming. In New Jersey, for instance, we find by these same census figures that in 1890 the average wages earned in the various manufacturing industries was $2.24 a day, and in 1900 only $1.52 a day, thus showing a terrible decline of 32 per cent in wages in New Jersey during the ten years following 1890.

As to prices, the annual statement by Dun's Review last January is sufficiently instructive. Dun's Review, as is well known, is one of our highest commercial authorities. It is entirely unbiased and unpartisan, and its figures are accepted without question by all business men. Its careful and exhaustive compilation of the prices of the various commodities, including foods of all kinds, clothing, metals, and all other commodities, on January 1, 1902, as compared with 1900 and 1890, shows that the cost of living, as gauged by these prices, is nearly 7 per cent higher now than in 1900, and more than 11 per cent higher than in 1890. Here we have an increase of 11 per cent in the prices of the necessaries of life and a decrease of 8 per cent in wages since 1890 as a result of the practical operations of the trusts. What a commentary is this on the "jollying" given to the laboring men of this country by Mr. Carnegie and other trust magnates, when they declare, as Mr. Carnegie recently declared in a meeting of railroad employees, that "under present conditions the wages of labor tend to rise and the prices of the necessaries of life tend to fall!" What nerve this displays, Mr. Chairman, when every man and woman in the country who buys anything knows that prices are now very high, and higher than formerly; that food of all kinds is high, coal high, wood high, furniture and clothing high, and that work is not as well paid as it was a few years ago.

The trusts control not only the wages and prices but also the output. The apologists say that the trusts regulate the output according to the demand. No doubt they can do so if they wish, but they can also keep the output far below the demand, and thus send up prices, or they can even set high prices for their products irrespective of the demand and irrespective of the supply, and that is just what they are doing now. Take coal, for example. The coal trust has been setting prices arbitrarily all through the season. For instance, last summer it was given out that the price of such and such coal should be at such and such a figure until, say, November, when it would be raised to such and such a higher figure. Sure enough, when the time came the price was raised by proclamation. And in this month or next month it may be raised again by a similar arbitrary proclamation. These prices are established by the trust at its own sweet will. No reference is made as to the output. The public does not know whether coal is plenty or scarce. The trust mines as much or as little as it chooses and sets whatever price it chooses. The public must have coal: it must take the coal furnished by the trust; there is no other coal to be had; the coal trust, therefore, has the public absolutely beneath its heel.

Not only so, but the trust also dictates what kind of coal the public shall buy. In former times if a purchaser bought a ton of Lackawanna and did not like it, he might try next time a ton of, say, Lehigh. But now certain kinds of coal are shipped to certain sections, and those sections must have their particular kind of coal or none. An illustration of this fact came to my notice in central New York last autumn. In one of the towns on the line of the Delaware and Hudson Railroad a citizen who had just settled there and knew nothing of the local coal market ordered a ton of coal, and on trial it proved not precisely satisfactory. Accordingly when he went to get a second ton he asked the dealer for another kind, but the dealer informed him that there was only one kind to be had in that town or in any of the other towns served by that railroad, namely, the Delaware and Hudson Lackawanna coal; that the railroad would not transport any other coal except at prohibitive rates of freight. Inquiry of other dealers confirmed his statement.

This illustration shows the practical working of the trusts. They dictate what the citizen shall buy and the prices he shall pay. There is no escape from it. There is no competition, no opportunity for him to exercise selection or choice. If one dealer's goods or prices seem unsatisfactory to him, there is no use in his going to another dealer, for there he will find the same goods and the same prices, all dictated by the oppressive, despotic, merciless, almighty trusts. There is nothing to hinder the trusts from sending up the prices of all the necessaries of life to-morrow 10 per cent or 100 per cent; nothing to hinder them from charging $100 a ton for coal, or $100 for a barrel of flour, or $1 a pound for writing paper, or $1 a pound for sugar. The trusts have grown so bold and so confident that they seem to have very little fear left, very little sense of responsibility, very little disposition to restrain themselves. They are not afraid of the courts. They are not afraid of Congress or the Administration of the Government, so long as the Republican party is in control. The only thing they are still a little afraid of—the only thing that still tends to restrain them within decent bounds—is the fury of the people. The trusts are putting on the screws as tightly as they think the public will stand it, and they would tighten them still further if they were not afraid of arousing a public sentiment that would put an end to their way of doing business. [Applause.]

There are now at least 400 trusts in the United States, capitalized at the enormous figure of about $7,000,000,000. Many of these combinations are comparatively small. Many are only partial in their control, and many are simply local. But the number of the big trusts, reaching all over the country and in nearly every case absolutely controlling their several commodities, is nearly 100; and among the products thus monopolized and practically removed from competition are sugar, oil, linseed oil, beef and other meat products, whisky, beer, tobacco, malt, the telephone, pottery, wire, tin plate, iron and steel manufactures, copper manufactures, electrical manufactures, celluloid ware, baking powder, biscuits, flour, shot and lead manufactures, leather goods, rubber goods, brooms, matches, paper, silver plate, coal, lumber, cement, corundum, salt, varnish, kodaks, coffins, mirrors, wall paper, elevators, safes, refrigerators, sash and doors, shovels, print cloths, dyewoods, envelopes, window shades, and hosiery. Think of all these articles and many others under the control of a comparatively few men, each industry dominated by a single corporation or a few corporations acting in combination with all these billions of dollars at their backs! Think of all these necessaries of life being completely removed from the field of healthy business competition, and their prices fixed arbitrarily by a few capitalists in order to distend still further their already enormous fortunes at the expense of the toiling, poverty-stricken masses!

But it may be said, "What can be done? Where is there a remedy to be found? Now that these trusts have been legally established, how can they be legally dislodged or their evils counteracted without public disorder or violence?" Yes, there is a way, and the sooner it is followed the better. As the tariff is responsible for the trusts, so the reformation of tariff abuses and inequalities will give the death blow to the trusts. The trusts have stifled competition in the United States because the tariff on the products controlled by them in this country has been prohibitive of the entrance of similar foreign-made products at lower prices, and consequently our own American purchasers and consumers are compelled to pay whatever prices the trusts may command them to pay. Only let competition come in from abroad, and a hole would at once be made in the trust balloon, and down it would come to the ground in the twinkling of an eye, with disaster to all its inflated highflyers. [Applause.]

More than that, much more than that, by cutting off the tariff, which has fostered the monopoly of the trusts, competition may be secured once again at home, and without such competition from abroad or at home, or both, the country can never be happy or safe or really prosperous, for competition is the paramount law of industrial life. The apparent prosperity of the present day is neither genuine nor general. There is undoubtedly great, tremendous, very unjustly disproportionate prosperity to comparatively few. But it is confined to those who are on the inside of the trusts. This favored class of financial aristocrats is getting fabulously rich at a rapid pace, but the employees of the trusts are not getting rich, the laboring people of the country are not getting rich, the small merchants are not getting rich. As I have shown, the wage earners are getting less wages now than ten years ago, and the cost of living is greater now than then. Surely a corporation that is strong enough to dictate terms to 80,000,000 people can get along without protection for the sake of protection.

It is significant to notice, by the way, that nearly one-half of the trusts have been chartered during the last two years, which is the very period when the greatest advance in the prices of the necessaries of life took place; and now the country is menaced by the worst trust of all—the grand climacteric of the trusts—the pending money trust, which actually proposes to get hold of and control the money of the country, and will do so if not checked in some way. The immense power wielded by the consolidation of all our leading money interests and multimillionaires into one concentrated money syndicate may perhaps be faintly and approximately imagined, but the actual realization of its disastrous consequences would not come to the people until the power of the syndicate had been firmly established, and then it would be too late to escape from its remorseless clutches. Such a syndicate could and would secure a monopoly of all the country's banking and money lending and borrowing, and would manipulate the United States Treasury at its pleasure. It would come to this, that a few rich men would own the country, as the trusts practically own it now.

This money syndicate would be nothing more than the logical result of the trust system now in vogue. The system may be compared to an ever-narrowing centrifugal motion. At first all the industries are seen revolving around freely in the business world, like the planets, comets, and asteroids of the solar system. Then one consolidation takes place, and the revolution becomes narrower and more contracted, and then another consolidation, and then others, with less and less freedom and scope of revolution, until all the separate individuals of the system are finally consolidated into one, all the forces of mutual attraction and repulsion are dissipated, all balance lost, and the whole system, thus broken up and ruined by consolidation, falls into the fiery central sun and is annihilated.

In other words, every consolidation narrows the field of competition and restricts trade. The more competitors the better. This is the universal, essential law of healthy business life.

The best way to strike at the trusts, I repeat, is through the tariff. The tariff is the mother of trusts, and the trusts can not live without the continued sustenance derived from their mother tariff. The tariff should be so reduced as to let in foreign competition along all lines controlled by the trusts, and as demanded by the Kansas City platform. It is not alone the Democrats of the United States who perceive this necessity. We have abundant Republican authority of a very high order for making this demand. The great Republican financier and leader, John Sherman, on the 15th of October, 1888, said in the Senate:

> Whenever this free competition is evaded or avoided by combinations of individuals or corporations, the duties should be reduced and foreign competition invited.

On August 26, 1890, Senator Plumb, of Kansas, in a speech delivered against the then pending tariff bill, said:

> There are dozens of lines of manufactures covered by the terms of this bill which are controlled by trusts. I do not know of any better way to start in, at least to reduce the exactions of the trusts, than to cut down the shelter behind which trusts are created.

The late Governor Mount, of Indiana, in December, 1899, in a public speech, said:

> I emphatically favor removing all tariff protection from every industry that belongs to a combination in restraint of trade.

Republican sentiment in that direction is not confined to former days. There is plenty of it in this present Congress, and it will yet make itself heard in spite of gag laws, framed by Republican autocrats in behalf of their friends and allies, the trusts. The bill of the Republican member from Wisconsin to reduce the duties on iron and steel is a step in the right direction. The latest reports from the steel trust, officially issued not long ago, show that that corporation is making 10 per cent on its nominal capitalization of about $1,300,000,000—making a net profit, it is said, of about $120,000,000 a year. But it has been proved that fully three-quarters of the capital of this monstrous and bloated concern is water, so that in reality the trust is making $120,000,000 a year on an actual capital of about $400,000,000, or in reality about 30 per cent.

No wonder the directors and other insiders of this trust feel jubilant and hug themselves as they reflect upon their golden future prospects of making more than a hundred millions a year by selling a ton of steel rails to our own people for $28 and to the English people for $21, and by other transactions of a similar nature. It is our extraordinarily high tariff that enables the trusts to do such things—and they are all doing so, as they have opportunity—making money by overcharging the American people; and they are enabled to overcharge by reason of the high tariff, which keeps up an artificial level of prices in this country and keeps out foreign competition. I know it will be said that in this case the price of steel rails is higher in England than it is here. It has been so, I grant, occasionally for brief periods during the last three or four years, but it is not so normally. And even if it were so always, is that any justification for the continuation of the tariff on steel? Is it not rather the best argument for its discontinuance? If we can make steel rails cheaper than England or any other foreign country, what is the use of the tariff? Its only effect is to keep prices up higher than they ought to be in this country, so that our own steel trust can have a pretext for continuing their home price $28 a ton, while secretly selling to England at $21 a ton.

I have taken the steel trust as an example. But any of the other trusts would have done as well. They are alike. They are all made possible by the stifling of competition through combination and consolidation in this country and through the shutting off of competition from other countries by a high tariff. They are all fattening themselves on the lifeblood of the American people by wringing money out of them to pay the high prices made possible by the tariff; and many of them, like the steel trust, sell their manufactures for lower prices abroad than at home. This is true in the case of our American-made agricultural implements, which can be bought in South America or in Canada for less money than our own farmers are charged for them. It is true also of our oil machinery, which, as the gentleman from North Carolina reminded us the other day, is sold cheaper to the people living on the shores of the Caspian Sea than to our own oil producers in Texas.

Is not such a state of things monstrous, Mr. Chairman? It only goes to show what a monstrous thing our high tariff is. The tariff was originally formed with the very idea of shutting off foreign competition for the benefit of our home industry; but it was understood as a matter of course that competition at home should be as free as air. The most radical supporters of the protective theory in former times would never have dreamed of preventing all competition at home. Yet it is now seen that the vicious and dangerous protective system had within it all the time the germ fatal to all competition which has now ripened and bloomed forth into the poisonous flower of the trusts. It is now evident to all that the unavoidable tendency of the present tariff is toward monopolies, and at the present day the only ones who appear in defense of the tariff are those who are interested in the monopolistic trusts or expect to be benefited by them. The Republican party, I declare without hesitation, is the party of the trusts. It is kept alive by them, and in turn is doing its best to keep them alive. It depends upon the trusts for its sinews of war, and without the aid of the trusts it would not have succeeded in the campaign of 1900. That is as well settled as any fact recorded in history since the creation of the world.

Aside from a revision and reduction of the tariff, cutting off or reducing the duties on articles handled by the trusts, there is another repressive measure that ought to be adopted, which would materially diminish the power of the trusts for evil. That is, that a hole should be made in them to let all the water out. [Applause.] No doubt three-quarters of all the trusts' stocks is water. There is no need to dilate upon the harmfulness of such a state of things. Every corporation should be compelled to have all its capital paid up and all its stock paid for at par. This requisition would make most of the trusts "die a bornin'." Here the tariff comes in again. As has been well said by another:

> The tariff is undoubtedly indirectly responsible for a large part of the water in trust stocks. Had there been no tariff to enable prospective trusts to pay dividends on watered stocks, trust promoters could not have offered sufficient inducements to coalesce the naturally antagonistic producers in any particular industry. Not only, then, is the tariff responsible for many trusts, but it is responsible for much of the water in trust stocks. That this is true is evident not only from the fact that the most highly protected trusts are generally the most highly capitalized, but from the fact that promoters have been unable to form trusts in many industries not actually benefited by tariff duties.

I could easily multiply instances of the effect of the trusts on raising prices in this country. The case of printing paper is one of the clearest and most striking. It was said when the paper trust was formed that it would infallibly lower prices. Instead of that, all the promises of the trust in that respect have been broken, and the price of printing paper is at least 25 per cent higher than it was before the trust was formed. The same story is to be told about a hundred other commodities. The great evils incident to these cases have been due to the operation of the tariff. If there had been no tariff, creating an artificial standard of prices and keeping out the world's goods, there could have been no trusts; at least, no trusts absolutely controlling the various articles of production. If trusts are to exist at all, they should be subjected to competition with the whole world.

One of the worst of the trusts—not mentioned at all in the lists of trusts—is the great railroad trust of this country. It is not yet fully formed. It is in process of formation. Every year sees the consolidation process further advanced and the number of great combined lines increasing and bound together by "community of interest," instead of being competitors, as formerly. These great railroad combinations are supposed to be held in check by the interstate-commerce law and Commission; but the reports of the Commission have always been made up principally of details of violations of the law and a general bewailing of the impotency of the Commission to enforce their decrees. By discriminating freight rates in favor of big monopolies like the Standard Oil Company or the coal combine, these railroads assist in the building up of trusts in this country and in crushing small competitors. But if there were no big trusts for the railroads to cater to, the temptation to discrimination would become much less. In the final report of the Industrial Commission, Commissioner Phillips, himself a Republican, in the course of a striking supplementary statement, gives the following startling estimate of the present dimensions of our American monopolistic combinations:

American railroads, whose monopoly character is becoming more apparent, are stocked and bonded for about $11,500,000,000, and had net earnings from operation after paying taxes, 1900-1901, of $507,966,710. This means that these securities are to-day worth in the market over $10,000,000,000. If we add to this the $4,000,000,000 of water, gas, electric-light, street-railway, and telephone securities, probably worth that much in the market, and the $3,000,000,000 of securities of our largest so-called trusts, to say nothing of the telegraph, there looms up a valuation of industries, more or less monopolistic in character, of $17,000,000,000, or probably one-fifth of what the present census will find to be the estimated true value of all property in this country. This monopolistic growth has come about almost entirely since 1860.

It should be added that fully four-fifths of this monopolistic growth has arisen since 1890, for in the earlier years of the period subsequent to 1860 the railway, telegraph, water, gas, and telephone enterprises, etc., however large they may have been, were in no sense monopolistic.

But they say the trusts are under the law; they are under control; they can not overstep the bounds of justice and propriety; they are in the public eye—in the light of publicity. Publicity, Mr. Chairman, is not enough. The trusts care nothing for the results of publicity. They have no shame. They care nothing as to what the people think about them, so long as they are let alone. If a true statement of their accounts is too glaring, too self-condemnatory, they can issue a falsified account. They are not too squeamish for a little thing like that. The depredations of the trusts are the worst kind of robbing our own poor people, the people who make this Republic what it is, and who by their votes have given the trusts the means of existence and growth and prosperity, robbing the people of this country in order that they, the over-rich trust magnates, may get still richer by absorbing the hard-earned pittances and savings of the poor. [Applause.]

No; publicity is not enough. The people know well enough what is going on. They see the trust evil and the trust danger, but they do not know how to prevent it. Restore competition; that is the way to prevent it. And how restore competition? By cutting off or reducing the tariff on the trust-made goods.

But our friends on the other side say: "We passed an amended and strengthened antitrust law in this House less than two years ago. How, then, can you charge us with being favorable to the trusts?" Oh, yes; we know all about that. That was a species of confidence game—a political "little joker." Such a transaction as that inflicts upon the victims not only an injury but an insult. In this case the act itself was bad enough, but the insult consists in trying to palm it off upon the public as a sincere act. What did that legislation amount to? The Republicans of the House brought forward this antitrust bill at the last moment—within a few days of final adjournment—and passed it, well knowing that it would be held up in the Senate, and so it was.

As soon as it reached the Senate the Republican leaders there began to pick it to pieces and find flaws in it, and it was at once sagely decided that it was too faulty a bill and too important a piece of legislation to put through without more time for examination and amendment than then remained in the session. As everybody knows, it was merely a piece of campaign buncombe. Before the next session began the campaign was over, the election had been held, the Republican Administration had been continued in power, the object of this spurious Republican onslaught on the trusts had been gained, and when the Senate reassembled the antitrust bill was quietly deposited in the darkest corner of the darkest pigeonhole obtainable, there to remain till the resurrection day, or till the Republicans need it for material in another campaign. [Applause.] The founder of the Democratic party, Thomas Jefferson, was the author of the immortal Declaration of Independence. Opposition to imperialism was one of the cardinal principles of the Republic as well as the Democratic party. Until of late wherever the flag floated it was the emblem of a free government and constitutional liberty. The Republican policy is to use the power of a government to further the interest of individuals.

The evidence is overwhelming that it is not safe to give so much power to private corporations as has been given to the trusts, railroad combines, and other combinations in this country of late. Nor is it safe to intrust the guardianship of the public welfare to the Republican party, which has become the special protector of private and privileged corporations and the foster-mother of monopolies.

Even if this wonderful Republican antitrust bill of 1900 had been genuine and had become a law, what good would it have done? What good has the original antitrust law of 1890 done? What good have all the threatened antitrust bills of both parties since then done? What good have the antitrust platform declarations of both parties done? In spite of all these demonstrations the trusts have gone right along multiplying and growing and waxing exceeding mighty. Even when brought up before a bar of justice on indictment, as has occasionally happened to a trust, some easy way of slipping out of the difficulty has generally been found. But as soon as you make free competition again possible by cutting off their high tariff protection you send a shot through the trusts below the water line, and they will sink to the bottom. [Applause.]

Fortunately there is reason to believe that the people, the source of power and the final arbiters of all our national questions, are beginning to see this matter in its true light. Unless all signs of the times are misleading, the next Congressional elections will be rather in the nature of a surprise party to you gentlemen on the Republican side. There is considerable ground for the suspicion that you are not as happy as you were a few months ago. Even on the tariff, the corner stone of the Republican party, you are not agreed any longer. How about the Cuban tariff? How about the Philippine tariff? How about the war-revenue tax? How about the Babcock bill? Only sixteen months ago you marched up to the polls a solid phalanx, united on the tariff and on all other questions at issue. But now, only the other day, you had to make a special, novel, ironclad rule forbidding your own men to offer amendments to a committee bill on the floor of this House, this free arena of the Representatives of the people of the United States. What has happened to scare you so? What is the matter? Do you hear the rising of the wind in the West? Do you discern a cloud gathering on the horizon? Do you remember what the people have done to you on some other occasions when you were in power and abused your trust? Are you afraid that what has happened once may happen again?

Certainly it may, and it will. The people of this country are long-suffering, but they will not be fooled and abused forever and ever. They are not going to be trust-ridden henceforth forevermore. They are not going to look on supinely while the Republic is transformed into an oligarchy. Thank God, the people have the supreme power in this country. The trusts, under the protection of the Republican party, which hypocritically pretends to be the people's friend, have stolen a march on the public, but it is not yet too late to repair the mischief and repel the enemy. Let the people once become fully cognizant of the danger, and of the only means of counteracting it, and they will rush with irresistible force to the defense of their liberties and the common weal, and before the onset of that tremendous popular indignation the discredited Republican party and its monstrous progeny, the trusts, will go down into ruin together. [Applause.]

Mr. SWANSON. I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. ROBINSON].

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I congratulate the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] and my colleague from Indiana [Mr. CROMER] in that they have been able to carry, as by a tempest, all before them in their advocacy of the rural free-delivery service as it at present exists. A Democrat and a Republican are thus seen jointly acting together to overturn the decision of the Post-Office Committee, of which they are members.

This committee, composed of 11 Republicans and 7 Democrats, by almost a unanimous vote in committee, reported favorably a bill to change the carrier service to a system of competitive bidding, and claim in support of it that it will secure a more economical administration, and hence a larger portion and a greater number of routes to the people in the country. It is clear that the House is not at this time in favor of the change, however much it may usually defer to the distinguished chairman of that committee and to the able members making this report. This proposed change is already defeated. It is evident to all on this floor who are observant that its defeat only awaits the taking of the vote.

How have the gentlemen been able to accomplish this result? Only by reason of the friendliness for the service on the part of every member here, a friendliness that has repeatedly found expression in vote and in statements on the floor, all evidencing that each member is equal to any other in his desire to promote it. I congratulate the House that during these discussions no question of partisanship has marred it, no credit to one party or another has been claimed, and thus politics has been submerged and patriotism has held its sway on this important question in the House of Representatives. I congratulate the farming community on the splendid rural-delivery service we have in its present form and under its present regulations.

Mr. Chairman, some statements have been made against the Post-Office Committee, which has already lost its cause in court. I do not share in these, or in any charges against the patriotism of any member of the Post-Office Committee. These charges will be softened and disproved by sober judgment and time. To the distinguished chairman of that committee I accord this just praise—that for ability, sturdy honesty, and supreme independence he stands the equal of any gentleman on the floor. To other members of the committee I pay equal tribute.

Mr. Chairman, this rural-delivery system in all its splendor, from its small beginning to its mature form, has been painted in glowing colors by the brush of finished and able artists on both sides of the House until this Hall has been vocal with a unanimous verdict as to the efficiency and utility of this service. No man can stand upon the floor and challenge any colleague from any quarter and charge him with indifference or deny that he is equal to any other in his advocacy of this splendid system, to which I accord the highest praise.

But we are threatened with a real danger, a danger that strikes at the vitals of the system itself, and, in my judgment, only one real danger, and that is that politics may be played by weak and designing people throughout the country at the expense of the service. That it has been played goes without question, not by the Department here—I excuse them from such a charge—but by others. I believe the Department means to make it a business service, and one which the people, being equally taxed to support, shall have an equal benefit from. Two years ago, upon the floor of the House, among the Democrats I alone defended the Department against the charge of partisanship and uttered the sentiment, speaking for the service in my district, that "it had not been used for politics or for partisan ends."

I am sorry to say that since then I have had some experience on the subject, not with those who had the regulation of it in the departments, but among those politicians who would prostitute the most splendid system this Government has ever devised, in my judgment, to partisan ends. This service stands to the farmer as does the telephone, the electric light and car in industrial development. Why try to inject politics into it? You can not do so and strengthen it. Nor can you do it with good effect to yourselves. The remedy is by placing the civil-service ban full and complete over the service. The President has already reproached such of his followers as would play politics with this people's service. He placed it under a system, but not under the old line civil service. It is not there now, fully and effectively. To my colleagues from the South who, prior to February 1, 1902, were favored in the appointment of carriers in their districts, I will say that they have taken only what it was originally promised they should have when the rural free delivery was first started, and that which its first promoters promised that it should be—a nonpartisan service.

I make no charge against them for having gotten their friends or their political associates to carry the mails. Each of us of the North would have done likewise, in my judgment; and especially should they have that right under the rule that it should be a nonpartisan service, which was the dream of its promoters. In the interest of fair play and to promote this department service you should aid us to place the civil-service rules fully and completely over this system or it will be threatened by a menace which will tend to dwarf it in certain sections in the course of time. You will be the sufferers when that time comes.

Therefore I shall contend, when the bill is taken up by paragraphs, that we place the civil-service law, by proper amendment, over this department, and I hope that the Southern members, my Democratic colleagues, will profit by the splendid exhibition of nonpartizanship shown always when this subject is presented in the House, and join in favor of that policy.

I hope that my friends from the South, who have received one-third, one-half, and two-thirds of the carriers under the system in vogue in that section before February, will see that the Northern districts, which you must carry if you carry the House of Representatives, shall be protected in their rural free delivery against the evils of partisanship in the establishment of it, and that the service itself shall be rescued from its pretended friends, who are trying to play politics with it. Come to Ohio, come to Illinois, come to Indiana, and to my district in the time of the sear and yellow leaf, in the autumn election, and we will give you an exhibition of partisanship and party politics in our campaigns that will make you walk in your sleep, you Southern members.

It is in such States that the politician who cares more for politics than he does for public service—it is there that he likes to revel in the clover of official machinery to accomplish political ends. Under this system prior to February of this year you Southern members were given these rural carriers, but none came to the Northern or Western States or to the close districts of the North, East, and West. We may be subjected to political pernicious activity, and we ask you to protect us by placing the civil-service law completely over this system. Every precedent is favorable to this action. Look at the various departments of the Government under civil service. This department was placed under what is styled a modified or reformed civil service. The President did this before we raised the salary.

The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] says that if the present rules are enforced it will be sufficient to secure protection in some manner similar to the civil-service law. As has been lucidly stated here by gentlemen, there is opportunity for evasion. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] says that it does not now secure the full results. Other gentlemen, including the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. LIVINGSTON], say it may not secure satisfactory results. You can appreciate the position we are in and can readily see where the good of the service lies. We have more politics in Indiana in one district in elections than you have in an entire State almost.

In my district there are 45,000 votes cast, one for every three and six-tenths person. We ask you of the South to aid to fortify this magnificent and valuable service under the system of carriers as it is now, so that it can not be prostituted to political ends by anyone in official or in unofficial station. This will be accomplished by covering it with the full civil-service blanket. So provide that when anyone seeks to injure it by making it a political machine the full civil-service penalties will be visited upon him. We will risk it under the civil-service rules and take our chances, and at once we would preserve and fortify the system.

Mr. Chairman, nothing would so poison the system of rural free delivery as partisan control. I speak only for the good of the system itself. As to those in office who may try to so use it, I verily believe that the result to them will be such as will cause them to pray for relief from their partisan friends. [Applause.]

Mr. SWANSON. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. CONNER].

[Mr. CONNER addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. SWANSON. I yield fifteen minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. TATE].

Mr. TATE. Mr. Chairman, I have listened to this debate, and I am glad to note the almost unanimous approval of the rural free-delivery service which is now being adopted and put in force in the different sections of the country. Even the advocates of this bill disclaim any purpose of crippling the rural free-delivery service, and give as their reason for the passage of this bill, not their objection to the rural free-delivery system, but, first, the fear of interference and control by the rural carriers of the Congressional elections; and, second, the amount of salary paid or to be paid to these rural free-delivery carriers.

Now, sir, I do not believe that these objections are well founded. I do not believe that the rural free-delivery carriers in any section of this country could dictate to the members of Congress or to the people that they serve. The Congressman who discharges his duty, in my opinion, need not fear the influence of these rural carriers with the people along the routes they serve, and I am surprised, sir, at the importance given in this debate to this point. Why, sir, gentlemen would have us believe that the people along the routes could be influenced and controlled by the carriers, and that the Congressmen would be required to do the bidding of these carriers or would receive the condemnation of the people to whom the carriers deliver the mail. They can wield no such influence; the people can not be controlled or used for any such purpose. The Congressman who favors just and legitimate legislation and discharges his duty faithfully and loyally will not be required to do the bidding of the rural free-delivery carriers by voting for increase in their salaries, nor will the people be influenced by these carriers by reason of the fact that he refuses to vote for such increase. I have a higher opinion, Mr. Chairman, of the people of the rural districts than to believe as these gentlemen do.

Mr. Chairman, I am as much in favor of economy as any member on this floor; and since I have had the honor to represent my people here I have on every occasion insisted on reducing appropriations and in appropriating only such sums from the Federal Treasury as were absolutely necessary for the economic administration of the affairs of this Government, but I must admit my surprise in this day of extravagance at the effort of the Post-Office Committee to change the manner of distributing the mail on the rural free-delivery routes, when in so many instances increase of salaries are being given to the employees in the different departments of the Government.

Now, Mr. Chairman, we are told that by the contract system of letting these rural free-delivery routes to the lowest bidder we can save money and not injure the service. I deny both of these propositions. In the first place, no man can furnish his own horse and buggy and travel 25 miles every day delivering the mails through the country who is competent to give competent and efficient service, and do so for less than five or six hundred dollars a year. He furnishes and feeds his own horse, and also furnishes his own buggy and harness, and I undertake to say that you can not hire a horse and buggy in any section of the country for less than $1 per day. But say that it can be got for $25 a month. This would take one-half of the salary for horse and buggy hire alone, and would allow the carrier, who is paid $50 a month, $25 for his services. But suppose he furnishes his own horse and buggy at a cost of $150. His horse and buggy at the end of the year would be worth a great deal less, if anything at all, than when he began the service. I doubt whether after using his horse and buggy on a route 25 miles long he could realize anything for his buggy, and believe he would get little for his horse. But say that his horse and buggy, if he owns them himself, cost him $10 per month—and it would cost him $8 or $10 a month to feed and keep his horse, repair his buggy and harness—this would give him $30 a month.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I do not believe it is extravagance to pay this sum to the man who goes, day in and day out, without regard to weather, over these routes delivering the mails to the people. Why, sir, we pay in the cities $800 for delivering the mails. These carriers work eight hours a day and have no duties to perform except delivering or taking up the mails; they do not have the postmaster's responsibilities, as have the rural carriers; and while, as has been stated in this debate, it costs more for them to live in the cities possibly, yet, while they receive $200 more pay than the rural carriers, they do not furnish, as the rural carrier does, any conveyance, but only give their time in this service.

Mr. Chairman, the proposition of the committee is to change the present manner of appointing rural free-delivery carriers to the contract system.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I have heretofore discussed in detail the contract system of carrying the mails on the star routes of this country, and I will not undertake to do so again at this time, for my position upon that question is already well understood, and I am glad that hereafter we are to have these star-route contracts let only to local bidders. Under the present bill it is proposed to adopt a contract system for carrying and delivering the mails on the rural free-delivery routes. The present law for letting contracts for carrying the mails on star routes provides that—

All contracts for carrying the mails are to be in the name of the United States and shall be awarded to the lowest bidder tendering sufficient guaranties for the faithful performance, etc.

You will see, Mr. Chairman, that under the present law when contract is let for carrying the mails on a star route sufficient guaranties for "faithful performance" are required; and I see that the requirements under this bill for carrying the mails on rural free-delivery routes are as follows:

who shall tender sufficient guaranties that he will personally perform capable service.

If this bill is passed, it will give to the people the same "faithful performance" that they are now receiving under the contract system for carrying the mails on the star routes. I do not believe, sir, that a more objectionable system could be devised than the present system of carrying the mail on the star routes of this country. Rather than adopt this objectionable system of carrying the mails on the rural free-delivery routes, I would give my support to a proposition to abolish the present contract system of carrying the mails and authorize the Post-Office Department to pay a reasonable compensation for efficient service.

If we can not secure "faithful performance" of contracts for carrying the mails where the carriers only receive the mail pouch from one postmaster and deliver it to another, how can we hope to have efficient service when we combine the postmaster and carrier in one and the same person? For the rural free-delivery carrier is a traveling postmaster; he performs all of the duties of the postmaster, and there would be just as much reason in letting the post-offices to the lowest bidder as there would be in letting contracts to carry the mails and act as traveling postmaster—which the rural free-delivery carrier does—with the exception that in the case of letting the post-offices you would not couple with it the present objectionable system of carrying the mails on star routes, which this bill proposes to couple with the rural-carrier system.

If we adopt this bill and require these contracts to be let to the lowest bidder, we will have the same class of service on the rural free-delivery routes that we are now receiving under the star-route contract system. We will have the same poor old one-eyed horse, the same old run-down cart, the same late mails, and the same old complaints at the Post-Office Department that we now receive under the star-route system, and the poorest possible service on every route.

Mr. Chairman, if the present rural free-delivery service is perfected and put in operation in the rural districts of this country it means a great deal to the people living in the country; it will add to the comfort and pleasure of the farmer and his family and increase the value of his property, and I feel that instead of adopting the contract system proposed by this bill, which would retard, in my opinion, rather than advance this system, we should provide for a sufficient force for inspecting and laying out these rural free-delivery routes; for the only complaint I have received from the people of my district in regard to rural free delivery, and from those who do not now have satisfactory mail facilities is the delay of the Department in acting upon petitions filed for the establishment of rural mail service. I feel, sir, that the rural free-delivery service should not only be extended from railroad stations, as is now being done by the Department, but that it should be adopted in counties that are not touched by railroads. For the people residing away from the railroad stations, along with their neighbors residing near railroads, should be given their mail in the shortest possible time.

Mr. Chairman, few of the appropriations made by Congress are expended directly for the benefit of the people of the rural districts. They pay their taxes, are among our most upright and law-abiding citizens, and it does seem to me, sir, that we should give to this class of our fellow-citizens the very best possible mail facilities. [Loud applause.]

Mr. SWANSON. I yield fifteen minutes to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. BRUNDIDGE].

Mr. BRUNDIDGE. Mr. Chairman, I confidently believe that the placing of these mail carriers under the contract system will give a service just as efficient and at much less cost than the present plan. Hence I shall support this bill. More than once during the debate that has been going on here for the past week gentlemen have hooted at the idea of cheapness in the Government service, and have derided the very suggestion of economy. Upon this line they need have no fears, for if they have discovered anything cheap in what this Congress has done up to the present time or proposes to do until the end of it, they have observed something which has not fallen under my observation. In view of the fact that it is understood that this bill is to be followed by the General Post-Office appropriation bill, and as this is one of the large appropriation bills that passes this House annually, and, in my judgment, a great deal of the money appropriated by it is uselessly and unnecessarily wasted, I deem it a proper time and place to call attention to the growing tendency to higher and increased appropriations each year and wasteful and almost criminal extravagance. The Fifty-first Congress startled the entire country by expending a billion dollars, and yet if this one, the Fifty-seventh, keeps up the pace it is going and makes the appropriations called for and demanded by this Administration, we will double that sum and go down into history as the two-billion-dollar Congress.

The first session of the Fifty-first Congress, in making the appropriations for the year of 1891, appropriated for the—

Army only	$24,206,471
Navy	24,136,035
Post-Office	72,226,698
Pensions	123,779,368

Compare these sums with what we are now doing. The first session of this Congress is asked to expend for the Army about $130,000,000. This is more than five times the sum expended in 1891, and one of the consequences of the increase of the Army to maintain our foreign policy. We are expected to appropriate for the Navy about one hundred million, about four times greater than the usual appropriation, and so great that business associations and the people are sending their written and printed petitions to members of this Congress protesting against this enormous increase. To this must be added $131,000,000 for postal expenses. This has almost doubled in the past ten years—another considerable and unnecessary increase. While the report of the honorable Commissioner of Pensions for last year shows that the total number of pensioners on the rolls was 1,041,321, or 4,000 in excess of any previous year, and adds that "this constitutes high-water mark in the history of this Bureau," and will require about one hundred and fifty million more to pay these. The Commissioner should be reminded that his Bureau is only keeping pace with the rapid strides of the others; and bear in mind the fact that under this rule of wild Republican extravagance it is still raining, and he may expect high water and a still greater rise, and that, too, at an early date. These are only a few of the appropriations to be made. When the long list is completed and then doubled for the next session of the present Congress, you get the grand total of money to be spent in the way of ordinary governmental expenses.

High as these figures are we are given to understand that they do not represent all, for this Congress is expected to pass the ship-subsidy bill, by which between one hundred and sixty and two hundred million dollars more shall be paid out of the Treasury. In other words, $200,000,000 is to be taken from the taxpayers of the country and turned over to the shipowners in order that they may be enabled to carry on their own private business for their own private gain to a better advantage. Every unprejudiced mind will condemn such an act as unfair and unjust, for if Government aid is to be extended to build up one business, why withhold it from another? To-day we are building and exporting into foreign countries railway locomotives. Pass this bill and in a short while you may expect those engaged in the construction thereof to discover that they can not build these in competition with other countries without being paid a bounty from the United States Treasury.

And so it will be with every other concern that feels like it is strong enough to hold up the Government and claim its aid.

But, Mr. Chairman, who are the promoters of this scheme, and who are to be the real beneficiaries from its consummation? They are by no means beginners, but old and experienced veterans who have had their hands in the public Treasury in the past and still have them there. The statement has been published time after time that the corporation to derive the greatest benefit from the passage of this subsidy bill will be the International Navigation Company. The directors of this corporation—some of them at least—are also directors of the Pennsylvania Railroad Company, and one of them, Mr. A. J. Cassatt, is the president of this road, while others of the directors are connected with the Standard Oil Company and kindred organizations. So it is in reality but another effort of the railway companies and their owners to have the doors of the Treasury opened a little wider and held there for fifteen years, until they can take out two hundred million more. Let us see how these railway companies have fared in the past at the hands of Congress. We have no record on our national statutes of their ever having met with failure and defeat in any of their attempted schemes, but we have abundant proof of the fact that they have always been successful.

Let me briefly call attention to some of their past efforts from 1850 to 1872. Congress granted to the different railroad companies more than 200,000,000 acres of the public lands; about 100,000,000 acres of these lands have already been patented to them, and between sixty and seventy million acres more will be patented. If we value this land at the low average price of $5 per acre, we find that in twenty-two years they got an absolute donation from Congress of more than $800,000,000. I herewith append a statement showing the date and the amount of each of these grants and the company to whom the grant was made. In many instances these land grants amounted to a sum large enough to both build and equip the road.

But this was not all, for in 1862 and 1864 Congress again came to their aid by authorizing to be issued to them United States bonds, in the sum of $64,623,512, with interest thereon at the rate of 6 per cent, payable by the United States. I also desire to append a statement of this bond issue, from which it will be seen that we have paid a sum equal to the principal in interest. For in 1882, which is the date of the statement I attach, we had paid in interest alone $39,279,632.91.

Bonds issued to railway companies and interest payable by United States at 6 per cent. Bonds running thirty years.

I am aware of the fact that in the past few years some of this money has been collected from these companies and some of it has been secured, but not all of it by any means. And everyone at all familiar with the transaction knows what desperate efforts were made by these companies to defeat collections wherever attempted. There are still other advantages which these railways enjoy by permission of Congress. We are paying them annually for transporting or carrying the mails $34,000,000, and in addition to this sum about $5,000,000 per annum for rent of postal cars. We are paying 8 cents a pound, or $8 a hundred, for the transportation of our mail for an average distance of not over 442 miles; this is more than 50 per cent higher than the rate charged for any other kind of freight, and more than 50 per cent higher than the rate charged by any express company.

While the rent paid on these postal cars sometimes reaches as high as $20,000 per annum for a single car, and the cars would not cost exceeding $17,000 to build and equip them, we are paying $3,000 more each year by way of rent than the cars cost. Would it not be economy to at least own these cars? Or does any sane man believe that any private individual or other corporation outside of the railroads could get this kind of contract with the Government? Or does he believe that anyone ought to have such a contract? Not satisfied with this, Congress has been year after year granting these same companies a subsidy or bonus of $195,000, under pretext of getting them to carry a fast mail. This is, in my judgment, even more vicious than the ship subsidy, for there is less excuse for it. What reason can there be for paying this bonus to roads carrying mail from New York City to Washington, and then from here on to the South? Investigation of the matter fails to disclose that any extra trains are being run, or that any better time is being made with it than would be made without it. Then, what valid reason can be assigned for continuing this useless and extravagant expenditure? For myself I am glad of the fact that I have never voted for it, nor do I ever expect to do so. We hear considerable talk of reducing postage to 1 penny, and such we ought to have and could have were it not for the exorbitant charges made by these companies for transporting the mail.

There is yet one other matter relating to these corporations of far more concern and still greater importance to the welfare of our people than any of these things of which I have been speaking, and that is their utter and total disregard of the interstate-commerce act passed by Congress in 1887. Under this act a commission was appointed, charged with the high and responsible duty of determining the reasonableness of traffic rates, and preventing discriminations and undue preferences in freight rates. That this body has the power by proper legislation to control and correct these outrages and abuses no one will deny, and yet the fact remains, open and notorious, that it has never been done, for when the courts had construed this act of 1887 it was found to be so very defective in their judgment that the Interstate Commerce Commission had but very little authority to make any orders affecting railroads and no authority to enforce such orders as they did make. This Commission has reported annually to Congress, pointing out these decisions and defects of the law, and asking to be clothed with authority to make the Commission effective, instead of a farce; but for some unexplained reason it has never been done.

This law should either be amended and then enforced, or the Commission should be abolished and the miserable pretense stopped. The last report of this Commission, sent to Congress on the 23d day of January last, is both interesting and instructive. They very clearly and forcibly call attention to the fact that the public demands protection under the law from these grasping corporations, especially so since great combinations have been formed and are now being formed to suppress and prevent railway competition, and then they add that "it is possible, however, that the same causes which have prevented serious consideration of this subject by Congress in the past may continue to operate in the future." These influences, it may be inferred, are those of the railways over the Senate and Congress of the United States. The State legislatures of many States, together with boards of trade and industrial commissions from nearly every city in the country, have passed resolutions asking and begging Congress to speedily amend the act and give them the relief to which they were so justly entitled, and as yet their petitions remain unheeded.

Every member of this House who has read that report has official knowledge of the fact that these corporations are every year giving hundreds of thousands of dollars by way of rebates in freight charges to certain favored shippers. These unlawful advantages enable a few packing houses to suppress competition; it enables a few grain dealers to drive all competitors from the grain market, leaving the helpless producer to sell his products not only in the open markets of the world, but one where there is practically but one purchaser, and where he finds himself absolutely at the mercy of the most grinding monopoly and trust that has ever existed. I am not calling your attention to what may happen in the future, but to a condition of affairs that is now materializing and stands out to confront us, and which demands at our hands prompt and determined action.

For last year the net earnings of the railways of the United States as reported by them amounted to the sum of $620,279,168, and I have no doubt but what the sum was much larger. The value of the wheat and cotton crops of the United States for 1900 was: Wheat, $323,516,177, and cotton $334,847,868. Thus it will be seen that the net earnings of these corporations for one year will equal the total value of two of the largest and most valuable products raised in the United States.

If the honest and toiling producer must thus continue, year after year, to surrender the results of his labors to these vultures of transportation, when may we reasonably expect to look for the betterment of his condition? Never.

Even in this time of boasted Republican prosperity and plenty there are hundreds of thousands of daily laborers who can not stand ten days of suspension from work without suffering for bread. And there are thousands and hundreds of thousands of farmers who can not stand the partial failure of one crop without being forced to appeal to the public for aid to support themselves and families. This very condition of affairs exists in my own State to-day, where one season's drought has reduced to absolute penury and want a people who are as honest, as industrious, and as brave as ever graced the citizenship of any State in this Union.

While this condition exists, still we have a certain measure of prosperity. The railways and trust monopolies and a few like corporations are enjoying greater profits than in any other period of their existence.

There is one more fact to which I desire to call attention before I conclude, and that is the condition existing here in the city of Washington. Two years ago the Commissioners of the District of Columbia reported to this House, in response to a resolution, that certain railways entering the city had been authorized by act of Congress to take possession of and occupy certain lands belonging to the Government worth several hundred thousand dollars. They did not purchase them, they pay no rent, and pay no taxes, and yet they occupy them by the will of Congress. When we contemplate these things, it is no longer a question as to the governmental ownership of railways, but the question is, How much longer shall the railroads continue to own the Government?

When these consolidations and combinations shall be perfected, as they will be in a short time, and by this means put an end to competing railways, they will then turn their attention—and I feel sure they are already doing so—to the task of preventing the improvement of the rivers of the country, and the fight against river appropriations will be strong and earnest, for with this accomplished there will be an end to railway competition from all sources, and they will be left in absolute control. Just how long these parasites are to be permitted to feed upon the public at the will and by the consent of Congress is a question that should demand an immediate answer. [Loud applause.]

Mr. BURKETT. Mr. Chairman, the bill before the House for consideration consists of two parts, or rather pertains to two distinct things, in connection with the rural free-delivery service. The first one of these I favor; the second one I feel that I must oppose. The first part of the bill, if passed, will make the rural free delivery a permanent thing. The latter part of the bill provides for letting the carrying or distirbuting of mail under the contract system.

I shall be very brief in giving my reasons for my position on each of these questions. It was well, perhaps, when rural free delivery was inaugurated that it should have been upon a temporary plan, for it was to us, in fact, an experiment. There were many things and many conditions to experiment with before Congress was justified in creating it in full form as one of the permanent parts of the Governmental service. Congress did not then know the people would receive it—whether or not it could be made of advantage to the people. Congress could not tell whether the end would justify the means, whether the cost would be sustained by the judgment of the people. It was a new venture, an untried experiment. It was a bold undertaking, and I say it was well, perhaps, that such definite action should not be taken that might not be easily undone if the service should prove inexpeditious and undesirable.

But, sirs, those conditions do not pertain to-day. It is no longer, in fact, an experiment, and in my judgment should not be so in law. The people have received it gladly; they have hailed its coming with applause. They have become attached to it, and we must not take it from them. Sirs, if one of the two must be discontinued, then, in my judgment, better had we discontinue city delivery than rural delivery. But neither will ever be taken from the people, for they are a service that belongs to the people, and it is a proper function of the Government to furnish them.

In the district which I have the honor to represent there are now more than 3,000 families who receive their mail daily by this service. On the 20th day of February, 1902, I took occasion to write each of them and ask their opinion of the service, whether or not it should be continued. I have had more than 2,000 answers up to this time. I wish I could read them to the House. I wish I might impress you as those letters impressed me of the anxious solicitude for its perpetuity with which the patrons watch our actions here to-day.

Out of 2,000 letters less than 20 criticised the system, and each of those writers live in the vicinity of small post-offices that have been discontinued by the rural service. Those letters are full of reasons for the continuance of the service. For the first time the farmer has been able to take a daily paper and keep abreast with the affairs of the world. Markets are known daily. One man said that 10 miles from his post-office he read a paper daily at the noon hour. More than 500 of those letters testified to the fact that it took away the isolation of farm life and brought the farmer in closer contact with the world and its doings. All this tends to make better men and women, brighter boys and girls, and better citizens.

In short, the system is a good educator. It furnishes opportunities for improvement, intellectually and morally, that should be considered as one of the strongest elements in argument for its continuance. Several said that it had increased the value of their farms from two to ten dollars per acre. Many have written me that they would rather pay for the service than have it discontinued. One wrote that he would be willing to pay a hundred dollars per year rather than lose the service. Many suggested a readiness to pay twenty-five to fifty dollars rather than be deprived of its benefits.

Then, too, it is an economical service. It is better that one man should deliver mail to a hundred families every day, than that twenty men per day, on an average, should make a trip to town for their mail. Let us pass this part of the bill and make rural free delivery an assured fact, requiring specific legislation to discontinue it. As it is now, as has already been developed, the whole thing may be stopped by the raising of a point of order to the appropriation bill. The predicament is too perilous—it merits more substantial moorings.

The part of the bill which I object to is as follows:

Hereafter all mail service on rural free-delivery mail routes shall be performed by carriers designated pursuant to an advertisement inviting competitive bidding.

In opposing this second part of the bill I desire first to pay my tribute of appreciation to the committee for the tireless effort they have given to the subject. I have no doubt but they have had the good of the service at heart when they brought in the contract system. But is this a proper service to be contracted? It comes in direct touch with the people—with the individuals served. There is more to be considered than cheapness when such a service is at stake.

Suppose a swearing, swaggering, careless man should be the lowest bidder. He would put the entire service in disrespect. I rather like the idea of keeping the carrier in the closest possible relationship to the patrons. I wish he might be their choice, and responsible to them in a measure for his selection, and they in turn responsible for him. This is peculiarly a people's service. They take pride in it. They look after it. They improve the roads and altogether do much to make the service expeditious.

I desire to read an extract from a letter that I received just this morning from a patron of one of the routes of my district. This man in his letter urges the continuance of the service and suggests some possible improvements, but the part I desire to call special attention to is as follows:

The salary of the carrier is a little too small, especially this year, when grain is so high. But we have done what we could to help him along. About six weeks ago I hitched onto my wagon and went out among the patrons of the route. I did not go very far before I had on 25 bushels of corn and 5 bushels of oats, worth about $17, which we made him a present of. I think the salary ought to be about $600 per year at least.

Another gentleman on another route writes me that the patrons have arranged to pay for the carrier's horse feed and dinner. Others write of other little courtesies extended. One carrier wrote me that during a very cold snap hot coffee was served him every day at a particular house on his route. This all goes to show the personal interest that these patrons have in the route and the kindly feeling for their carrier. In most instances they have selected these carriers. He has been their choice. Then, too, it shows that the carrier has not been paid as these patrons believe he should be paid. In most of the letters that I have received there has been the opinion expressed that the salary should be $600. I speak of this merely to vindicate the action of the House heretofore had, of adding an amount sufficient for such increase of salary to the urgent deficiency appropriation bill.

Let us have this service as it is. If perchance the Postmaster-General should desire to experiment with a few routes under a contract system I have no particular objections. At the end of a year he can tell us more about it. But, sirs, I am opposed at this time to making this leap in the dark. The contract system is not a favorite with the people in other particulars and other services. In my judgment it would be a failure in this service. Let us strike from the bill that part providing for the contract system and pass that part which continues for all time the system of rural free delivery.

Mr. BROMWELL. Mr. Chairman, at this late hour, the last day of general debate, after a week of fatiguing attendance and close attention to the arguments that have been made on both sides of this bill, it would be not only injudicious as a friend of the bill, but cruel to the faithful members of this House who have remained patiently until this time, were I to impose upon them any lengthy speech upon this subject. I have got past that embryonic stage, which every member has to pass through, of desiring to speak for the RECORD.

I believe that had the membership of the House remained, or had I had an opportunity earlier in the day when more were here, I might have presented to this committee some phases of this subject that have not been touched upon, or, if touched upon, but lightly. But recognizing that nearly all who are here have committed themselves by their remarks upon this bill, upon the one side or the other, I feel that it would be, perhaps, a useless waste of your time and of mine were I to go into an extended argument in behalf of the bill.

I will say in a general way that the twelve members of the Post-Office Committee who signed this report have listened candidly, conscientiously, and faithfully to the arguments that have been urged against it, and that not a single one of those twelve members has seen or heard any reason for changing the views which actuated him in preparing and reporting this bill.

During the course of the debate under the five-minute rule I expect to present some of the phases of this question to which I refer, but at this time, Mr. Chairman, I think I shall merely ask the same indulgence that has been given to other members, to print the remainder of my remarks in the RECORD; and I invite not only those who are present, but such of our colleagues as may be absent, whose usual Sunday morning duty, before they go to church and after eating breakfast and reading the Washington Post, is to wade carefully through the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD to find out what condition of affairs the country is in—I invite you and invite them to read the argument which I would have presented earlier in the day and which will be printed therein. And I feel satisfied that when the debate opens on Monday under the five-minute rule the opponents of this bill, having thus the benefit of my wisdom, will cheerfully consent to withdraw their opposition and pass the bill unanimously. [Laughter.]

As a member of the Post-Office Committee, which reported this bill, I have followed the debate during the week that it has been in progress for the purpose of ascertaining if there was any real good, sound, or logical reason that could be urged against its provisions. I am frank to say that I have heard nothing to change the views which I entertained a week ago. I have heard appeals to prejudice; statements based upon ignorance of existing conditions, the present law and practice of the Post-Office Department, and the provisions of the bill itself.

I have heard frantic appeals to save the rural free-delivery service from destruction, and have listened with some surprise to the attempts of some of the members to create antagonism on the part of those representing what may be called rural districts to the postal service as it exists in cities. But if any one good reason has been stated why the plan proposed in the bill of letting this service out by contract is not the best I have failed to hear it in this Hall or to read it in the RECORD.

No member on this floor is probably less personally interested than I am as to which method is adopted of performing this service. I have two of these routes now in operation and two more applied for; possibly six routes in all would cover my entire district. I am frank to say that for the first two or three years of the experimental stage of this rural free-delivery service I was skeptical as to its advantages and the possibility of its successful extension throughout the country, but I finally recognized that it had come to stay, that it was to be one of the leading features of the postal service, and recognizing that positive legislation would be required to put it upon a footing where the appropriations devoted to that purpose could originate in the House without being subject to a point of order, I, in common with the other members of the committee, have given to the subject my careful consideration, and have endeavored to present the results of our study and judgment in this and the appropriation bill which is to follow.

I might add also that I have no complaint against any of the officials connected with this service, as I named the two carriers for the routes already established in my district, and, in the way of official patronage in the Department, have one clerk now being carried on the roll.

Recognizing the right of any of my constituents to write to me in regard to anything of a public nature in which they may be interested, I have not found fault with any employee in the postal service who has solicited my influence or vote in behalf of any measure before this House, and it was with some doubt as to the propriety of such action that I read the order prohibiting the employees of the Post-Office Department from writing to their members, or for that matter making personal calls upon them, in behalf of any legislation. I have always made it a point to acknowledge the receipt of such letters, answer them as fully as possible, and, if prepared to do so, to state frankly my position upon the subject-matter of their communications.

But while I recognize this right on the part of the employees of the Government to correspond directly with the members of this Congress, I look upon it as a very different matter, and one which might well call for prompt and strict action on the part of the Executive, when the force of a bureau of any department of the Government shall devote its attention to a systematic attempt to influence legislation; and that, I believe, has been the case of certain employees of the Rural Free-Delivery Bureau of the Post-Office Department in connection with this bill.

Inspired editorials, interviews, and articles in the papers of this city and of other cities in the country bear the earmarks of production in this Bureau. While I admit I have no positive knowledge on the subject, the very report of the minority on this bill was, I am satisfied, prepared and furnished to the gentleman from Virginia who signed it by an official in the Post-Office Department, and I challenge the gentleman to deny that statement.

The rural free-delivery service is fortunate or unfortunate in having in the office of the superintendent in this city a gentleman of whom the head of the Bureau said, in hearings before the committee: "I consider him a very valuable man in many ways. No; not in a clerical way. I would say that his forte was not in clerical duties. Mr. Clarke's forte is in considering matters that come up for which we have no precedent—writing rulings and petitions and reports, at which he is very apt." The superintendent might have added, no doubt, that he was also very valuable in running a literary branch of the Bureau, furnishing newspaper articles, and generally bringing pressure to bear upon the members of the House to defeat bills which are not in accordance with the views and wishes of the head of the office.

When the committee came to take up the question of providing for the rural free-delivery carrier service, our first thought was naturally to continue the existing system of appointment, and no thought of a contract service occurred to any of us until later. We had been receiving letters almost equivalent to demands for increase of compensation for the carriers already in the service. A so-called national association of rural free-delivery carriers, with headquarters in Chicago, had fixed the amount at $850. Other demands were even higher. The First Assistant Postmaster-General, in his last report, page 42, says:

> The complaints of insufficiency of pay have received careful consideration. There is every desire to raise the character of the service and to adequately compensate the rural carriers, but one of the chief difficulties encountered in arriving at a uniform adjustment has arisen from the varying conditions prevailing in different sections of the country. In some States, where horses are cheap and forage abundant, $500 a year for a service which occupies only a part of a day is regarded as good pay, and there is almost a scramble among farmers' sons for the appointment.
> On the other hand, in New England and the extreme Western States, where forage is scarce and dear, a man who owns a horse can command higher wages than a rural carrier receives, especially during the summer months, and he is accordingly disinclined to enter the rural service at the rate of pay prescribed. It is not deemed desirable to establish a graduated scale of salaries at the present time, except upon the general rule which has been heretofore approximately followed of allowing $100 a year for each 5 miles of route. Nevertheless, the hardships presented by individual cases have not failed to command attention, and it is the earnest wish of this office to adopt some plan which will afford relief, without making discriminations calculated to promote jealousies between States and sections or to justify a charge of unfair preference.

This statement of the First Assistant clearly sets forth the difficulty which surrounds the attempt to establish anything like a uniform system of salaries for this carrier service. As he very justly says, a salary which would be ample in one locality is insufficient in another, and the many differences of climate, roads, sparseness or density of population, and grade of intelligence in the community in which these routes run, present natural difficulties of adjustment for anything like a fair and equitable basis for a uniform salary.

Your committee recognizing these difficulties presented by the First Assistant, first considered and discussed the possibility of fixing the compensation by a graded scale dependent upon the length of the route and possibly the number of people served. But this did not meet the difficulty, and was abandoned by the committee.

While this matter was still unsettled the attention of the committee was directed to the report of the Second Assistant, and particularly to that part relating to the improvements which had been made in the star-route service. In the statement made by General Shallenberger before the committee, during the hearing for the preparation of the post-office appropriation bill, it was shown that the objectionable features which existed in the old star-route service, and which at one time made that service a stench in the nostrils of the decent people of the country and culminated in the Brady frauds, had been entirely eliminated in the lettings made in the last two years.

This caused the committee to consider the possibility of establishing a similar contract service for the rural free-delivery carriers, and the plan seemed so feasible, by reason of the fact that the contractors under the star-route service are now required, under the new lettings, to do a service that approximates closely to the rural free-delivery service, and which could without very much difficulty be made identical with it; and the more the committee considered the matter the more firmly it became convinced that the contract system was the proper solution of the question of compensation for the rural free mail carriers. I shall touch upon the changes in the star-route service to which I referred a little more fully further on.

I have stated one of the reasons, drawn from the difficulty of adjustment of salaries referred to by the First Assistant, as the leading one which actuated the committee to seek for a method of avoiding these difficulties. But there was another reason, perhaps of less importance, but strong enough to claim the attention of the committee, in the danger which might lie behind the building up of an organized force which will ultimately number from 40,000 to 50,000 of these carriers into a semipolitical machine with power and the probable inclination to make demands for unreasonable increases of salary, and to exercise coercion to compel obedience to these demands.

I know that gentlemen in the course of this debate have boasted that they would be independent of this pressure; have belittled the danger of this organization; have pointed to the civil-service rules under which these carriers have been placed as a restraint upon any action that they might be tempted to take; have said that members of the committee were creating a phantom danger which would never develop.

But this danger is not a fanciful one. It is an actual danger which exists to-day and which is strong enough to influence many members in their stand upon this bill. There are few, if any, members probably on the floor of this House who have not, in connection with this bill, felt its influence directly or indirectly. One of the leading members of this House, sturdy and independent, during the progress of this debate informed me that four weeks ago he was for the bill; but since that time he had heard from his rural carriers and their friends and would have to vote against it.

If this unorganized force of only about 7,000 carriers can thus influence men of high standing in this House, what will that influence amount to when, instead of 7,000, it will amount to 50,000, united into a great national association and demanding salaries the equal of those paid the carrier service in the cities and in addition to that the cost of maintaining horses and wagons? The expense of this service will be of no concern to the member if he is threatened with the danger of being held up and coerced by these carriers and their friends.

Nor will it do to belittle the influence which these carriers can exert. Over the 25 miles, more or less, of their routes as they drive with this mail six days of every week they will, in the course of a year, become acquainted, probably, with every patron on the route. They will be the purveyors of news and gossip. They will, if accommodating, perform friendly services and do accommodating errands for those to whom they deliver the mail. They will be the distributors of political gossip.

Being under the service of the Government, wearing a uniform, driving a specially designed conveyance, they will be looked up to and their opinions and statements given undue importance, and thus a designing carrier can make use of his position, quietly and insidiously, and without making himself liable to punishment for violation of civil-service rules, to reward the friends who will vote to increase his salary and punish a conscientious member who will not yield to his unreasonable demands.

Personally I have no fear of such a condition in the district which I represent, as the number of carriers will never become sufficiently great to exercise any political influence. But in other districts, made up of strictly rural communities, in which the number of routes may run up into the hundreds, the committee has felt that they will become a potent factor in controlling the political situation.

As I have said before, the so-called national association demands $850 as the maximum salary. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. LANDIS] did not hesitate to announce the opinion that it should be $1,100; and if this bill is defeated, I have no doubt whatever that we shall find members on this floor in the next Congress demanding a graded scale of salaries equal to those of a city carrier.

I have had some experience with wages in country districts. As a boy, during and immediately after the close of the civil war, I lived in southern Indiana on a farm. I taught a winter school for three months for $100, and out of that had to pay my board. And this was the highest salary that was paid in any of the schools in the vicinity. I worked for three years with a thrashing machine for $1.50 a day from daylight to dark through the long summer day, and I clerked in a country store at $20 a month and my board, and the cost of living then was greater than it is now. I was glad to get the work at the wages I have named, and I should have thought that I was on the high road to wealth and a place among the captains of industry if I could have had a rural-carrier route and steady employment the year round at $500 a year.

Let me illustrate further: I happen to have the good fortune to own one of the best farms in Hamilton County, in the vicinity of Cincinnati, which I let out to a tenant on shares, the arrangement being the universal one in that locality, as follows: He furnishes all the seed, does all the work, and gives me half of everything that is raised. He is compelled to keep four horses, to hire two men during the plowing and seeding time and for gathering the crops, whose wages he pays out of his share of the profits.

The total income of the farm is about $1,600, of which he gets half, about $800. Out of this $800 must come all of the expenses I have referred to above, and his net income in no year probably exceeds $250 or $300 a year. Along the pike in front of this farm a rural carrier drives, and working four or five hours a day earns a salary, with little or no laborious work, double or thrice what this man and his hard-working wife can make out of the farm in the course of a year. The farmer takes the chances of loss of crops by drought or insect pests; the carrier takes no risk whatever. The farmer runs the risk of depressed markets and low prices, the carrier gets his salary by check on the first of each month whether prices are up or prices are down.

The country school-teacher in most communities is well paid if he can get $500 a year. The country preacher gets even less. The country merchant feels well satisfied if his books show a balance on the right side at the end of the year of an equal amount.

Knowing these facts as I do, I have little patience with the buncombe of the gentlemen who in this debate have made the Hall resound with their inquiry of why should the country carrier not be paid as much as a carrier in the city.

They might as well ask why, because a square foot of ground in a city will sell for $100, a square foot of ground in the country should not bring the same price. They seem to forget that while an acre of farm land may be worth $100, that same acre, if in the midst of a great city, might be worth a million dollars; that a man can board at a country hotel at a dollar a day who will have to pay four times as much in a city hostelry. A carrier in the city is paid the equivalent of wages for similar service in other lines of employment. A clerk in a store gets from $800 to $1,200 a year in the city; in the country he would get from $200 to $500. The difference in the cost of living is of itself a sufficient answer to the question.

Among the other questions that have been asked and reiterated is, "If the contract system is a good one for the country carrier, why is it not also advisable to put the city carrier under contract?" The answer is simple and has been repeated many times by the friends of the bill in this debate. There are two sufficient reasons. First, the service on the rural route is one which can not be limited to the same number of hours on all the various routes in different sections of the country. The number of persons served is different.

Where the roads are hilly the time must necessarily be slower than on level roads; where the country is sparsely settled the number of boxes at which the carrier would have to stop is less than where the country is thickly settled; in winter time routes in the Northern States will be covered with snow, and in some cases become almost if not quite impassable. The city carrier, on the other hand, whether he be in New York or San Francisco, in Chicago or New Orleans, is required to work eight hours a day, no more, no less. The number of patrons of a route is practically the same in these various cities, and the varying conditions of the seasons make little difference in his ability to perform the service. A salaried service, therefore, for the city carrier is the best and most equitable arrangement.

Another reason why it would be impossible and impracticable to let the city carrier service out by contract would arise from the fact that, whereas there would be only two or three bidders on a country route, if the city carrier's route were let out by contract there would be many more bidders than that for the service and a great part of the time of the Department would be consumed in opening bids and awarding contracts.

In addition to that, it would be impossible to transfer a city carrier from one route to another, a thing which would never become necessary in the country carrier service. In short, the mere fact that it would be impracticable to put the city carrier service under contract is no argument whatever against the contract service in the rural delivery, because the conditions are so entirely different between the two classes of the service.

Some of the gentlemen opposed to the bill have laid great stress upon the fact that the present carriers are men of high character, trustworthy, and reliable, while those which would be appointed under the contract system might be disreputable, unaccommodating and disrespectful. One gentleman—and perhaps more—in the course of the debate stated that while the farmer is out on his farm tending to his work his family at the farmhouse might be liable to insult and abuse from disreputable contract carriers.

These gentlemen evidently forget that it is no part of this service to deliver or collect mail at the houses of the patrons. They are not supposed to leave their wagon, as the rule of the Department requires that the boxes shall be so placed as to be accessible without alighting, and a similar regulation would apply and be enforced if the carrier performed the service under contract. There is no personal delivery or collection of mail contemplated by either system. It is a delivery to a box or a collection from a box, and the family of the farmer stands in no more danger of improper action on the part of the carrier under either system than they would from an ordinary traveler along the road.

One might infer from the remarks of some of the gentlemen in this debate that the farmer had no interest in or benefit from the city delivery service. Hardly any post-office appropriation bill comes up for consideration in the House but some member will declaim against the number of deliveries and salaries paid to the carriers in the city.

While it is true that a large portion of the city carrier service is devoted to the carrying of local mail within the city limits, it must be remembered that it is this very local mail, most of which is first class, that pays the bulk of revenue into the Post-Office Department, and without which the rates of postage to the farmer, as well as to the resident of the city, would have to be increased or the money taken out of the Treasury to supply a deficit; and the farmer must not forget that the money that thus comes from the Treasury for the Post-Office deficiency is raised by taxation in some form and falls either directly or indirectly upon his shoulders.

It must also be remembered that the farmer himself, when he writes a letter and sends it to the city, may be very much interested in securing its prompt delivery and speedy reply. He may have broken his reaper, mower, or thrasher and be sending to the manufacturer for castings to repair the break. The delay of a few hours in the delivery of his letter and the filling of his order might result in the loss of a considerable portion of his crop. He may be writing to a commission merchant for prices in a rapidly changing market, and the delay of a few hours in reply might lose him hundreds of dollars.

The post-office system of the country is not a heterogeneous group of rival or antagonistic parts. It is one great homogeneous whole. It is like the human body, with its various organs and parts, each adapted to its special function, but all required to make a perfect whole. The old story of the disagreement of the various parts of the body and the refusal of one to perform its proper function is typical of what would happen to the great postal service of the country if any one of its great branches should become inefficient, and therefore it is that with every improvement in the city carrier service the rural service which joins onto it and connects the farmer directly with his correspondents in the city is also improved. There should be no feeling of rivalry or antagonism in these two arms of the service. The gentlemen representing rural districts in which there is no city carrier service should be as eager to develop and improve the latter as the representative of a city district should be to benefit the rural free delivery.

The great danger to the rural free-delivery service which the committee apprehends is that it will become so expensive that it will ultimately break itself down unless placed upon a contract basis, and this view should appeal most strongly to those members who represent districts which are sparsely settled, for if the Department should cease to extend the service or should curtail any of the service already started by reason of the insufficiency of the appropriation, those districts would naturally suffer first.

The committee have felt that it would be better to have 50,000 routes on which the compensation for carriers was fair and reasonable than to have 30,000 routes on which the carriers were paid 50 per cent or more in excess of the current rate of wages or salary for equally difficult work. In other words, it is better to have many routes at fair salaries than to have a few routes at excessive salaries. It is better to have the whole territory of the United States served by a contract system, which will keep the compensation within reasonable limits, than to have a limited portion of the country only served with a high-priced salary service.

I do not wish to be misunderstood is the use of the phrase "high-priced salary." The question as to what a high salary is is a comparative one. A salary may be high in one section which would be low in another. Six hundred dollars is not an exorbitant salary in any section of the country, especially if the cost of maintaining a horse and wagon is to come out of that. But $850, $1,000, and $1,100, as suggested by the gentleman from Indiana, is far beyond what the service is actually worth in probably any considerable portion of the country.

By the contract system the carrier's compensation would be fixed by his own bid. If he is willing to bid for a route on the basis of $500 he would, no doubt, be glad to get it for that. Other work of the Government is done by bidding, and no complaint is made. We never make a great river or harbor improvement or construct a public building but what it is done by contract on bids and awards. I know it is claimed that this is a special personal service and that certain qualifications are demanded of the carrier which could not be obtained under contract system.

This, I am sure, would not apply to contracts let in accordance with the provisions of this bill, for the committee have been careful to provide the same requirements as to character and qualification as are now provided in the rules controlling appointments by the Bureau. If any gentleman will take the trouble to make a comparison between the bill and those rules he will see that to all intents and purposes the qualifications of those who would bid for a contract, if the bill should become a law, would be the same as those now required since the 1st of February, 1902, for carriers appointed on new routes. This I will not elaborate, as it has been gone over very thoroughly by other gentlemen.

The statement has been repeatedly made that the improvement of the rural free-delivery service by increasing the revenue from the sale of stamps and the discontinuance of star routes and fourth-class offices will ultimately make the service self-supporting. This I can hardly agree to. I doubt whether it ever will be self-supporting, and I feel very certain that the discontinuance of star routes and fourth-class offices will go but a very little way toward paying the expense of extending the rural free service.

By reference to the report of the First Assistant for the present year (p. 53) it is shown that the total amounts saved in the star-route service superseded by rural free delivery within the twelve months previous amounted to $173,404.41, and that the saving by the discontinuance of fourth-class offices by reason of the establishment of the rural free service in the same time was $120,221.43, making a total from these two sources of considerably less than $300,000—a very small item compared with the cost during the same time of extending the rural service.

I might add also that even that amount is considerably in excess of what is actually paid, as the discontinuance of fourth-class offices only results in throwing the business, which before went to them, largely into the office which is the terminus of the route.

I am sure that much of the opposition to this bill, both in Congress and out of it, grows out of ignorance of the present star-route service with which the contract service in this bill has been more or less compared. Under the old star-route service in Brady's time, one person or corporation could put in bids for hundreds or thousands of the star routes and, if the lowest bidders, would be awarded the contracts for all these various routes. They would then proceed to sublet or farm out these contracts, having no regard for the character of the subcontractor, his equipment, or anything else, except that he was to relieve the head contractor of the actual carriage of the mail.

Neither the contractor nor the subcontractor was required to live on the line of his route. Frequently the bids were for less than the service could be performed for, and extra allowances were made to compensate for slight additions to the routes. Not only were great frauds practiced on the Government through this system, but the service became disgraceful and contemptible in the eyes of the people.

I say frankly that the committee would never have recommended such a system in connection with the rural free-delivery service. But the star-route service of to-day is a very different thing. The following are the regulations inserted in the advertisement for bids for star-route service, as found in the report of the Second Assistant Postmaster-General for this year (p. 5):

LOCAL BIDDERS.

Under this advertisement no bid will be considered unless the bidder shall agree in his proposal that in the event of the service being awarded to him he will give his personal supervision to the performance of the same and will reside on or contiguous to the route.

BOX DELIVERY ON STAR ROUTES.

It is contemplated that the new contract shall make provision for delivering mail into boxes along nearly all of the routes. The terms of the advertisement on this subject are as follows:

In addition to carrying the mails to the various post-offices on the star routes covered by this advertisement the carrier on each route, except where otherwise specifically stated, will be also required to deliver mail into all boxes and hang small bags or satchels containing mail on cranes or posts that may be erected along the route under the following conditions:

Any person living on or near any star route herein described, and not within the corporate limits of any town or within 80 rods of any post-office, who desires his mail deposited at a given point on the line of the route by the carrier on said route may provide and erect a suitable box or crane on the roadside, located in such manner as to be reached as conveniently as practicable by the carrier without dismounting from the vehicle or horse, and such person shall file with the postmaster at the post-office to which his mail is addressed (which shall be one of the two post-offices on the route on either side of and next to the box or crane) a request in writing for the delivery of his mail to the carrier on the route for deposit at the designated point, at the risk of the addressee. The small bag or satchel above described, as well as the box or crane, must be provided by the person for whose use it is intended, without expense to the Department.

It shall be the duty of the postmaster at every such post-office, upon a written order from any person living on or near the star route, to deliver to the proper mail carrier for that route any mail matter—placing in the respective satchels, where such are used, the mail for the persons to whom such satchels belong—with instructions as to the proper mail box or crane at which said mail matter shall be deposited; but registered mail shall not be so delivered unless expressly requested by the addressee in his written order. No mail matter so delivered to a carrier shall be carried past another post-office on the route before being deposited into a mail box or hung on a crane or post.

The carrier on the star route will be required to receive from any postmaster on the route any mail matter or private mail satchel that may be intrusted to him, outside of the usual mail bag, and shall carry such mail matter or private mail satchel to and deposit it into the proper mail box or hang it on the proper mail crane placed on the line of the route for this purpose; such service by the carrier to be without charge to the addressees.

The mail carriers must be of good character and of sufficient intelligence to properly handle and depost the mail along the routes.

The Department does not prescribe any particular design of box or satchel to be used for this service, but the person providing either should see that it is of such character as to afford ample protection to his mail. If there is a lock attached to the box, a key is not to be held by the carrier, as he is expected to deposit the mail without the necessity of unlocking the box. [The box or crane should be so located on the roadside that the carrier can deposit the mail without leaving his vehicle or horse, and yet not where it will obstruct public travel.]

The carrier is not required to collect mail from the boxes, but there is no objection to his doing so if it does not interfere with his making the schedule time. The law provides that every carrier of the mail shall receive any mail matter presented to him if properly prepaid by stamps, and deliver the same for mailing at the next post-office at which he arrives, but that no fees shall be allowed him therefor.

Delivery of mail by star-route carriers will not be permitted over such portions of star routes as may have in operation the rural free-delivery service, except as an additional or supplemental service when shown to be necessary and practicable.

The depositing of mail along the line of the route will not be required of carriers on steamboat routes.

This new service has been successfully inaugurated in the first contract section, and contracts containing these regulations have been made to run until June 30, 1905. Contracts are now being let in the second section in a similar manner. Your committee felt that if this star-route service, as improved by these new rules and regulations, could be successfully conducted, there was no reason why a service somewhat similar, by contract, should not be tried on the rural free-delivery routes.

It is a mere matter of detail, which the Department can work out without difficulty. There is no occasion for any jealousy between the offices of the First Assistant Postmaster-General and the Second Assistant Postmaster-General, if any does exist, nor need there be any fear if the transfer of the rural free-delivery service from the First Assistant, where it now belongs, to the Second Assistant, who has charge of the star-route service. The First Assistant will be authorized to make contracts for this service and the Second Assistant can still continue to make his contracts for the star-route service.

As opportunity will be given under the debate when the bill is considered for amendment to discuss the details of many of the propositions which I have merely and in a most general way hinted at above, I shall postpone further comment upon them until then.

In conclusion, I wish to say that the committee in submitting this bill to the House for action has been actuated solely with a desire to do that which was best for continuing and extending the rural free delivery.

Whatever differences of opinion we might originally have had upon the feasibility of extending this service throughout the country, we are a unit now in recognizing the fact that it is here and here to stay. We have endeavored to present, in the remarks made by the different members of the committee, the reasons which induced us to prefer the contract system to a system of appointment.

We have no sympathy with the demogogic and buncombe cry of cheap! cheap! cheap! as applied to this proposed service. We are anxious to secure good service—the best service that can be secured for a fair remuneration. We feel that we ought to pay every dollar that the service is worth and not one dollar more; that the man who bids upon the contract is the best judge of what he can afford to do it for; that the safeguards thrown around the selection and award of contract by the limitations of this bill are such that an equally good character of men shall secure the service as if appointed in accordance with the present system; that the varying conditions in the country will be met by the variations in the contract prices paid for the service so that each carrier will receive what his services are worth in his locality, whether it be greater or less than the amount which another carrier receives in a different locality and under different conditions. This much we have a right to pay for the service and no more.

I have no sympathy with the feeling of recklessness which seems to control the words and the votes of members of this House in the expenditure of public money extravagantly and uselessly. It is true we have an overflowing Treasury, with millions of surplus stored away, but we must not forget that we have many enterprises entailing vast expenditures which are to make a drain upon that reserve.

The Nicaragua Canal, the ship subsidy, river and harbor improvements, naval appropriation expenses; all of these will make drains upon our wealth that will rapidly deplete the Treasury. While it is true that there is as yet no cloud even upon the horizon to warn us of a gathering storm, this era of prosperity must one day reach its climax and begin to recede. The pendulum which swings up must swing down, and when the time comes of straitened finances, diminished income, depleted Treasury, and financial distrust, then it will be well for the rural free-delivery service if it shall be found to be established upon the basis of economy and rational cost.

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 11728) to classify the rural free-delivery service and fix the compensation to employees thereof, and had come to no resolution thereon.

And then, on motion of Mr. LOUD (at 4 o'clock and 2 minutes p. m.), the House adjourned.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following executive communication was taken from the Speaker's table and referred, as follows:

A letter from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a copy of the conclusions of fact and law in the French spoliation cases relating to The schooner Friendship, Samuel Moulton, master, against The United States—to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several Calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. POWERS of Maine, from the Committee on the Territories, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 11997) granting the Hawaii Ditch Company, Limited, the right of way over public lands in the districts of North and South Kohala, in the island of Hawaii, for the purpose of constructing and maintaining ditches or canals and the necessary reservoirs, dams, and the like, for irrigation and domestic purposes in said districts, reported the same with amendments, accompanied by a report (No. 792); which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. PATTERSON. I present a memorial of the legislature of Colorado, in favor of the maintenance of the present tariff on foreign sugar, and remonstrating against reciprocity with Cuba. I ask that the memorial be printed in the RECORD, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

The memorial was referred to the Committee on Finance, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

House joint memorial No. 1.—By Mr. Madden, of Weld.

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States:

Your memorialists, the legislature of the State of Colorado, in extra session assembled, respectfully represent as follows:

The beet-sugar product of the State of Colorado was—

In 1899	$100,000
In 1900	1,125,000
In 1901	3,600,000
And will be in 1902, approximately	6,000,000

There are now six factories in existence within the borders of this State, which have been erected at the expense of nearly $6,000,000. The operations of these factories have been the result of diversifying our industries, enlarging the area of irrigated lands, multiplying homes, and reducing the cost of sugar throughout the trans-Missouri country. We expect a production of sugar aggregating a value of $10,000,000 during the year 1903. The soil of the arid West has proven eminently adapted to the production of beet sugar, every year witnessing an increase in saccharine matter and a greater purity of the product.

Considering, then, that according to the report of the Bureau of Statistics of the Treasury Department, the imports from foreign countries for 1901 amounted to 4,500,000,000 of pounds of sugar, valued at $115,000,000, of which more than 4,000,000,000 pounds, or fully 85 per cent, came from the Tropics, where it was produced by "coolie" labor, and the remainder from the bounty-fed fields and factories of Europe, we beg to point out that our people should not be deprived of this opportunity to employ their labor and to dispose of their product within their own markets.

When it is known that Cuba imported into the United States during 1901 1,200,000,000 pounds, or fully 30 per cent of the cane sugar which entered our ports, deriving therefrom an estimated revenue of over $30,000,000, it may appear reasonable that the people of the West should be allowed an equal chance with them; and that is what the difference in labor in Cuba and Colorado, added to the tariff, amounts to.

The beet-sugar industry of Europe is being fostered by the Government. What we desire is a continuance of the legally established protection against the unfair fiscal arrangements of Europe, and against unjust competition in labor on the part of Cuba and other tropical countries.

We therefore respectfully show to your honorable bodies:

First. That the beet-sugar industry has been established upon the lands, formerly arid, reclaimed by the labor of the Western people in reliance upon the protection afforded by the present tariff.

Second. That the further development of this industry depends upon the perpetuation of the conditions created by said tariff.

Third. That the free admission of cane sugar raised within the borders of tropical lands now belonging to the United States has narrowed the market of this industry to the interior States, and that any reduction of the duties imposed by said tariff in favor of other tropical countries not belonging to the Union will be likely to destroy the beet-sugar industry of this and other Western States.

Fourth. That the beet sugar as promoted and encouraged by our present tariff law is the first and only industry in the West in which the farmers and producers are directly interested which has received the benefit of the American policy of protection, which policy should therefore be continued until its benefits have been enjoyed by the West equally with the East.

Fifth. That for these reasons we ask the maintenance of the present tariff rates.

And your memorialists will ever pray.

SIOUX INDIANS OF CROW CREEK RESERVATION.

The bill (S. 3990) authorizing the use, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, of certain moneys in the Treasury to the credit of the Sioux Indians of the Crow Creek Reservation in South Dakota, under the act of March 2, 1895, and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That of the principal sum of $168,335.10 now in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the Sioux Indians of the Crow Creek Reservation in South Dakota drawing interest at 4 per cent per annum, $60,000 may be used for the purchase of stock cattle, $25,000 may be paid pro rata in cash, and $83,335.10 may be used in the purchase of cattle fence wire, in the construction of storage reservoirs, in the improvement of their allotments, and in any other manner that will best promote their welfare and civilization, all in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the report be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read.

The Secretary read the report submitted by Mr. GAMBLE on February 22, 1902, as follows:

The Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3990) authorizing the use, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, of certain moneys in the Treasury to the credit of the Sioux Indians of the Crow Creek Reservation in South Dakota, under the act of March 2, 1895, and for other purposes, having had the same under consideration, beg leave to report it back with the following amendment, and that after such amendment that the same do pass:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"That of the principal sum of $168,335.10 now in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the Sioux Indians of the Crow Creek Reservation in South Dakota drawing interest at the rate of 4 per cent per annum, $60,000 may be used for the purchase of stock cattle, $25,000 may be paid pro rata in cash, and $83,335.10 may be used in the purchase of cattle fence wire, in the construction of storage reservoirs, in the improvement of their allotments, and in any other manner that will best promote their welfare and civilization, all in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior."

The reasons for the legislation are very fully set forth in the accompanying correspondence from the Department, and the same is annexed hereto and made a part of this report. Your committee believes the interest of the Crow Creek Indians would be best subserved by the use of the moneys now in the Treasury to their credit in the way indicated in the proposed bill rather than allowing the same to remain in the Treasury and the Indians to receive only the interest therefrom. The amount of the interest is so inconsiderable that it does not prove of substantial benefit to the Indians. By investing the moneys in stock and in the improvements proposed, and also in the construction of storage reservoirs, we believe the best interests of the Indians will be conserved and inure much more to their advantage rather than to hold the funds as it has been since the year 1895.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the letter of the Secretary of the Interior be now read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The letter will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Committee on Commerce also report an amendment to the preamble, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In the second whereas clause, line 3, strike out "requires" and insert "required;" and in the fifth line, after the words "already been," strike out the words "delivered on the ground and is now awaiting construction" and insert "constructed;" so as to read:

Whereas the safe and proper transportation of freight, passengers, and the United States mails by the said Atlanta, Knoxville and Northern Railroad required that the old wooden bridge be immediately replaced by a new steel structure, which has already been constructed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The preamble as amended was agreed to.

The bill (S. 2172) to provide for the payment of medical expenses of sick officers and enlisted men of the Army while absent from duty with leave or on furlough, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On line 4, page 2, after the date "1898," it is proposed to insert "and up to and including April 11, 1899;" so as to make the bill read:

DEPOT FOR REVENUE-CUTTER SERVICE.

The bill (S. 4096) to provide for a site for a depot for the Revenue-Cutter Service was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Commerce with an amendment, in line 5, after the words "sum of," to strike out "forty" and insert "thirty," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to acquire a suitable site upon which to establish a depot for the Revenue-Cutter Service, and for this purpose the sum of $30,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read.

The Secretary read the report submitted by Mr. GALLINGER February 28, 1902, as follows:

The bill thus amended has the approval of the Treasury Department, as will appear by the annexed letter of the Acting Secretary, the amendment referred to therein having been incorporated in the bill as reported.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, February 26, 1902.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of a letter dated the 24th instant, from the Committee on Commerce, United States Senate, transmitting Senate bill 4096, first session Fifty-seventh Congress, "To provide for a site for a depot for the Revenue-Cutter Service," and requesting that the committee be furnished with such suggestions as I may deem proper touching the merits of the bill and the propriety of its passage.

In reply I submit herewith copy of a report on the subject made by the Chief of Division, Revenue-Cutter Service, approved by me, and I recommend the passage of the bill with the following modification: In line 5 strike out the word "forty," and substitute therefor the word "thirty;" so as to read "$30,000."

The bill is returned, modified as suggested.

Respectfully,

O. L. SPAULDING,
Acting Secretary.

The CHAIRMAN COMMITTEE ON COMMERCE,
United States Senate.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, February 26, 1902.

SIR: On March 1, 1899, I had the honor to submit to you the substance of the following statement and recommendations:

The necessity of proper wharf and storage facilities, some place that the Revenue-Cutter Service may call its own, where its vessels can be laid up for the annual overhauling, indispensable to the proper care and preservation of this class of public property, is severely felt. The service has no such facilities under its control in any port where its vessels are stationed, nor elsewhere. It is earnestly recommended that a station of this kind be established, and the following plan therefor is submitted:

1. Hire a suitable site with wharf and adjoining land sufficient for the purpose. This can be done at a point near Baltimore, Md., at an annual rental of $800, with the privilege of renewal at the end of each fiscal year. The site referred to is on Curtis Creek, about 8 miles from Baltimore. The machine shops and like conveniences of Baltimore would be always available, while the dry dock of the Columbian Iron Works, in which the Government vessels are docked (under the provisions of section 2, act approved June 19, 1878) without charge, would be at hand.

2. Having leased the property as indicated, one of the unseaworthy vessels of the service should be stationed there with a complement of officers and men. The crew of the vessel would be composed of enlisted men competent to do such repair work, painting, etc., as might be needed on vessels ordered there for overhauling.

After the station is established, plain, inexpensive, but substantial structures should be erected upon the premises to serve as berthing quarters for the crews of vessels undergoing renovation, as workshops for repairs, building boats, making sails, awnings, hammocks, bags, etc., for issue to the service.

3. Under existing conditions, inadequate privileges for the purposes briefly outlined above must now be hired for every vessel of the service at considerable cost, the larger part of which could be saved.

4. Besides providing a place for overhauling and repairing such vessels of the service as might be ordered to this station, the following kinds of work could be done for the service by enlisted men of the vessel to be stationed there:

(1) All quarter or small boats could be constructed.
(2) All hammocks, bags, awnings, and sails could be made of uniform pattern, quality, and finish, for the service.
(3) All painting, inside and out, above the water line on all vessels ordered there.
(4) All calking, relaying of decks, all repairs to joiner work, etc., could be made.
(5) Numerous other items of expense, which must inevitably be incurred under present conditions, would be saved in whole or in part.

I am so impressed with not only the necessity of establishing this station but as well with the advantage that will follow to the service and to the Government, from an economical standpoint, that I have no hesitation in recommending it and asking your favorable consideration.

The foregoing was fully considered by the Department at the time and received the Secretary's approval.

The site referred to was accordingly leased, and has been renewed for the current year.

The following shows the net savings on account of wharfage, storage, and facilities, and on labor, material, and articles made and furnished at Arundel Cove depot to December 31, 1901:

Wharf berth and storage facilities	$6,353.32
Building of boats for the service	553.74
Repairing vessels of the service	549.95
Hammocks and bags for the service	318.25
Sails and awnings for the service	248.39
Quarters for officers and crews of vessels overhauling	200.40
Boat covers, etc	19.25
Cost of labor	269.43
Making a total of	8,512.73

In my judgment, it would be largely to the advantage of the Government to own the present leased site and thereby save the annual rental of $800, and I therefore ask your approval of the accompanying bill (H. R. 10778).

Respectfully submitted.

C. F. SHOEMAKER,
Captain, R. C. S., Chief of Division.

THE SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY.

Approved. O. L. SPAULDING,
Acting Secretary.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

REMOVAL OF SNOW AND ICE FROM DISTRICT SIDEWALKS.

The bill (S. 3130) to provide for the removal of snow and ice from the sidewalks of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia with amendments. The first amendment was, in section 6, page 5, line 23, after the word "shall" to strike out:

Assess the cost thereof against such lot or lots of ground, which assessment shall be a lien on such lot or lots when entered of record on the tax records of the District of Columbia, and to continue until paid, and shall be added to the general tax annually levied on such lot or lots, and shall be collected in the same manner and as part of such general tax: Provided, however, That such removal by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia shall not relieve such owner, tenant, or occupant from the penalty hereinbefore provided for failure to remove such dirt, sand, gravel, or other refuse matter.

And insert:

Make an assessment on account thereof at the same rates and under the same provisions named in section 4 of this act.

So as to make the section read:

SEC. 6. That in the event of failure on the part of any owner, tenant, or occupant of any improved or unimproved lot or lots of ground in the District of Columbia to comply with the provisions of the preceding section of this act within five days after the notice hereinbefore provided, it shall be the duty of the Commissioners of the District to cause the removal of such accumulation of dirt, sand, gravel, or other refuse matter; and upon any and every such removal by them they shall make an assessment on account thereof at the same rates and under the same provisions named in section 4 of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 6, to insert as a new section the following:

SEC. 7. That to enable the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to comply with the provisions of sections 4 and 6 of this act, the sum of $5,000 is hereby appropriated, one-half out of the revenues of the District of Columbia and one-half out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated: Provided, however, That all assessments collected under the provisions of this act shall be deposited in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the appropriation herein made, and shall form a continuous fund for the purpose of complying with the provisions of said sections 4 and 6.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLIARD AND POOL TABLES IN THE DISTRICT.

The bill (S. 3439) to amend an act entitled "An act to license billiard and pool tables in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes," was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to amend section 4 of an act entitled "An act to license billiard and pool tables in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes," approved February 25, 1897, by adding thereto before the penalty clause thereof the following:

And it shall be unlawful for the proprietor or proprietors of any pool room or pool table to suffer or permit any minor under 18 years of age to frequent, visit, or patronize the same.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the report be read in that case.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read.

The Secretary read the report submitted by Mr. MALLORY on February 28, 1902, as follows:

The Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3439) to amend an act entitled "An act to license billiard and pool tables in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes," having considered the same, report thereon with a recommendation that it pass.

The bill has the approval of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, as will appear by the following letter:

DEAR SIR: The Commissioners of the District of Columbia have the honor to transmit herewith a draft of an act entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to license billiard and pool tables in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes,'" and recommend its enactment. The object of the bill is to prohibit minors under 18 years of age from patronizing or visiting pool rooms.

Very respectfully,

HENRY B. F. MACFARLAND,

LIGHT-HOUSE AND FOG SIGNAL AT MUKILTEO POINT, WASHINGTON.

The bill (S. 257) to establish a light-house and fog-signal station at Mukilteo Point, near the city of Everett, State of Washington, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Commerce with an amendment, in line 6, before the word "thousand," to strike out "fifteen," and insert "twenty-two;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That a light-house and fog-signal station, together with suitable buildings, be established at Mukilteo Point, near the city of Everett, State of Washington, under the direction of the Light-House Board; and that the sum of $22,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, be, and the same hereby is, appropriated therefor, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the report be read in that case.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read.

The Secretary read the report submitted by Mr. TURNER February 28, 1902, as follows:

The Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. 257) to establish a light-house and fog-signal station at Mukilteo Point, near the city of Everett, State of Washington, having considered the same, report it with an amendment, and, as amended, recommend its passage.

The bill thus amended has the approval of the Treasury Department, as will appear by the annexed letter, the amendment referred to therein having been incorporated in the bill as reported.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, February 21, 1902.

SIR: This Department has the honor to acknowledge the receipt of the letters from your committee, dated December 7, 1901, and February 5, 1902, inclosing for suggestions copies of S. 257, appropriating $15,000 to establish a light and fog-signal station at Mukilteo Point, near Everett, Wash.

The Department in reply begs to state that the matter was referred to the Light-House Board, which in turn referred the bill to its local officers at Portland, Oreg., for examination into the need for this light and fog signal.

The board now reports that the proposed light and fog signal would be of much benefit to navigation, not only to vessels entering the harbor of Everett, Wash., but to vessels going up Possession Sound and Saratoga Passage and by way of Deception Pass to points north, which route is much frequented by the smaller boats running out of Tacoma and Seattle. The tides are very strong and deceiving at Mukilteo Point. Some time ago one of the large San Francisco vessels narrowly escaped running ashore there in a fog.

Everett is rapidly increasing in importance as a shipping point, and many ocean-going and coastwise lumber vessels run regularly to that port. It is also probable that many large steamers will be entering and leaving there in the near future.

The board estimates that a suitable light and fog-signal station can be established at Mukilteo Point at a cost not exceeding $22,000. The Department concurs with the board in deeming the establishment of that station required by the rapidly increasing commerce of the vicinity, and therefore has the honor to recommend the passage of this bill, when amended, to appropriate the amount of $22,000, which will be needed therefor.

Respectfully, O. L. SPAULDING,
Acting Secretary.

THE CHAIRMAN OF THE COMMITTEE ON COMMERCE,
United States Senate.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SUPERINTENDENTS OF CHIMNEY SWEEPS IN THE DISTRICT.

The bill (S. 3488) to authorize the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to appoint superintendents of chimney sweeps, to prescribe their duties, and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the report in that case be read.

The Secretary read the report submitted by Mr. MCMILLAN on February 28, 1902, as follows:

The Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3488) to authorize the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to appoint superintendents of chimney sweeps, to prescribe their duties, and for other purposes, having considered the same, report thereon with a recommendation that it pass.

The bill has the approval of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, as will appear by the following letter:

OFFICE COMMISSIONERS OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA,
Washington, January 29, 1902.

DEAR SIR: The Commissioners of the District of Columbia have the honor to transmit herewith a draft of a bill to authorize the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to appoint superintendents of chimney sweeps, to prescribe their duties, and for other purposes, and recommend early and favorable action thereon.

The Commissioners have received a number of complaints as to the manner in which chimneys are frequently swept. At present there is no official of the District whose duty it is to perform or supervise this class of work. In consequence of this lack householders and others whose chimneys need sweeping must depend upon promiscuous and generally unskilled and irresponsible labor for that service.

As the persons employed in chimney sweeping must necessarily have access to rooms containing articles of more or less value which may be readily purloined or which may be injured by careless workmanship on the part of the chimney sweeper, and as the cleaning of chimneys and flues where accumulations of soot are conducive to extensive conflagrations is a matter of general public concern, the advisability of having governmental surveillance over this class of work will readily appear.

The chief of the fire department also has expressed to the Commissioners his opinion that it is important to subject this service to regulation, for the reason, among others, that fires are often due to injury to chimneys by careless or incompetent sweeps.

Very respectfully,

HENRY B. F. MCFARLAND,
President Board of Commissioners District of Columbia.

Hon. JAMES MCMILLAN,
Chairman Committee on the District of Columbia,
United States Senate.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

OMAHA NORTHERN RAILWAY COMPANY.

The bill (S. 3663) to amend an act entitled "An act granting the right to the Omaha Northern Railway Company to construct a railway across, and establish stations on, the Omaha and Winnebago Reservation, in the State of Nebraska, and for other purposes," by extending the time for the construction of said railway, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. GAMBLE rose.

Mr. COCKRELL. I suggest that in line 1, page 2, we strike out "five" and insert "three."

Mr. GAMBLE. I rose for that purpose. There was a mistake in the printing of the bill. The recommendation was made by the committee that "five" be stricken out and in lieu thereof "three" be inserted, according to the recommendations of the Interior Department, and I make that motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from South Dakota offers an amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 1, page 2, it is proposed to strike out the word "five" before the word "years" and insert "three;" so as to read:

That the time prescribed by an act of Congress approved the 26th day of March, 1898, entitled "An act granting the right to the Omaha Northern Railway Company to construct a railway across, and establish stations on, the Omaha and Winnebago Reservation, in the State of Nebraska, and for other purposes," for the construction of said railway be, and the same is hereby, extended for a period of three years from the 26th day of March, 1901.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

OFFICERS AND CREW OF U. S. S. CHARLESTON.

The bill (S. 1673) for the relief of the officers and crew of the U. S. S. Charleston, lost in the Philippines November 2, 1899, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Naval Affairs with an amendment, to insert as a new section the following:

SEC. 4. That any amounts that have been paid under sections 288, 289, and 290 of the Revised Statutes shall be deducted in the settlement of all claims under this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the report be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read.

The Secretary read the report submitted by Mr. PENROSE on February 28, 1902, as follows:

The Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1673) for the relief of the officers and crew of the U. S. S. Charleston, lost in the Philippines November 2, 1899, having considered the same, report thereon with a recommendation that it pass with an amendment as follows:

At the end of section 3 to add:

"SEC. 4. That any amounts that have been paid under sections 288, 289, and 290 of the Revised Statutes shall be deducted in the settlement of all claims under this act."

The bill has the approval of the Navy Department, as will appear by the following letter:

NAVY DEPARTMENT, Washington, February 24, 1902.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 22d instant, inclosing a copy of bill S. 1673, and requesting in behalf of the Committee on Naval Affairs the views of this Department in regard thereto.

On the 14th instant, in response to a similar request of Senator BOIES PENROSE in relation to this measure, the Department expressed its views in a letter of that date, a copy of which is herewith inclosed.

Very respectfully,

JNO. D. LONG, Secretary.

Hon. EUGENE HALE,
Chairman Committee on Naval Affairs,
United States Senate.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, Washington, February 14, 1902.

SIR: The Department is in receipt of your letter of the 10th instant, inclosing a copy of bill (S. 1673) "for the relief of the officers and crew of the U. S. S. Charleston, lost in the Philippines November 2, 1899," and requesting the recommendation of this Department in the premises.

In reply I have the honor to transmit herewith copy of a letter, dated February 7, 1901, addressed to the chairman of the Committee on Claims, House of Representatives, expressing the Department's views in regard to a similar measure (H. R. 13017) in the Fifty-sixth Congress.

It is learned that claims of some officers and men of the Charleston have been adjusted, and under sections 230 and 288 of the Revised Statutes have been paid to officers one month's pay and to enlisted men $60. It is therefore suggested that the proposed measure be amended by providing that the amounts which have been paid to persons in the naval service under said sections, or to their heirs under section 289, shall be deducted in the settlement of all claims under this act.

A form of an additional section, to be added at the end of the bill, for this purpose, is transmitted herewith.

The inclosures accompanying your letter are returned as requested.

Very respectfully,

JOHN D. LONG, Secretary.

Hon. BOIES PENROSE,
United States Senate.

NAVY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, February 7, 1901.

SIR: Referring to the bill (H. R. 13017) "for the relief of the officers and crew of the U. S. S. Charleston, lost in the Philippines November 2, 1899," and to your request of the 5th instant for facts and information and opinion in regard to the merits of the case, I have the honor to state that the Charleston, while on passage from Kasiguran to San Pio V, Kamiguin, P. I., on the morning of November 2, 1899, ran upon an unmarked and unknown shoal and was lost. The court of inquiry convened by the commander in chief of the naval force on Asiatic station to inquire into the circumstances connected with the loss by grounding of the Charleston found, inter alia, that every precaution required by the United States Navy regulations was taken by the commanding officer to insure the safety of the vessel under his command against accident, and in its opinion no blame or responsibility for the accident to the vessel should be attributed to the officers and crew.

The commanding officer of the Charleston in his report, dated November 28, 1899, to the commander in chief states: "I regretted very much the necessity for anybody to leave personal effects behind, but as the boats were deeply laden with the crew, arms and ammunition, and provisions, and had about 18 miles to go, most of it in the open sea, I considered it necessary. The officers and crew deserve the greatest commendation for faithful and zealous work at this time, and their readiness to cheerfully leave personal effects." The circumstances, other than those hereinafter mentioned, attending the loss of the Charleston were such as would, under the provisions of the act approved March 2, 1895, entitle the officers and crew to reimbursement for the loss of their personal effects.

The Comptroller of the Treasury, in a decision dated Jauary 22, 1901, held that as the Charleston was at the time of her loss engaged in cooperation with the land forces of the United States in the suppression of a local insurrection in the Philippine Islands, reimbursement for losses could not be made under the act by reason of its second proviso, "that this act shall not apply to losses sustained in time of war."

As the bill follows the lines of the general law on the subject of losses, and is similar to the act of March 30, 1898, to reimburse the survivors of officers and crew of the Maine for losses incurred by them, the Department perceives no objection to the bill and commends it to the favorable consideration of the committee.

Very respectfully, JOHN D. LONG,
Secretary.

Hon. JOSEPH V. GRAFF,
Chairman Committee on Claims, House of Representatives.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SAVANNAH RIVER BRIDGE.

The bill (S. 4003) to authorize the construction of a traffic bridge across the Savannah River from the mainland within the corporate limits of the city of Savannah to Hutchinsons Island, in the county of Chatham, State of Georgia, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Commerce with an amendment to insert as a new section the following:

SEC. 3. That the bridge constructed, maintained, and operated under this act and according to its limitations shall be a lawful structure, and shall be recognized and known as a post route, upon which also no higher charge shall be made for the transportation over the same of the mails, the troops, and the munitions of war of the United States than the rate per mile paid for transportation of said mails, troops, and munitions over the railroads and public highways leading to said bridge; and the United States shall have the right of way for postal, telegraph, and telephone purposes over said bridge; and all telephone and telegraph companies shall be granted equal rights and privileges in the construction and operation of their lines across said bridge.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the report be read.

The Secretary read the report submitted by Mr. BERRY on February 28, 1902, as follows:

The Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. 4003) to authorize the construction of a traffic bridge across the Savannah River from the mainland within the corporate limits of the city of Savannah to Hutchinsons Island, in the county of Chatham, State of Georgia, having considered the same, report it with an amendment and, as amended, recommend its passage.

The bill was submitted to the War Department by your committee, and the letter of the Chief of Engineers is appended.

The new section proposed by the amendment contains the usual provisions relating to post routes, telephone and telegraph lines.

OFFICE CHIEF OF ENGINEERS, UNITED STATES ARMY,
Washington, February 25, 1902.

SIR: I have the honor to return herewith a letter, dated the 19th instant, from the Senate Committee on Commerce, inclosing for the views of the War Department thereon S. 4003, Fifty-seventh Congress, first session, "A bill to authorize the construction of a traffic bridge across the Savannah River from the mainland within the corporate limits of the city of Savannah to Hutchinsons Island, in the county of Chatham, State of Georgia," and in reply to its reference to this office I beg to say that the bill appears to make ample provision for the protection of navigation interests, and I know of no objection to its passage by Congress so far as those interests are concerned.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,
G. L. GILLESPIE,
Brigadier-General, Chief of Engineers, U. S. A.

Hon. ELIHU ROOT,
Secretary of War.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a bill to which he calls the attention of the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. BERRY].

The bill (H. R. 11409) to authorize the construction of a traffic bridge across the Savannah River from the mainland within the corporate limits of the city of Savannah to Hutchinsons Island, in the county of Chatham, State of Georgia, was read twice by its title.

Mr. BERRY. I do not know whether this bill is similar to the one just passed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senator take the two bills and compare them and see?

Mr. HALE. Let the House bill lie on the table for the present.

Mr. BERRY. I shall be glad to do that. If they are similar, I will ask that this bill be passed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair observes that there are certain new sections. The bill will be referred to the Committee on Commerce, if there is no objection.

Mr. BERRY. Very well.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the vote whereby the bill (S. 4003) to authorize the construction of a traffic bridge across the Savannah River from the mainland within the corporate limits of the city of Savannah to Hutchinsons Island, in the county of Chatham, State of Georgia, was passed will be reconsidered, and the bill will take its place on the Calendar.

Mr. BERRY. I ask unanimous consent for that purpose.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection it, will be so ordered.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Commerce:

A bill (H. R. 4607) to provide for the construction of a bridge and approaches thereto across the Missouri River at or near South Omaha, Nebr.;

A bill (H. R. 11306) to extend the time for the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River at Burlington, Iowa; and

A bill (H. R. 11719) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the Pittsburg and Mansfield Railroad Company to construct and maintain a bridge across the Monongahela River."

The bill (H. R. 7458) to re-form the western judicial district of the State of Arkansas was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The following joint resolutions were severally read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on Printing:

A joint resolution (H. J. Res. 24) providing for the publication of 99,000 copies of the Special Report on the Diseases of Cattle; and

A joint resolution (H. J. Res. 26) providing for the publication of 200,000 copies of the Special Report on the Diseases of the Horse.

DIPLOMATIC AND CONSULAR APPROPRIATION BILL.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 11471) making appropriations for the diplomatic and consular service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1903, and asking a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. HALE. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments and agree to the conference asked by the House.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. HALE, Mr. CULLOM, and Mr. TELLER were appointed.

CUSTOMS LAUNCH FOR PACIFIC COAST.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 646) for the purchase or construction of a launch for the customs service at and in the vicinity of Astoria, Oreg., which was, in line 7, to strike out all after "and" down to and including "vessel," in line 10, and to insert "the cost thereof shall not exceed the sum of $10,000."

Mr. PERKINS. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to.

REPORT OF COMMISSIONER OF PENSIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the joint resolution of the Senate (S. R. 21) authorizing the printing of extra copies of the Annual Report of the Commissioner of Pensions; which was referred to the Committee on Printing.

LITTLE KANAWHA RIVER NAVIGATION COMPANY.

The bill (S. 297) for an examination of the property of the Little Kanawha River Navigation Company was announced as the next business in order.

Mr. HALE. This is a bill to confer values upon certain property in West Virginia, and as the Senator from that State who reported it is not present, I think we ought not to invade his bailiwick. I suggest that the bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be passed over without prejudice.

CENTRAL RAILWAY OF WEST VIRGINIA.

The bill (H. R. 4381) to authorize the Central Railway of West Virginia to build a bridge across the Monongahela River at or near Morgantown, in the State of West Virginia, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

J. V. DAVIS.

The bill (H. R. 1381) for the relief of J. V. Davis was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pay to J. V. Davis, superintendent of the Alexandria (Va.) National Cemetery, $500, to reimburse him for personal property destroyed by fire, which loss was incurred in his efforts to save the property of the United States.

Mr. SPOONER. From what committee does the bill come?

Mr. WARREN. The Committee on Military Affairs.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. From the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. SPOONER. Is there a report?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is. The report will be read.

The Secretary read from the report submitted by Mr. SCOTT on March 3, 1902, as follows:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 1381) for the relief of J. V. Davis, have examined the same and recommend its passage.

This bill passed the House of Representatives on the 21st of February, 1902. The facts involved are fully set forth in the report of the Committee on Claims on the bill, which is hereto attached and made a part of this report.

The House report is as follows:

[House Report No. 266, Fifty-seventh Congress, first session.]

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 1381) for the relief of J. V. Davis, have had the same under consideration and beg leave to submit the following report:

Mr. Davis, the claimant in this case, was superintendent of the national cemetery at Alexandria, Va. On the 9th day of August, 1878, between the hours of 2 and 3 o'clock in the morning, fire broke out in the lodge or building used and occupied by himself and family as a dwelling and spread so rapidly that to save the Government property therein he was compelled to lose his own.

The testimony shows that he saved all the Government property and lost his own, even to the wearing apparel of his family and himself. An itemized statement of the property destroyed and its value has been presented and is sworn to by Mr. Davis.

One James Smith, who was present at the fire, makes the following affidavit:

STATE OF VIRGINIA, City of Alexandria, to wit:

This day James Smith personally appeared before the undersigned, K. Kemper, a notary public for the city aforesaid, in the State of Virginia, and made oath that he is the lieutenant of the Alexandria, Va., police force, and has been such for six years, having joined the force in the year 1870 and served therein continuously until this day; that between 2 and 3 o'clock in the morning of August 9, 1878, as he now remembers, he was standing at the corner of King and Fayette streets, in said city, in company with one Julian Arnold, who was also a member of said police force; that they then saw a light, indicating a fire, in the direction of the United States military cemetery, which lies to the south and westward of said city; that affiant and Arnold ran in the direction of the cemetery, and, upon arriving there, found that the lodge occupied by J. V. Davis, superintendent of the cemetery, was on fire.

They went to the lodge for the purpose of assisting the said Davis in the emergency. They met Mr. Davis, and he told them that all of the property on the lower floor or first floor of the lodge was the property of the United States Government, and he desired them to save it before attempting to save that which belonged to himself. They complied with his wishes and succeeded in carrying from the burning lodge to a place of safety all or nearly all of the property of the Government; that after they had put the Government property in a place of safety this affiant endeavored to go upstairs to the second story to assist in saving the personal property of the said J. V. Davis, but was prevented from doing so by the flames; that he then came out of the lodge, climbed on the portico, went through a window of the second story, and carried out a trunk belonging to the wife of J. V. Davis; thereupon he made a second attempt to get into the house from the roof of the portico, but by that time the fire had gotten to such a height that it was impossible for him to enter the premises for the purpose of saving any other of the property, and it was all consumed in the flames.

Affiant further states that it is his belief that all of the personal property of the said J. V. Davis could have been saved by himself, his companion policeman, and Mr. Davis if they had not consumed the time necessary to save the property of the Government on the first floor.

Affiant further states that he made a like affidavit to this on a former occasion several years ago, but that the same has been lost or mislaid either in the War Department or between the War Department and the Committee on Claims of the House of Representatives.

Affiant further states that said Policeman Arnold also made a like affidavit several years ago, which also appears to have been lost, and that the said Policeman Arnold is now deceased, having been killed about three years ago.

And further affiant saith not.

Given under my hand and notarial seal this 19th day of April, 1890.

K. KEMPER, Notary Public.

The Secretary of War recommended favorable consideration of the application by Congress, as appears from the following letter:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington City, December 14, 1878.

The Secretary of War has the honor to transmit to the House of Representatives copy of a communication from Superintendent J. V. Davis, in charge of the national cemetery at Alexandria, Va., dated the 14th ultimo, requesting to be reimbursed for loss sustained by the burning of the lodge at said cemetery on the 9th of August, 1878; also schedule of the articles destroyed and their value.

It will be seen from the indorsement of Captain Rockwell, depot quartermaster, that "the superintendent lost his personal effects in his efforts to save the public property." The application of Superintendent Davis is therefore respectfully recommended to the favorable consideration of Congress.

Respectfully submitted.

GEO. W. McCRARY,
Secretary of War.

The SPEAKER OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

A schedule of United States property saved during the fire and a schedule of property belonging to J. V. Davis lost by fire is appended hereto as Appendix A and made a part of this report.

The committee, upon careful consideration of all the facts and circumstances, recommend that the bill be amended by striking out the words "nine hundred and fifty," in line 6, and inserting in lieu thereof the words "five hundred," and that so amended the bill do pass.

Mr. SPOONER. I do not care about a further reading of the report. I think the bill may as well go over.

Mr. SCOTT. I hope the Senator from Wisconsin will not ask to have it go over. The Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN], who is not present to-day, is very much interested in the bill. The committee went into it thoroughly. The bill has passed the House. It appropriates only $500, about half of the value of the property the man lost by the fire. It will take only a moment to pass the bill.

Mr. SPOONER. How thoroughly is the Senator from West Virginia acquainted with the facts?

Mr. SCOTT. The facts are set forth in the report and in the letter of the Secretary of War.

Mr. SPOONER. Upon what theory was the amount cut down from $950 to $500?

Mr. SCOTT. The bill calls for only $500.

Mr. SPOONER. I know; but why does it call for only $500?

Mr. SCOTT. The amount was cut down in the House. I can not answer the question.

Mr. SPOONER. The man swore—and no one knew about it but himself—that the items lost amounted to $950. This was a fire which occurred in August, 1878. Does the Senator know anything about the origin of the fire?

Mr. SCOTT. I only know the facts set forth in the affidavit.

Mr. SPOONER. There are no facts on that point set forth in the affidavit. I think the bill ought to go over until the Senator from Virginia is here. He is probably more familiar with the facts.

Mr. SCOTT. I hope the bill will keep its place on the Calendar.

Mr. SPOONER. Yes; let it go over without losing its place on the Calendar.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PLATT of Connecticut in the chair). The bill will be passed over without prejudice.

ADJUDICATION OF PENSION CLAIMS.

The bill (S. 1685) providing for the adjudication by the Court of Claims and the Supreme Court of pension claims involving difficult or important questions of law as a means of establishing judicial precedents for the guidance of the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of Pensions was next in order on the Calendar.

Mr. HALE. In the absence of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] let the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over without prejudice.

GRANT OF LANDS TO IDAHO.

The bill (S. 3800) to grant certain lands to the State of Idaho was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to cede, grant, relinquish, and convey to the State of Idaho lots 7 and 8 in section 21, the northwest quarter of the southwest quarter, and lots 9 and 10 in section 22, all in township 9 south, range 38 east, base meridian, in the State of Idaho.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the report be read in this case.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The report will be read.

The Secretary read the report submitted by Mr. HEITFELD on March 4, 1902, as follows:

The Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3800) to grant certain lands to the State of Idaho, having had the same under consideration, beg leave to report it back with the recommendation that it do pass.

The following correspondence with the Secretary of the Interior and Commissioner of Public Lands fully explains the purport of the measure:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, February, 11, 1902.

SIR: I herewith transmit a letter from the Commissioner of the General Land Office, dated the 8th instant, which incloses and recommends the enactment of a proposed bill ceding to the State of Idaho a small tract of land in sections 21 and 22, in township 9 south, range 38 east, Boise meridian, upon which are located hot springs, the waters of which are described as valuable for medicinal purposes, and as having been long used by the people of that section. These springs are in the ceded portion of the Fort Hall Indian Reservation, which is soon to be opened to disposition under certain of the public-land laws, and it is believed that the springs should not be permitted to pass into private ownership, but should be either retained and operated by the United States or ceded to the State of Idaho and operated by that State.

Following the action of Congress in the act of June 7, 1897 (30 Stat., 96), respecting the Big Horn Hot Springs, in Wyoming, the Commissioner suggests that these springs in Idaho be ceded to the State, and I concur in that suggestion.

Very respectfully,

E. A. HITCHCOCK,
Secretary.

The CHAIRMAN OF THE COMMITTEE ON PUBLIC LANDS, Senate.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, GENERAL LAND OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., February 8, 1902.

SIR: I herewith transmit a draft of a bill to grant certain lands to the State of Idaho. These lands—lots 7 and 8 in section 21, the northwest quarter of the southeast quarter and lots 9 and 10 in section 22, all in township 9 south, range 38 east, Boise meridian, in the ceded portion of the Fort Hall Indian Reservation—are mentioned in the report of Special Agent H. V. Ferguson as containing certain valuable hot springs, which, in his judgment, should be reserved.

These springs are of the same character as the springs situated upon lands granted to the State of Wyoming by the act of June 7, 1897 (30 Stat., 96), and are valuable for the medicinal properties of their waters; and it is believed that good administration demands that they should be surrendered to the State, and thus placed in its charge, in order that the people may enjoy the greatest benefits thereof, and to prevent the same from becoming monopolized by private individuals when the lands are opened to settlement. It is therefore respectfully suggested that you forward this bill to the Congress with recommendations that it become a law.

Very respectfully,

BINGER HERMANN,
Commissioner.

THE SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR.

Mr. SPOONER. I move to amend by adding at the end of the bill:

To be held by said State for public use, under such regulations as said State may prescribe.

Mr. COCKRELL. That is right.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PROMOTION OF COMMERCE.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 1348) to provide for ocean mail service between the United States and foreign ports, and the common defense; to promote commerce, and to encourage the deep-sea fisheries.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. VEST rose.

Mr. HALE. Does the Senator from Missouri rise to the unfinished business?

Mr. VEST. I rose to speak on this bill.

Mr. HALE. I did not know the Senator was going to speak on the bill. I was about to suggest that if no Senator desired to speak on the unfinished business we might go on with the Calendar; but the Senator from Missouri desires to occupy the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Missouri will proceed.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, before proceeding to a brief discussion of the pending bill, I desire to make a statement.

When the report of the majority of the Committee on Commerce was submitted to the Senate, I asked leave to make a minority report. That leave was granted. The report of the minority dissenting from the views of the majority has been ready for some time, having been prepared by the junior Senator from Georgia [Mr. CLAY], who is now unavoidably detained from the Senate.

The minority report was withheld on account of the sickness of a member of the committee who desired to submit some amendments to the report. The junior Senator from Georgia will be here to-morrow, and the report of the minority will be ready on Wednesday or Thursday.

In this connection it is not improper to state that the majority report contains a statement that the material upon which that report is based and the computations were furnished by the Commissioner of Navigation. The minority of the Committee on Commerce have had no such facilities and have been entirely dependent upon themselves in preparing the report, which, as I have said, will be submitted to the Senate on Wednesday or Thursday.

The bill now pending before the Senate contains what are termed four articles. The first applies to certain amendments to what is known as the postal-subsidy act of 1891. That act contained four classes of subsidized ships, the first class being of ships running 20 knots or more an hour, and with a tonnage of 8,000 tons; the next class embraced ships running 18 knots an hour; the next 16, and the fourth 14, the first three classes being of steel or iron and the last of steel, iron, or wood.

The subsidy was paid upon mileage, the first class receiving $4 per mile for the outward voyage, the second $2 a mile, the third $1 a mile, and the fourth two-thirds of a dollar per mile.

The junior Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE], who is chiefly responsible for this bill, has informed us that the postal subsidy act of 1891 proved to be utterly useless, and he ascribes its failure to the fact that the subsidy was not large enough, and, while he approves the plan upon which that bill was framed, he proposes now to increase the subsidy and remedy the defects of the former legislation.

The Senator from Maine tells us that but one line in addition to those already upon the ocean was furnished under the operations of the act of 1891, and that line was furnished through a special act of Congress, which permitted the International Navigation Company, sometimes called the American Company, to put two vessels, the City of New York and the City of Paris, under American registry on condition that they duplicated those vessels in the shipyards of the United States.

The result was the building of the St. Louis and the St. Paul and the paying, under the act of 1891, to the American Line $757,000 of pure subsidy, that subsidy being paid whether the ships of the line carried an ounce of mail matter or not.

It is stated by the Senator from Maine and the Commissioner of Navigation, who prepared the majority report, that if the bill now pending in the Senate becomes a law there will be $4,700,000 expended on postal subsidies instead of the amount now expended for that purpose. Of this amount it is calculated that two million four hundred and thirty-odd thousand dollars is to be expended upon ships on the Pacific Ocean and $2,645,300 upon ships on the Atlantic Ocean.

The Senator from Maine says that he proposes—and he will doubtless succeed—to secure a semiweekly line between New York and Southampton, which will increase the subsidy now given to the American or International Navigation Company from $750,000 to $1,413,000. In other words, of the $2,645,300 to be expended upon the Atlantic Ocean, $1,713,000 will go to this company, or 73 per cent of the entire appropriation for the Atlantic.

The Senator from Maine informs us that the effect of the amendment changing the classification from 4 under the act of 1891 to 7, and changing the nature of the subsidy from mileage to so much per ton upon the outward and inward voyages, will have the effect of increasing largely the subsidy to the larger and faster vessels and decreasing it to those which are purely freight vessels carrying abroad the agricultural products of the United States.

This, in my judgment, was one of the fatal defects in the Hanna-Frye bill, as it was termed, in the Fifty-sixth Congress. The subsidy under that bill was given largely to the fast liners of the American Line, which do not carry the products of the farmers of the United States, but are filled with the half manufactured articles which do not come directly from the farmers, but come from the trusts of the United States that are preying upon the consumers of this country.

The bill now before us openly and avowedly is intended to accomplish the same results. For instance, the Senator from Maine says that the St. Louis, with over 11,000 tons burthen, has its subsidy increased from fourteen thousand and some hundred dollars a trip, under the present law, to nineteen thousand and some hundred dollars under the present bill.

In the Fifty-sixth Congress, in answer to the objection which the opponents of that bill made, as I have stated it, and in answer to the same objection now, which is even more manifest in the pending measure, we have been told that the cargoes of the fast liners are much more valuable than the cargoes of the freight vessels; that the St. Louis, for instance, carries out in one trip cargo three or four times the value of that carried out upon freight vessels of 8,000 or 9,000 tons burthen.

Mr. President, this is a fallacy, and it does not answer the objection that I have stated. Suppose a vessel goes out from New York to Southampton loaded with diamonds, the cargo amounting in value to millions upon millions of dollars, would that exportation benefit the farmers and the consumers of the United States? It is not the value of the cargo; it is the nature of the cargo that applies now in the present controversy.

But, Mr. President, I opposed the act of 1891 because it gave subsidy for nothing, in contravention of all principles of right and justice, and almost of common honesty, which ought to prevail amongst nations and individuals. The act of 1891 and this now proposed takes money out of the Treasury of the United States for corporations and individuals who give nothing in return for it except that problematic and speculative value which may or may not come in the future.

Under the act of 1891 the Postmaster-General could contract for carrying the mails upon any route he selected. He advertised and gave the contract to what he considered the lowest and best offer; but he paid out the money when the bid was accepted, although the person receiving the contract did not carry out a single postal card in return for the tax money of the people of the United States put into his pocket.

The Senators from Ohio and Maine draw a roseate picture of what they expect in the future. Mr. President, the money of the people of the United States ought not to be paid out upon a theoretical proposition which may never realize one cent's profit to the people of this country.

The Senator from Maine read from the report the different routes upon which he expects new lines to be established. I remember distinctly that when we were debating the act of 1891 my friend, the Senator from Maine, predicted that in ten years the ocean would be covered with steamship lines under the operation of that same act, and, as he said the other day, trade would follow the mails, when, in fact, the mails must follow trade. Business men and capitalists do not write love letters to be sent upon ocean steamers; they write in regard to business; and until there is business there will be no letters. This, in my judgment, is the experience of the world, and the Senator from Maine will not remedy present conditions by simply increasing the dose while he applies the treatment.

Under the pending bill instead of paying mileage the tonnage subsidy is paid, and also one upon speed. Two and seven-tenths cents for each registered ton for every 100 nautical miles on the outward and inward voyages are to be paid to vessels of the first class running over 20 knots an hour and over 10,000 tons burthen; and this subsidy is decreased gradually through the whole seven classes until the last one is reached, where 14 knots is the speed of the vessel.

The Senator from Maine tells us that he expects by this process to give to the people of the United States an additional commerce and a merchant marine which will rival that of England. The second article in the pending bill applies exclusively to the general subsidy, which is 1 cent per gross registered ton per 100 nautical miles upon the outward and inward voyage on 16 voyages per year to every sail and steam vessel belonging to American citizens, built in this country, now engaged in the foreign trade and upon our registry.

This is pure, naked, unadulterated subsidy. There is no pretense that it is paid for anything except upon the speculative idea that it would induce the building or placing of new ships upon the ocean, and it is defended upon the ground that our merchant marine must compete with subsidized vessels belonging to every other maritime nation in the world. We are told that England, now doing 53 per cent of the carrying trade of the whole world, has brought this about by paying subsidies to her steamship lines and to her vessels upon every sea.

Mr. President, I deny emphatically and distinctly that England pays any such subsidies to any of her vessels. It is an abuse of the word "subsidy" to say that England or Germany does anything of the kind. Increased mail pay, based upon so much per pound or ounce of mail matter carried, is a very different thing from subsidy as provided for in the second article of this bill. England does not pay her vessels except for value received.

The Cunard and White Star lines, running between Liverpool and New York, are paid by the ounce, and there is not a single letter or newspaper carried except under specific contract between the English Government and the owners of those lines. There are two subsidized lines running from New York to Europe, and those belong to France and the United States. The International Navigation Company receives $750,000 pure subsidy, even if they do not carry a single letter, and the great French line Messageries Maritimes also receives a pure subsidy from France. Are we to follow the example of France or that of England, when one does 53 per cent of the carrying trade of the whole world and the other ranks even below the United States in her merchant marine?

There is no subsidy paid by Great Britain to her ships that dominate the carrying trade of the whole world. I make the statement, and I challenge a successful contradiction. I have done it before and it has never been answered. The carrying trade of the world, or the 53 per cent of it in the hands of England, is done by her iron tramps, which never have received one cent of subsidy from the English Government and never will. You find them on every ocean; you see them in every port; they compete with each other; they furnish the cheapest transportation this country has, and not one single penny out of the English treasury has ever been paid to any of them.

England pays large mail pay to fast steamers like those of the Cunard Line, the White Star Line, and the Peninsular and Oriental Company, running to the Orient from England; but this subsidy, if you call it such, this increased mail pay, is necessitated by the immense colonial system of the British Empire. Thirty-five million Englishmen have under their control 225,000,000 colonists, and it is of the utmost importance that the home country should be in weekly communication, if possible, with every portion of her vast colonial possessions. It is said that in one hundred years England has had but one day of absolute peace, disturbance and strife and bloodshed being always found in some portion of her vast domain.

England must have these fast steamers. But I deny that this increased mail pay is subsidy, and I deny that it is given by the English Government for the purpose of extending English commerce. It is given for political and military reasons, from which she can not escape.

Mr. President, in order to show that there is high authority for this statement, I call now to the stand a witness about whose credibility, I take it, there can be no question by Senators who are proposing and defending this bill.

The Commissioner of Navigation, Mr. Eugene Chamberlain, of New York, who prepared the majority report, who is the swift and willing witness for any subsidy that may be suggested by the shipyard owners and the steamship owners of the United States, has testified as to the point upon which I am now speaking.

Mr. Chamberlain was appointed in 1893 by President Cleveland as a Democrat. He signalized his advent to office by a violent attack upon the navigation laws, which forbid any American citizen buying a ship where he can buy it cheapest and placing it under the American flag, and by denouncing subsidies as unconstitutional, fraudulent, naked robbery. But he now appears as the special friend of the navigation laws and of the subsidy to any amount.

Mr. Chamberlain changed his opinions ostensibly when the Administration changed its politics in 1896, and he is now the political and parliamentary adjutant of the Senators from Maine and Ohio. He is indorsed by those distinguished Senators as an official of great ability, unquestioned integrity, and immense industry. Before he experienced this almost miraculous change of views he expressed his opinion as to the subsidies, so called, of the English Government, and I will ask the Secretary to read the extract from his report of 1894, which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GALLINGER in the chair). Without objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

The object of the British Government in paying steamship companies to carry foreign mail is to secure the quickest, surest, and cheapest mail communication for British merchants with all parts of the globe. To attain this end it does not hesitate to withdraw its payments to British steamship companies and transfer them to foreign railroads. The theory that the encouragement of British navigation is the purpose of British mail compensation will not stand before the fact that French and Italian railways are utilized as far as possible for the mail service, and that recent and undeveloped plans for a trans-Atlantic service to Canada are based on the possibility of partially substituting the Canadian Pacific Railway for the Suez Canal as an important link in the mail connection between Great Britain, China, Japan, and Australia. Any impression that the ocean-mail payments of Great Britain are so large as to become bounties will be modified by a reference to the payments of the United States and Great Britain, respectively, for trans-Atlantic mail service last year, as stated by the Postmasters-General of the United States and Great Britain in Appendix K.

Encouragement to navigation has only been incidental and secondary to political and commercial considerations, and, as indicated, where circumstances permit it is being withdrawn and arrangements with the railroads of France, Italy, Canada, and the United States are in part taking its place. The percentage of payments to steamship lines to the entire cost of transporting British mails is steadily decreasing.

But the sufficient facts to demonstrate that Great Britain does not subsidize shipping in the sense in which the word is used in the United States are that the profits of the mail lines do not average higher than those of merchant lines, that the stock quotations of one class of securities are not higher than the other, and, finally, that barely 3 per cent of the British mercantile marine receives public funds in any form.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, it is true that Great Britain pays what is called an admiralty subvention, and that is the sum of $300,000 a year to the owners of vessels who construct them so that they can become auxiliary to the naval power of the Empire in time of war. This is the only subsidy that can properly be called such that is paid by Great Britain to her ships or to the steamships employed in carrying the mail.

The second clause of the second article of this bill, in addition to the 1 cent per ton per 100 nautical miles on the outward and inward voyage of every steam and sail vessel, gives one-fourth of 1 cent in addition for the term of five years to every vessel built by Americans after the passage of this act and put under our registry. After the expiration of that five years the one-fourth of 1 cent would cease, and this vessel would then become the recipient of the 1-cent general subsidy per ton, instead of 1¼ cents under the second clause of the second article.

It is estimated by the Commissioner of Navigation in his report, and is stated by the Senator from Maine, that the amount of general subsidy paid, based upon the vessels now under American registry in the foreign trade, and making a reasonable calculation of those to be added under the second clause, deducting $200,000 mail pay that will be saved to the Government—for every subsidized ship receives no mail pay—will be $800,000 per year.

I submit that this is entirely a chimerical calculation. No man living, not even the able Senator from Maine nor his willing assistant the Commissioner of Navigation, can say with any accuracy what amount of subsidy will be paid under the general subsidy clauses of the second article of this bill. How many ships will be placed under American registry, what will be their speed and tonnage, how many miles they will travel in a year, how many voyages they will make, is something known only to the Supreme Being, who is possessed of omniscience and knows the future as well as the past or the present. I submit that any calculation of this sort is simply imaginative and can not for a single instant be based upon premises which would be satisfactory to any logical or intelligent mind.

The next article contained in this bill is that which gives a subsidy of $2 per ton to every fishing vessel engaged in the deep-sea fisheries for three months during any year, the subsidy to be paid for the entire twelve months, and $1 additional pay for each month to every American citizen employed upon such a vessel. This is done, as the report of the Commissioner says, to furnish seamen for the merchant marine and naval vessels of the United States, and also because the Halifax award, paying Canada $5,500,000 for the trespasses alleged to have been committed by American fishermen upon the waters of Canada in search of bait, entitled the fishermen of New England to this additional bounty.

What connection there can be between the Halifax award, which has passed into history and now finished, I can not conceive, and how the fisheries of New England can furnish sailors to the merchant marine and naval vessels of the United States I am utterly unable to understand.

With the change in ships, commencing with 1850, when England began the construction of iron vessels instead of wooden vessels for the foreign trade, the character of our sailors has also changed. We no longer see the sailor who fought the maritime battles of the war of 1812, who manned the Constitution when the flag of France went down into the yeasty waves of the deep. If the tourist goes to Europe, as thousands of our people do in each succeeding summer, upon any of the great steamship lines, either English, or American, or German, or French, he sees no sailors of the ancient régime.

A half dozen sailors are probably carried upon one of these great steamships to set the sails if there be damage to the steam machinery of the ship, but they are rarely seen upon a voyage to Europe or a voyage in return. The sailor of to-day is the fireman, the stoker, the engineer, and, upon our war vessels, the marines. No more does the old sailor of Gloucester from the top of the mast exclaim:

> O'er the glad waters of the dark blue sea,
> Our thoughts as boundless, and our souls as free,
> Far as the breeze can bear, the billows foam,
> Survey our empire, and behold our home!

The few sailors who are found upon our steamships are now in the hold of the ship; and, as I said, with the change of construction has come a change in the nature of our seamen.

Mr. President, I do not complain of the Senator from Maine for protecting the interests of his people and taking $175,000 a year out of the pockets of the taxpayers of the United States for the benefit of his constituents engaged in the deep-sea fisheries if the representatives of the balance of the people in both Houses of Congress concede to him this distinctive and especial privilege. I must say, however, in the kindliest feeling for the Senator from Maine, for whom I have great personal regard, that New England ought to be satisfied with the legislation already upon the statute books for her special benefit.

The farmers of the West who are salting down their beef, and sometimes only one, or a few hogs for winter use are taxed by the present tariff laws in the interest of the great salt trust before they can obtain a grain of salt with which to preserve their meat. But by the provisions of the existing tariff law and those we have had for many years the fishermen of New England have their salt free with which to cure the fish that are taken in the deep-sea fisheries.

The farmers of the great West, exposed to the icy breath of winter as it sweeps across the great plateau east of the Rocky Mountains, must pay a tax of 45 per cent on the hundred under the Dingley Act for every foot of lumber they buy from the great lumber trust in order to build a cabin to protect their wives and children from the snows of winter and the heat of summer. But the people of New England, thanks to the provision in the Webster-Ashburton treaty of 1842 and incorporated in the Dingley Act and preceding tariffs, have their lumber free. It is brought down the St. John River, carried into New England, and used by the New England fishermen in building their vessels and their homes.

It seems to me that is enough for the people of that enterprising and intellectual region without now making us pay an additional subsidy to the fishermen engaged in catching the fish, which are preserved by free salt.

Mr. HANNA. May I ask the Senator from Missouri a question?

Mr. VEST. Certainly.

Mr. HANNA. On the lumber question, I should like to ask the Senator from Missouri how many votes on the other side of the Chamber were in favor of the duty of $2 a thousand on lumber in the Dingley Act?

Mr. VEST. I hope not one. If there is one——

Mr. HANNA. I am speaking, if the Senator will allow me, of the time when the Dingley bill was passed. How many Democrats voted for the duty of $2 a thousand on lumber?

Mr. VEST. I have no recollection of the votes, if any, that were cast by Democrats for the lumber tax. I only know that, speaking for myself, I opposed it.

Mr. HANNA. A good many of them did vote for it.

Mr. VEST. I opposed it, as reference to the vote will show. But even if there were votes on the Democratic side, it only shows the enormous power of these trusts and combinations in the halls of Congress that are able to induce Senators and Representatives to abandon the established principles of their party in order to defend local interests, and that illustrates one truth to which I was about to allude.

It is said that the act giving the subsidy can be repealed by act of Congress, and that this is a limitation upon the extent and duration of the subsidy. Once put the subsidy upon the statute book and it will remain there, to be increased from year to year at the demand of the great corporations which are to be the principal beneficiaries under it.

In the former debate in the Fifty-sixth Congress the Senator from Ohio asked me if the Democratic party had not been in the ascendancy and could not have voted for free ships, and I replied to him that there never was a time when local interests—shipyards on the seaboard—were not powerful enough to swerve Democratic Senators from free ships and cause them to give their votes with the Republican party against the poor privilege of an American citizen to buy his ship where he could buy it cheapest and place it under the American flag.

Mr. TILLMAN. Will the Senator from Missouri allow me for a minute?

Mr. VEST. Certainly.

Mr. TILLMAN. As one of the Senators who voted for the tariff of $2 a thousand on lumber, I wish to say that at the time I denounced it as a steal, and proposed to get my share, because my State pays a great many taxes under that tariff measure to hundreds of industries everywhere else, and that was about the only thing that we got anything out of at all.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, in three important and essential particulars the pending bill differs from that of the Fifty-sixth Congress. The first difference is that in the bill proposed in the Fifty-sixth Congress the power to contract for subsidy to any vessel terminated at the end of ten years, and the amount to be paid was limited to $9,000,000 a year for twenty years. In this bill there is no limitation as to the time or the amount of the subsidy except that alleged to exist in the power of repeal on the part of a subsequent Congress. I submit that it is no limitation at all, because, as I have just said, if the subsidy is once given, like suffrage, it will never be recalled.

The Commissioner of Navigation, a credible witness, according to the Senators from Maine and Ohio, tells us a subsidy once given, like opium or alcohol, must be increased from time to time in order to be effective until death ends the tragedy. No nation ever built up its merchant marine by giving subsidies, and nations have attempted it without success.

Italy and France both tried the scheme of subsidy, but without avail. France expended $19,000,000 without putting her merchant marine back upon the ocean. Italy expended nearly $6,000,000, and abandoned the experiment; and it was only when those two nations gave up that feature which we have retained of all the nations in the world, the exclusion of all foreign-built ships from our registry, that they were enabled again to see their flag to any extent upon the oceans of the world.

The Commissioner of Navigation has stated in two reports that a subsidy amounted to nothing unless it was supplemented by free ships and the right to buy the ship where it could be bought at the lowest cost, in order to place it under the flag of our country. That this was the declaration of the Commissioner of Navigation, I will ask the Secretary to read from the report of the Commissioner of Navigation, which is certainly entitled, in the opinion of the Senators advocating this bill, to the fullest credit.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

The results of nine years' trial of a complete bounty system in France, involving an expenditure of $19,000,000, and of seven years' trial of a similar system in Italy, at an expense of $5,500,000, are stated in Appendix K. The meager results attained in both countries warrant the statement that the nation which enters upon that system of building up a merchant marine with the expectation of success must do so with a free hand and no care for the cost. It must be prepared to spend not $1,000,000 or $2,000,000 a year, but several times that sum annually for a long period. That by a sufficiently large and continuous expenditure of public money shipyards can be established successfully in any country does not admit of question. It is not deemed necessary to consider here the propriety of that course as a matter of public policy or its desirability from the economic point of view. Those nations which have made the attempt have not succeeded, confessedly for the reason that their expenditures were not large enough.

In France and Italy the advocates of the system maintain that if the construction bounties had not been paid for some years past shipbuilding would have shrunk to insignificant proportions. The practical difficulty in the way of the establishment of a bounty system is that if the distribution of public funds is made general an expense is entailed greater than a people taxed for the purpose will long endure, while if the favor is extended to but few, it operates as a discrimination against other domestic interests in navigation, and in effect builds up part of the interest at the expense of the whole interest. The experience of France and Italy demonstrates that the shipowners of both countries find it more to their profit to buy ships in the cheapest market than to avail themselves of government bounties conditioned upon the purchase of higher-priced domestic shipping. Had this alternative not been open to them, the French and Italian flags would doubtless have disappeared from the seas, and French and Italian shipowners would have resorted to the use of the British flag, as is the custom, under our registry law, of the leading shipowners in trans-Atlantic trade.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, if I could be astonished at anything in the way of assertion and opinion in regard to ship subsidies I would certainly be profoundly astonished at the different statements made by the Commissioner of Navigation in regard to the amount of subsidies necessary to restore our merchant marine.

In 1894–95 the Commissioner declared that no amount of subsidy would have any effect. In 1899 he declared that $4,000,000 a year might, to a large extent, put our merchant marine back upon the ocean, but that $5,000,000 or $6,000,000 scientifically administered, as he expressed it, would make us the rival of Great Britain in the carrying trade on the ocean. And now the Commissioner of Navigation says that $800,000 in general subsidy for each year will insure to us a competitive situation with reference to Great Britain and Germany.

The next difference between the bill of the Fifty-sixth Congress and that now pending is in the entire elimination in the pending measure of all foreign ships under any condition to receive any amount of subsidy under this act. In the Hanna-Frye bill, as it was termed, foreign ships, bought or built abroad by American citizens, could be placed upon the registry in the United States and receive one-half subsidy, provided the owners would give bond that in ten years they would duplicate those ships in the shipbuilding yards of the United States.

To show how anxious are the advocates of this bill, moved by the plaintive appeal of the great corporations that own ships and own shipyards, it is only necessary to note the surrender made by the Senators from Maine and Ohio to the opposition of a very few of their colleagues on the other side of the Chamber, made in the Fifty-sixth Congress, to the admission of foreign ships to our registry on any terms.

The senior Senator from Maine, when this clause in the Hanna-Frye bill was reached, sternly announced that he would oppose any bill that contained any provision for any foreign ships on any terms being placed on the registry of the United States, and this remonstrance was so peremptory that in framing the new bill there is no provision for admitting foreign ships upon any terms, and they are excluded entirely from admission to registry in this country.

This is remarkable, Mr. President, in view of the fact that the Senator from Maine has stated to us that the only success that attended the postal subsidy act of 1891 arose from the fact that the American Line was permitted by special act of Congress to place two of its ships upon our registry by duplicating their construction in the shipyards of this country.

The next difference which I shall mention between the Hanna-Frye bill and the pending measure is a most remarkable one. In order to meet the objection made in the Fifty-sixth Congress to the bill then proposed that it did not provide for cheaper transportation to the agricultural products of the country, a clause was inserted that every subsidized vessel clearing from an American port to a foreign port should carry out 50 per cent of its commercial capacity in cargo. Mark the words—not in agricultural products, but in cargo of some kind.

That provision has been entirely eliminated from the present bill. In answer to a question by the senior Senator from Kansas [Mr. HARRIS] a week ago, when my friend the Senator from Maine held the floor in explanation of this bill, he stated that a majority of the Commerce Committee came to the conclusion that such a provision would be of doubtful constitutionality and would violate 34 commercial treaties with this country.

Mr. FRYE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Maine?

Mr. VEST. Certainly.

Mr. FRYE. Twenty-one.

Mr. VEST. Twenty-one. It is not quite so wide as a church door nor as deep as a well, but twenty-one will do.

I should like to know from the Senator from Maine his authority for stating that this provision in the Hanna-Frye bill, and eliminated from the pending bill, is of doubtful constitutionality when it provides that one-half the commercial capacity of a ship shall be in cargo.

It was suggested in the Fifty-sixth Congress that a provision should be inserted in the bill then pending in the interest of agriculture that a certain proportion of the cargo capacity in a subsidized ship should be devoted to carrying agricultural products, and the Senator from Maine produced a letter from the legal adviser of the majority of the Commerce Committee, ex-Senator Edmunds, in which he gave his opinion that a provision requiring one-half the commercial capacity of a subsidized ship to be given to agricultural products or any other products of a special interest would be clearly unconstitutional, but he said that such a clause applied to any sort of cargo and to the products of all the interests in the country would be clearly within the provisions of the Federal Constitution.

That letter gave me so much pleasure—for I indorsed the whole argument and was glad to welcome Senator Edmunds into the ranks of those who still have some respect for the Constitution of the United States—that I make no apology for asking the Secretary to read it in order that it may be put into the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

The Constitution of the United States as it now stands is designed to prevent Congress as well as the States from enacting any class legislation whatever. Equal rights and equal opportunities to engage in any business or enterprise, and to receive equal or corresponding benefits from public expenditures, are among the fundamental principles embodied in that instrument. Congress may raise and support armies and navies and do whatever is fairly incidental to those ends, and thus may provide for inducing the building of ships which may be taken and used in the national defense. It may possibly grant bounties on the exportation of all the products of the country as a means of improving commercial relations with other countries. But if it discriminates by granting bounties on the exportation of particular classes of products it does at once establish a governmental difference in favor of those particular classes and against all other products capable of and designed for similar exportation. It is clear to me, therefore, that a bounty on the exportation of woolen goods or wheat, for instance, while the exportation of cotton goods or corn was left unaided, would be in violation of the Constitution. I think, then, that a law granting a bounty on agricultural products alone, as has been suggested, could not be upheld, just as a bounty on the exportation of manufactured products alone could not be upheld.

If a bounty on exports is to be granted, it must apply to all exports. If such a course of legislation can be maintained at all, it must be on the ground that it is impartial and universal. The instance in our history of the fisheries bounty stood on the principle and policy of providing seamen for national defense. And the sugar bounty of a few years ago, if it could have been held valid at all, which is extremely doubtful, must have been upheld on the ground of the special and peculiar circumstances attending that subject.

A general bounty on exports, if valid, must necessarily be equal, value for value, and if large enough to reach and benefit the original producers and manufacturers would be startling in amount. Every class of industry can be benefited in only two ways:

First. By increasing sales at home and abroad.

Second. By cheapening the cost of carriage from the purchaser to the consumer; and this can in the main only be done by enlarging the means of transportation and thus reducing prices of carriage through competition. It is true that the original cost of production can be reduced by a reduction of the wages of labor, which labor constitutes in almost all, if not in all, cases a very large proportion of the value of the thing produced; but such a means of promoting national happiness or welfare would have the opposite effect.

I have condensed these considerations in respect of bounty, and in respect of the opposition to the bill by those favoring the bounty, to the smallest compass, knowing that the committee will understand the points I have suggested and the extensive range of considerations that enter into the subject.

Very truly, yours,

GEO. F. EDMUNDS.

Hon. WILLIAM P. FRYE,
Chairman Committee on Commerce.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, if the argument of the distinguished ex-Senator from Vermont be applied to the provisions of the pending bill, how can it be constitutional to discriminate in favor of the shipping of the United States by giving it a special bounty or subsidy without extending the same subsidy to all the different interests of this great country?

If shipping is to be subsidized, why not agriculture? Why not mining? How is it that we have the constitutional power to open the door of the Treasury to the wealthy corporations owning the shipyards of the United States and close the same door to the farmer struggling from year to year for the necessaries of life, or the miner shut out from the sunlight, living beneath the surface of the earth in order to gain a precarious livelihood?

But the Senator from Maine tells us that to put that clause in the Hanna-Frye bill, in the bill now before the Senate, would be in contravention of 21 commercial treaties of the United States. Will the Senator from Maine tell us what treaty provision would be violated by such an enactment? Is it possible that we have not a right in subsidizing our own ships to say that they shall carry a cargo to one-half of their commercial capacity? Is it possible that we have been so suicidal as to take from ourselves this power by any treaty stipulation whatever?

The Senator from Maine is a member of the Committee on Foreign Relations. I will yield the floor with pleasure for his explanation of this extraordinary assertion, as it appears to me. Where are the provisions? What is the proof of this assertion by the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Commerce and President pro tempore of the Senate? Have we bound our hands so that we can not impose conditions upon our own vessels? If so, by what provision, in what treaty, at what time was this extraordinary conclusion reached?

Mr. President, we are told that the great and crucial point in this controversy is that of wages; that we must subsidize our ships in order to equalize the difference in wages, both in construction and running the ship, between those of foreign countries and the United States.

The Senator from Maine, with his usual courage and frankness, tells us that subsidy means protection, and he could have said that protection means subsidy. The manufacturers of the United States, the mill owners of the United States are receiving to-day upon their manufactured goods more than the 35 per cent levied by the tariff upon the consumers of this country, and this is done under the pretext that we must equalize the wages of the mill operatives of the United States with those of the pauper operatives of Europe.

And now we see these same subsidized manufacturers, with a monopoly of the home market, and an exclusive tariff tax which practically excludes all competition from abroad, sending the same goods upon which the consumers of this country are taxed 35 per cent to the countries where pauper labor is found and selling in those markets the goods 30 to 40 per cent cheaper than they are sold to the people of their own country.

But some Senator, as I happened to hear, says that this builds up our industries. Mr. President, without the enormous increase of gold, without foreign wars, without failure in crops, the industries of the United States would not have prospered, if prospered they have, by reason of the enormous tariff tax alone.

It is singular that we now hear the same argument in behalf of the bill before the Senate. We are told that the difference in wages is the chief argument for the enactment of this bill into law; that the laborers in the shipyards, that the sailors upon our vessels must by a subsidy be put upon a par with the lower wages that are paid by the maritime nations of Europe in their shipyards and upon their ships.

I have not the slightest hesitation in saying that I believe the time was when the shipyards of the United States were unable to compete with those of Europe, but I believe that time has passed. If it has not completely passed, it has come so near to the time that the extraordinary remedy of subsidy should not be resorted to, when the shipyards of the United States are more prosperous than they have been in the last fifty years.

The Senators from Ohio and Maine say the wages upon ships are governed by the law of the flag and not by the law of the port. They would have us believe the monstrous proposition that when an American steamship like the St. Louis goes into the port of Southampton and the port rate of wages is $30 a month for able-bodied seamen, a sailor who sees the American flag at the head of the mast refuses to ship upon that vessel unless he receives $45 or $50 a month because it is an American ship.

The proposition is so monstrous that, in my judgment, with all respect, it scarcely deserves to be called an argument. The law of the port governs and not the law of the flag. It may be true that racial prejudice would cause the Norwegian to prefer a Norwegian ship and Norwegian sailors with whom to mess, but as a rule, almost without exception, when a ship needs a crew in a foreign port or in a port of the United States the landlords of the sailors' boarding houses furnish the crew, and the sailor who ships receives the wages that then obtain in that port.

I again call to the stand as a competent witness the Commissioner of Navigation, and I ask the Secretary to read the two following extracts as a complete answer to the argument made by the distinguished Senators who defend the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

[Report of Commissioner of Navigation Eugene T. Chamberlain for year 1895, pages 14-15.]

The practice of those engaged in navigation for the purposes of legitimate profit is most valuable evidence to those engaged in the improvement of laws. The managers of our three American transoceanic steamship lines presumably are as loyal and patriotic Americans as those who make or enforce the laws which govern them. Self-interest has forced them to buy steamships abroad, because steamships can be obtained there on more advantageous terms than at home. There can be no other reason. It is sometimes argued that the cost of operation, and especially the factor of the difference in wages of seamen, prevents navigation under the American flag. Some attention in detail was paid to that claim in the report of the Bureau last year; but without covering ground already traversed it will be sufficient to direct notice to the fact that if cost of operation, instead of first cost of construction, were the difficulty with which American shipowners have to contend we should meet with frequent cases of American-built steamships transferred to foreign flags and operated under those flags by American owners. Such is not infrequently the case with British vessels transferred to the Norwegian flag. But there are no such instances of American-built vessels transferred to foreign flags, while there are many instances of foreign-built vessels bought abroad by Americans.

As matters stand, the rates of wages in American ports do not materially affect the cost of operating our trans-Atlantic and trans-Pacific steamships. They ship nearly their entire crews at their ports of entry, paying virtually the same rates of wages for the same service as are paid on British vessels. The rates of wages for able seamen and other ratings at New York, Philadelphia, and San Francisco for trans-Atlantic and trans-Pacific steamships apply to less than 300 men, outside of about 350 who have recently been shipped as firemen, trimmers, oilers, and coal passers for the New York and Paris.

Mr. HARRIS. Will the Senator from Missouri permit me to ask him a question for information?

Mr. VEST. Certainly.

Mr. HARRIS. I should like to know whether there has ever been any evidence before the Committee on Commerce, in view of the claim that sailors receive better wages and better treatment, showing that there has been a disposition on the part of seamen to prefer shipment on American ships and under the American flag as against any other ships?

Mr. VEST. I have never heard of any such evidence. I have heard statements to the effect that Norwegians declined to serve when there were only two or three of them with an American crew, and that they were intimidated into quitting American ships; but I have never heard that there was any discrimination by the sailors of the world at large for the American flag in preference to any other. Sailors are like politicians or capitalists, influenced by self-interest and not by sentiment.

Mr. HARRIS. I was referring to their self-interest in this case.

Mr. VEST. When they can obtain wages largely the wages of the port they do not look to the flag, but, like all the balance of our race and like the Commissioner of Navigation, they look to their own interest and to that exclusively.

Now, Mr. President, I come to the controverted question as to whether we can build ships in the United States as cheaply as they can be built upon the Clyde. There is no question that for years after the war, and before the war from 1855, we were unable to build iron and steel ships as cheaply as they could be built in England.

When England found that the wooden ships of the United States, the fast clippers of the ocean, were taking away from her the supremacy in the carrying trade, she began the construction of iron vessels; and with coal, iron, and limestone in propinquity to the ocean, and with skilled labor, she soon began her old dominion over the seas and oceans of the world. So, from 1855—six years before the civil war—the American merchant marine began to decline in the proportion of our commerce carried in American-built ships.

We reached our largest proportion of carrying our commerce in our own ships in 1855, when $75\frac{5}{10}$ per cent and two hundred and forty-nine million three hundred and odd thousand dollars of our commerce was carried in American bottoms. To-day we carry $8\frac{1}{2}$ per cent of our commerce in American-built ships, but the amount of our commerce embraced in the $8\frac{3}{4}$ per cent equals or exceeds that in 1855, when we carried $75\frac{5}{10}$ per cent of our commerce in our own vessels.

I admit, as I said before, that for many years under our stupid policy which prevented our citizens from buying their ships where they could buy them cheapest our merchant marine declined. England in 1849, seeing that American wooden ships were taking from the English merchant marine the supremacy of the ocean, repealed her navigation laws; but we have adhered to that semi-barbaric system which even China has abandoned, a system which, like the Old Man of the Sea, has ridden down almost to death the merchant marine of the United States.

I know that a letter has been read here from Mr. Baker, the president of the Atlantic Transport Company, of Baltimore, one of the wealthiest shipping corporations in the world, in which he declares that on first-class ocean-going steamers he was compelled to pay $400,000 more for each vessel in the United States shipyards than they pay upon the Clyde.

But it is a remarkable fact that Mr. Baker, according to the report of the Commissioner of Navigation, is now building and will have finished by July of this year six large ocean-going steel screw steamers in the shipyards of the United States, which he proposes to put under the registry of this Government. The International Company, at the head of which is Mr. Griscom, is also building two steel screw steamers for the foreign trade in American shipyards, each with a tonnage of 12,500 tons.

We are told by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. HANNA] and the Commissioner of Navigation that this is done because they anticipate the passage of this bill by Congress. Mr. President, I do not believe that astute business men would build at a difference in cost each of $400,000, or $200,000, or $100,000, and risk the vicissitudes of American politics, when they know that if the Democratic party comes into power—and stranger things have happened—there will be no ship subsidy or any other kind of a subsidy paid by this Government.

More than that, they would not invest this enormous amount of money with the chance that the Supreme Court of the United States would decide the subsidy to be unconstitutional. The Supreme Court has never decided that Congress had the power to grant such a subsidy as that provided for in the second article of this bill. They evaded the question in the Pacific Railroad cases; they evaded it in the sugar-bounty cases.

When two judges of the supreme court of the District of Columbia decided in a suit against Carlisle, Secretary of the Treasury, that a subsidy to sugar, or a bounty, as it was called, was in violation of the Constitution, Judge Peckham, delivering the opinion of the Supreme Court of the United States on appeal, said that it was unnecessary for the Supreme Court to decide that question.

Whether vessels can now be built as cheaply in United States shipyards as abroad is an open question. Mr. Charles H. Cramp told us in 1892, in an article published in the North American Review, that first-class ships, naval ships, and ships for the merchant marine, running 20 knots an hour and of 10,000 tons burden, could be built as cheaply in this country as upon the Clyde; and he said the time would come within ten years when Englishmen in Liverpool and London would be asking each other: "How can these Yankees build ships of the same dimensions and better quality more cheaply than it can be done in England?"

Mr. Cramp, the Senator from Maine tells us, is now in favor of subsidy, as is Mr. Baker, and every other shipowner except Mr. James J. Hill. I would as soon leave this question to the determination of these interested gentlemen who seek to pile up more millions at the expense of the taxpayers of this country, as to submit the fate of a wounded deer to the wolves gathered in anticipation of the coming feast.

There is evidence as good and as irrefutable as that of Mr. Baker upon the other side of this question, but it is not produced here by the proponents of this bill. James J. Hill, who is now building at New London, Conn., two of the largest freight steamers ever built in the United States, with a tonnage each of 21,000 tons, to be sailed in connection with the Great Northern Railroad, in an address to the Chicago Board of Trade a year ago, declared that he had examined the question and found that he could build more cheaply in the United States than abroad, and he said, speaking of the subsidy bill, "I have no quarrel with the International Navigation Company; they have been very courteous to me personally, but they do not need any subsidy."

I have in my hand now, and I will ask the Secretary to read it, a statement by Mr. Hyde, a constituent of the junior Senator from Maine, who is president of the great Bath Iron Works, in which he states that we can build a steamer just as cheaply in this country as upon the Clyde. I send the extract to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

Within a year a proposed consolidation consisting of seven of the largest shipbuilding plants in the United States, including the Newport News plant, the Union Iron Works, of San Francisco, and the Bath Iron Works, laid before the public a statement of their business and invited subscriptions of $40,000,000 to the stock of the consolidated company. In this publication, inviting subscriptions, Mr. Hyde, the president of the Bath Iron Works, said:

"The output of the American shipyards for the present fiscal year will be larger than any year for nearly half a century.

"Forty-five years ago the American shipyards were building nearly as many merchant vessels and of a tonnage almost as great as that of Great Britain. During the four years preceding the civil war the product of the American shipyards represented a greater carrying capacity in tons than that of the rival shipyards of England. There is no good reason why the American shipyards should not now construct a greater tonnage than Great Britain.

"American shipyards are already constructing ships for European and Asiatic nations, and there is no good reason why a large amount of the shipbuilding trade from the Clyde and the Thames should not be brought to the yards of this consolidated company, which will possess such enormous advantages over any other company in the world."

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, if I have not already mentioned the fact, I will now allude to it, that at the conclusion of the speech made by the junior Senator from Maine a week ago he was asked by the senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON] if the shipyards of the United States—who are the recipients to a large extent of this bounty—were not now in a more prosperous condition than for many years past.

The Senator from Maine promptly replied, "It is not true." One year or more ago our lamented President, William McKinley, stated in an address to the Chicago Board of Trade that the shipbuilding interests of the United States were in a more prosperous condition than since 1854, that their shipyards were full of orders, and that we were fast approaching the time when we could rival Great Britain in building ships for the foreign trade.

The Commissioner of Navigation, in his annual report for the current year, says that in June last he addressed communications to the 46 shipyards in the United States, asking them for a detailed account of their business and the amount of the contracts for building vessels of all kinds then on hand; that, at the same time he addressed a communication to the officers of the Treasury Department asking what Government vessels were being constructed and at what price and what appropriations had been made by Congress. He gives in his report a summary of the replies, and I beg the attention of the Senate to this statement coming from a witness entirely inimical to the side of the question I now defend.

Mr. Chamberlain reports that there are $68,000,000 invested in 46 shipyards in this country; that there are now under contract vessels of the United States amounting in cost to $78,000,000; that there are vessels of the merchant marine now under construction in these shipyards amounting in cost to $36,000,000, and that there are 45,000 laborers or operatives employed in those shipyards. This is the poor, struggling, emaciated industry which we are now to subsidize out of the tax money of the people of this country!

But, Mr. President, in addition to that I have here before me a statement taken from the Chicago Tribune, one of the leading Republican papers of the United States, which, in October last, sent reporters to every shipyard in this country, and published the answers given by the owners and superintendents of those yards. I shall not ask that it be read, because my strength and the patience of the Senate are exhausted, but I ask that this statement of every shipyard in this country shall be published as a portion of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The statement referred to will be printed in the RECORD, in the absence of objection.

The statement is as follows:

[From the Chicago Daily Tribune of October 14, 1901.]

NO SUBSIDY TO SHIPBUILDERS, BUT ALL BUSY—EVERY WORKING YARD IN THE COUNTRY CROWDED WITH BIG ORDERS AND MORE IN SIGHT—PROSPER WITHOUT AID—CAPITAL BEING INVESTED IN VESSELS TO MEET THE LEGITIMATE DEMANDS OF BUSINESS—OCEAN LINERS ON STOCKS—SOME OF THE STEAMERS IN COURSE OF CONSTRUCTION TO BE AMONG THE LARGEST IN THE WORLD—MANY PLANTS TO BE ENLARGED.

The activity in the shipbuilding industry in the United States is one of the notable features of the revival of prosperity which began during the late President McKinley's first administration. The industry has received its great impetus without a subsidy, and the demand for ships is not fostered by the hope that Congress may, in the near future, vote a subsidy bill.

American capital is being invested in ships. The yards at Newport News, Bath, Camden, Quincy, Wilmington, Baltimore, and other industrial centers are crowded with vessels in course of construction. These vessels range in size from the river tug to great ocean freight liners, from a pleasure yacht to a seven-masted steel schooner, from a torpedo boat to the heaviest battle ship.

Practically every shipyard in the country has been enlarged in the last two years, and nearly every one of them is preparing to still further increase its facilities.

The Tribune prints this morning dispatches from the leading shipbuilding centers in the country. The reports show a wonderful development of the industry.

FIGURES RUN INTO MILLIONS.

At Newport News $14,000,000 is invested and 7,000 men are employed. At one time this year vessels with an aggregate tonnage of 145,100 were under construction, to cost $28,350,000.

At Bath, Me., vessels to cost more than $7,850,000. Twenty-six merchant ships have already been launched this year, and the yards are full.

Baltimore has just finished 2 Atlantic passenger liners to ply between London and New York, each being 650 feet long.

Camden, N. J., is building 4 freight steamers, each of 6,000 tons, and within a month keels will be laid for two steamers, each 620 feet long, each of 18,000 tons burden. Another yard at Camden has 4 ocean steamers, 6,000 tons each, on the ways, and contracts for 4 more.

At New London the great freight steamers for the Pacific and Oriental trade are being built for James J. Hill, of the Great Northern.

Wilmington, Del., has already completed 8 steamers this year and 9 more are on the ways.

From every point comes the assurance that the industry will be greater next year than this. With the exception of two points, where local strikes have interfered, all yards are working full time.

FULL CAPACITY OF NEWPORT NEWS.

NEWPORT NEWS, VA., October 13.

Not since the founding of the shipyard at this place ten years ago has shipbuilding attained the proportions of its present scale. The yard now is and has been for some time worked to its capacity. It is now the largest shipbuilding plant in the United States. General Superintendent Walter A. Post is authority for the statement that in the immediate future vast sums will be expended in the expansion of the plant in order to meet the demands of the shipbuilding boom.

At present $14,000,000 are invested in the plant and 7,000 men are employed. Here is the largest dry dock, just constructed, in the United States.

Last year 4 ships, all of large size, aggregating 37,600 tons displacement and costing $9,600,000, were completed. The greatest of tonnage on hand at any one time last year was 131,200, costing $25,300,000.

So far this year 3 vessels, aggregating 26,100 tons, costing $5,650,000, have been completed, and 2 others, aggregating 14,600 tons, costing $1,650,000, will be completed before the end of the year. At one time this year 145,100 tons, costing $28,350,000 were under construction. Now 10 ships, men-of-war and merchantmen, aggregating 119,000 tons, costing $25,180,000, are building.

The battle ship Illinois is one of those completed this year.

ACTIVITY IN DELAWARE RIVER.

PHILADELPHIA, PA., October 13.

There are at present building in the six principal shipyards along the Delaware River 71 vessels. The total registered tonnage is 211,500. The value of this work approximately is $29,700,000. Twelve thousand men are directly employed, and over $175,000 is paid each week in wages.

Naturally most of this work is in the William Cramp Shipbuilding and Engine Company yard, where 16 vessels are being completed. These represent a total tonnage of 122,000, valued, all told, at $19,000,000.

All of the plants are working practically at full capacity, though with the approach of cold weather and with the shortening of the days a portion of the force will soon be laid off. The outlook is extremely encouraging, every yard having inquiries and invitations to bid on merchant ships of practically all types, principally for the coastwise trade.

WORK IN NEW YORK YARDS.

NEW YORK, October 13.

The income obtained from the shipbuilding plants in Greater New York is derived almost entirely from repair work. There is no company here that makes any attempt to construct the larger type of seagoing vessel. Within the limits of Greater New York there are 31 shipyards, employing about 6,500 men. The new work turned out at these yards last year was 22 sailing vessels, with a net tonnage of 4,894; 42 steam vessels, with a net tonnage of 4,977; 8 canal boats, with a net tonnage of 1,057, and 103 barges, with a net tonnage of 27,811.

This does not include about 1,500 smaller craft, such as launches, steam and sailing yachts, and other pleasure boats.

At the present time there are about 50 vessels on the ways in the various yards in the city. These are mostly small steamers, tugs, ferryboats, and sailing craft. No ocean-going vessel was constructed during the last year, nor are any now under contract.

RUNNING TO FULL CAPACITY.

At the present time all of the plants are running to their full capacity in the matter of repair work. A number of the shipbuilding companies contemplate enlarging their plants for the construction of smaller vessels, but none of the concerns will enter the field for building the larger class of ocean-going ships. The reason assigned for this is the high price of land. The shipbuilders say that it is more economical to purchase sites elsewhere. The shipbuilding companies have a large number of orders on hand for small vessels, both steam and sail. Among the former are several river and harbor steamers.

During the present year there have been 165 vessels constructed here, and with the 50 on the ways and future contracts, this will be the largest output of any previous twelve months.

GREAT REVIVAL AT BATH.

BATH, ME., October 13.

Shipbuilding operations in this city during the last nine months show that the great revival which began during the latter part of the late President McKinley's administration will show a substantial increase for the present year. The total gross tonnage of vessels, merchant and naval, building here in January, 1900, was 44,228, with a total valuation of $4,555,000. The number of merchant vessels was 29, with a gross tonnage of 37,500 and a valuation of $1,795,000, and 6 war vessels at the Bath Iron Works, with a gross tonnage of 6,700 and contract price of $2,760,000.

There have been launched so far in 1901 26 merchant vessels, with an aggregate tonnage of 30,065, and the cruiser Cleveland, whose displacement is 3,500 tons and contract price $1,050,000. At the present time about 2,000 men are employed in the shipyards of Bath, and if the wooden yards were running at their full capacity probably about 500 more could be employed.

BALTIMORE YARDS ARE BUSY.

BALTIMORE, MD., October 13.

During 1900 44 vessels, representing 15,329 tons and valued at $1,645,570, were built in Baltimore. The output this year will be greatly in excess of that of last year.

Since January the Maryland Steel Company has floated the American steamer Lyra, of 5,000 tons capacity; the 300-foot steel dredging steamers Thomas and Mills, and a steel car float, 340 feet long, which accommodates 28 railroad cars. The company has just completed a 500 by 100 foot floating steel dock which can lift a battle ship. It is finishing two 650-foot Atlantic passenger liners for the Atlantic Transport Line between New York and London and three 30-knot torpedo-boat destroyers.

The Columbian Iron Works completed the revenue-service steamer Seminole and is finishing the 24-knot torpedo boat Tingey.

The tonnage launched and on the ways amounts to 80,000 tons carrying capacity and a valuation of $7,700,000.

Baltimore has eight other shipyards in addition to those mentioned equipped to build Chesapeake Bay vessels, but their work this year has been confined to repairs.

BIG SHIPS BUILT AT CAMDEN.

CAMDEN, N. J., October 13.

There are two shipbuilding plants of importance in this city, the New York Shipbuilding Company and the John H. Dialogue Company. The plant of the former company comprises 136 acres. The first boat was completed early this year, and is designed for the export oil trade. Four freight steamers are now on the ways. Their average tonnage is 6,000 tons. Within a month the keels will be laid for two steamers designed for freight purposes, each 620 feet long and each of 18,000 tons burden—probably the largest ever built on this side of the Atlantic Ocean. Eight steamships will be completed this year.

The John H. Dialogue Company constructed last year five vessels of a gross tonnage of about 8,000 tons. At present there are four steamers, of a gross tonnage of about 6,000 tons, on the ways. Four more similar vessels will probably be constructed this year. Five hundred men are now working on full time.

BOOM AT NEW LONDON.

NEW LONDON, CONN., October 13.

New London is experiencing a shipbuilding boom. Within the last year two plants have sprung into existence that represent an outlay of several hundred thousand dollars. The largest of these is the Eastern Shipbuilding Company, situated on the east bank of the Thames River, at Groton, where two monster freight steamers are being built for James J. Hill, of the Great Northern Railroad. These steamers will be the largest freighters ever constructed, and will ply between the Pacific coast and oriental ports.

MANY ORDERS AT WILMINGTON.

WILMINGTON, DEL., October 13.

The shipbuilding industry in this section is bright, as there are now nine vessels on the ways and all the yards have orders on hand. During the present season eight vessels, with a tonnage of 7,916 tons, valued at $2,500,000, were built. Shipbuilding was retarded on account of the machinists' strike.

In 1900 there were 34 vessels, with a tonnage of 25,189 tons, built at a value of $8,000,000.

In the Delaware shipyards there are employed at present 4,000, and all yards are working full time.

NEW YARDS AT QUINCY.

QUINCY, MASS., October 13.

Within sixteen months there has been established at Quincy, Mass., an up-to-date shipyard. The Fore River Ship and Engine Company is engaged in construction of the protected cruiser Des Moines, the torpedo-boat destroyers Lawrence and MacDonough, the first-class seagoing battle ships New Jersey and Rhode Island, and the first seven-masted schooner ever built.

While this has been going on the yard has been built up to meet all of its requirements, and soon, when construction of the two battle ships is well under way, about 3,000 men will be employed.

JUST BEGINNING AT NEW ORLEANS.

NEW ORLEANS, LA., October 13.

Shipbuilding in New Orleans has long been confined to inland water craft and river boats. The construction of ocean-going vessels is limited. The latter part of this month the Government's big floating dry dock will be installed at Algiers, just across the river from New Orleans, and in a few months the work of constructing some important shipyards there will be started. A number of small seagoing vessels intended to ply along the coast and in the rivers of Mexico, have been built here for the Mexican Government.

STRIKE AFFECTS SAN FRANCISCO.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL., October 13.

The strike has seriously interfered with all big shipyards. The Union Iron Works, which ordinarily employs 4,500 men, is only working 900. The Risdon shipyards are crowded with work. The Risdon plant is to be enlarged as soon as possible, but this has been delayed by the strike. The iron works are employing about 2,000 men, and Fulton shipbuilding plant about the same number. The capital invested in shipbuilding plants is about $4,000,000.

GREAT ACTIVITY AT SEATTLE.

SEATTLE, WASH., October 13.

During the last year 216 vessels and sea craft of various kind were built in this customs district. Of this number 41 were steamers, tugs, etc., 15 were fishing and sealing schooners, and 150 were great barges and lighters for Alaska work, including two Government vessels, on which the yards are still at work in this district. The total tonnage reached 85,500, including the two uncompleted Government vessels. The amount of money represented in vessels built during the last year reached $5,800,000.

In this district about 3,000 men find employment in shipbuilding and ship-repair yards, and the amount of money invested in these yards can be conservatively estimated at at least $5,000,000. Plans are under way for enlargement.

The latest contract for shipbuilding here is that placed by the Globe Transportation Company for 10 four-masted schooners, each to have 1,200 tons capacity.

YARDS ENLARGED AT RICHMOND.

RICHMOND, VA., October 13.

The W. R. Trigg Company's shipbuilding plant was established about four years ago, and it has already built seven torpedo boats and torpedo boat destroyers for the Government. It has on hand contracts that will keep the force busy for a year. Among these contracts is that for the first-class cruiser Galveston. There are about 1,000 men employed and something over $2,000,000 invested. The plant is working to its fullest capacity. The capital stock has recently been increased, and the plant will be enlarged to meet all the demands of the shipbuilding boom.

Mr. VEST. There has never been in the history of the United States a more thoroughly protected or prosperous interest than that of the American shipyards of to-day. The Senator from Maine complained that in these halcyon days of protection the shipping interest of the United States had been neglected.

Nearly twenty-five years ago, when I came to the Senate, the first thing I heard from the shipyard owners was the statement that if they had raw material for ships—pig iron—free they could successfully compete with the world in building ships. We gave them free raw material; we gave them free ship supplies. Now, here they are demanding subsidy, holding up their hands and begging like mendicants for the tax money of the people to sustain their particular interest. If this subsidy be given to them, it is but the beginning of the end.

The Senator from Maine says they are not protected. Why, Mr. President, they have a monopoly equal to that of the Standard Oil Company. They have the exclusive privilege of building ships for the coastwise trade, the largest in the world, and of repairing those ships. They are to-day being enriched by this monopoly, and they oppose the repeal of the navigation laws because it would deprive them of the enormous emoluments which they are now receiving.

The Senator from Maine in every speech he makes—and I was astonished that he omitted it in his speech of last Monday—points to the enormous carrying trade of the United States as a vindication of the exclusive policy of the navigation laws. Why, Mr. President, there is no similarity between the foreign trade of this country and its coastwise trade. The coastwise trade belongs to us, and we can do with it what we please; it is domestic. The foreign trade belongs to the world.

We can exclude foreign ships from our coastwise trade, and no foreign nation can complain; and, of course, with the monopoly of building these ships and repairing them, our shipowners have a harvest each year which they could obtain nowhere else. You do not dare to exclude foreign ships from your ports. If you did there would be commercial war against the United States from every maritime people in the world, and your dream of foreign markets would be swept away. An American ship, when it goes outside the coastwise limit of 3 miles, must take care of itself; it must meet the tariff laws of the whole world, the port dues of the whole world, and the competition of the whole world, and no act of Congress can do away with those conditions.

Mr. President, I have before me an article signed by Edward Kemble, ex-president of the chamber of commerce of the city of Boston, which I ask may be inserted as a portion of my remarks. It comes from a Republican, who states that he is as loyal to the Republican party and its doctrines as is the Senator from Maine. He also states, with his experience as a business man, that nothing can be more unjust, nothing more unnecessary, than the subsidy provisions of this proposed bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The paper referred to will be inserted in the RECORD in the absence of objection.

The paper is as follows:

[From Boston Evening Transcript of February 19, 1902.]

THE SUBSIDY PROPOSAL—COGENT REASONING OF A BOSTON MERCHANT—HE SCOUTS THE SUGGESTION OF SENATOR FRYE'S BILL THAT A SUBSIDY IS NEEDED—THE AMERICAN AND THE FRENCH ARE THE ONLY TRANSATLANTIC LINES WHICH ARE SUBSIDIZED—ARGUMENTS EXAMINED IN DETAIL.

[By Edward Kemble, former president of the Boston Chamber of Commerce.]

The new subsidy bill which has been submitted to the Senate by Senator FRYE seems to have for its chief object the making of a gift of public money to several existing lines of prosperous American steamships. At all events, this will be the result should it become law. He calls it a bill "to provide for mail service, * * * for the common defense, to promote commerce, and to encourage the deep-sea fisheries." Our "commerce" is larger than ever before—both our foreign trade, which is commerce, and our interstate trade, which is commerce—only, unfortunately, in the case of our foreign trade most of the merchandise representing it is transported under foreign flags.

Our deep-sea fisheries are large and strong growing and prosperous. They are not asking aid. We do not find fishermen begging for alms at the doors of Congress. Furthermore, what this bill proposes to donate to the fishermen is not a very princely sum. The amount is $2 per ton to the vessels, and $1 per month to the men when actually employed. Fishing vessels average less than about 100 tons each. So this donation may average $100 per annum to each vessel, and from $6 to a possible $12 to each man; while to steamship lines already established and making money will go hundreds of thousands, if not millions, of dollars every year.

The first of these lines above referred to is the so-called "American Line," plying between New York and Southampton and owned by the International Navigation Company. This line is already receiving from the United States a subsidy of $750,000 per year. This bill will increase this amount and increase the number of years during which a subsidy shall be paid to it. This line is prosperous; or, if it is not, it ought to be so. No one can travel by it or read its freight and passenger lists who knows anything about shipping business and come to any other conclusion.

The act under which it now receives a subsidy became law in 1891 or 1892. It authorized contracts for ten years. It is said the contract with this line was dated ahead—that is, from 1895. If so, when it expires, in 1905, the line will have received about $10,000,000 under it. Two of the ships will then be about 20 years old, and all four of them will have passed the "up-to-date" period. Under the existing contract they are required to make 20 knots; they actually make about 18 knots. So it would seem as if a good sale of them had already been made. Under this new bill, however, they will receive a larger amount per year and a contract for fifteen years more, under which they will receive at least $15,000,000 more.

Next the Ward Line, which owns many ships, some plying between New York and Cuban ports, and others between New York and Mexican ports. It was years ago called the Alexandre Line, and has always made money. It is constantly bringing out new ships. Three, or certainly two, were added to the lines during the year just closed, while two or more were added during the year 1900. There are from 15 to 20 of these ships, all built in this country. Under this bill they will be allowed to draw subsidy on 16 trips each per year, which will enable the company to receive from the Government a very large amount of money.

Next is the old Pacific Mail Company. In this connection we are reminded that this company once received from this Government, years ago, a subsidy of $500,000 per year. Not satisfied with this, it proceeded to lobby in Washington for more. Its methods excited so much scandal an investigation was ordered and it was found that the greater part of this munificent sum had been expended in lobbying for a greater sum, and so it was cut off from any subsidy at all.

There are other lines of American-built ships, already prosperous, which will receive a benefit under this bill. Mr. FRYE explains that the bill is intended to increase and build up the merchant marine. It is safe to say that it will not add one ship to either of these lines. Their business is established, and they will build new ships as fast as their business requires them and no faster—subsidy or no subsidy. And as for new lines for foreign trade, if the ships must be built here, it will be years before any can be established, if at all. No new line was brought into existence by the subsidy act of 1891.

All lines which have benefited by that act were already established when it became law. Furthermore, our shipyards are full of business. It has been stated on good authority that it would be difficult to contract for a first-class ocean liner to be delivered within three years, although smaller vessels may be turned out. Not one new fisherman will it bring into being. How, then, will this bill, if enacted into law, "increase" or "build up" our merchant marine?

No doubt it will be necessary to maintain steamship communication with the newly acquired Philippine Islands, and since there is not likely to be business to support it, the Government will be obliged to do so. It would be well if this bill were confined to that purpose.

During our civil war, when our Government could not protect our great fleet engaged in foreign trade, our citizens were compelled to sell; the subjects of Great Britain and other countries, availing themselves of their privilege to buy ships anywhere, bought ours, and took the business with them. We have never been allowed to buy them back, or any others to replace them; or, if we did buy any, we have been obliged to sail them under a foreign flag, with two exceptions. We have not been able, for some reason, to build here to any extent for the European trade, and so our flag covers very little of that trade.

We have, however, built for the Cuban and the Mexican trade, and somewhat for the foreign trade of the Pacific. But it is said it costs more to build here than it does abroad. Some of our people own foreign-built ships, but they are forced to sail them under a foreign flag. No citizen may wear the flag of the United States over his ship unless she was built in the United States. When one ventures to suggest the propriety and probable great advantage of permitting our people to buy ships abroad for foreign trade—but only for foreign trade—Mr. FRYE and his friends cry out, "Free ships," which apparently, like the words "free trade," give them cold shivers.

But no one advocates "free ships." No one advocates admitting foreign-built ships to our coasting trade. All vessels for trade between our own ports must be built in our own shipyards, and no one proposes to disturb that feature of our law. In this our shipbuilders have a proper protection. Our yards have grown enormously and flourished under it. The business is large. We can protect this trade because it is domestic trade; and it is not of very much importance whether these ships cost more here than they would abroad, or whether wages are higher on them or not, because there can be no foreign competition in this trade. But we can not "protect" our trade with foreign ports.

When our ships go into foreign trade, they must compete with the ships of the world, and they must not cost more than foreign-built ships, for they can not compete with them successfully if they do. Our shipbuilders will not or can not build so cheaply as foreign shipbuilders. We can not afford to pay them more. We are not allowed to build abroad and register at home, so we do not have the ships or the trade, at least, so far as our flag indicates, and most of the world's carrying trade is done under foreign flags in consequence. Mr. FRYE and the shipbuilders say to the country, "Build ships here or you shall not have them, at least not under our flag." A "dog in the manger" policy. I claim to be as good a Republican as Mr. FRYE is, and I call this policy "protection" with a vengeance.

Mr. FRYE and his friends say the remedy for this state of things lies in the payment of subsidies by the Government. No doubt ships can be run anywhere if the Government will pay the bills. He has recently delivered himself of an elaborate speech in Boston and in Philadelphia and perhaps other places in favor of this policy. American shipping is always an interesting and certainly it is an important subject, but the question of the payment of public moneys to support merchant ships and their owners is becoming somewhat tiresome as a public question.

In the speech above referred to Mr. FRYE contends that while ships are built abroad 15 to 20 per cent cheaper than they are built here, and while wages are lower and the cost of maintenance per man per day is lower on those ships than on ours, we must pay subsidies to our ships going into foreign trade in order to equalize these differences. At the same time he says all foreign nations pay subsidies. Without taking time to refute his assertions on these points I may ask if subsidies there do not improve wages or fare, how is it likely that they will sustain our standards on our ships when they go into the same trade?

There is a market price for wages and for food in all trades and in all markets, and when our ships go into foreign trade they are not likely to establish new tariffs throughout the world. His bill provides that only "one-fourth to one-half" of the crews of these subsidized ships shall be American citizens; and who is to ascertain whether any of them are Americans? Would he have us believe that our American Line, when it takes men at Southampton, as it does sometimes, and they come on board at the market price, perhaps $30 per month, says to them: "This is an American ship, and we shall pay you $50 per month?" As for maintenance, many American ships are victualled at from 30 to 35 cents per man per day.

But this is a matter which depends a great deal on the trade the ship is engaged in. So far as foreign business is concerned, the world makes the market for everything. We can not create and sustain an artificial market in foreign ports for sailors or anything else. Mr. FRYE says, and it is often said: "Other nations pay subsidies, and the United States must do as other nations do." But it can not with truth be said that other nations do this. It is the exception wherever and whenever it has been done. There is not a nation on the face of the earth which pays subsidies as Mr. FRYE proposes to pay them, France alone, possibly, excepted.

What all other nations do, however, and I don't know of one exception, is to permit their people to buy ships anywhere and put them under the home flag. This is a privilege Americans have demanded (but for the purposes of foreign trade only) for forty years. If Mr. FRYE really desires to increase our merchant marine in foreign trade, why don't he advocate trying this policy, under which other nations have so signally prospered? He says: "We have for years admitted free of duty everything entering into the construction and repair of ships for foreign trade." Nevertheless, we have not built the ships. Now, why not admit the ships already built?

Take the Atlantic Ocean service for illustration. There are plowing that ocean between Europe and the United States possibly 50 lines of steamships, and most of them never received one penny of government money, even for mail carriage. Only two of them receive a subsidy. One is our own "American Line," the other the "French Line." No others in this service receive $1 of subsidy. The Cunard Line none; the White Star Line none; the two great German express lines none. These four lines last named are the fast lines of the world. They own some 25 or more of the fleetest ships in the world, besides many others. Not one of these fast ships receives any subsidy from any government.

These lines, however, are paid for the amount of mail they carry, both by the United States and Great Britain, at so much per pound. Bids are received by the Government of Great Britain for mail carriage, and the market price is paid for it. In the case of several large ships—not lines, but particular ships, which are named in the contract—a certain moderate sum is paid yearly for the privilege of taking them in time of war; but no subsidies whatever are paid except in the two cases above mentioned. Money paid for mail carriage at the market rate and a subsidy are very different things. The United States pays yearly to the Cunard and White Star lines and to the German lines and others the market price for the amount of United States mail they may carry at so much per pound; but these amounts are not subsidies. It pays to its own American Line $750,000 per year, whether it carries any mail or not. This is a subsidy.

England once paid a subsidy in order to maintain communication with her provinces of Canada, and one to secure steam connection with her Indian possessions, just as we may be obliged to pay one for connection with the Philippine Islands, but this was a very different thing from what Mr. FRYE proposes. These subsidy gentlemen are never tired of telling us all other nations pay subsidies, which is not true; but they never allude to the fact that all other nations permit their subjects to buy or build ships anywhere and put them under the home flag, which is true.

There are some twelve lines of steamships plying between Boston and European ports. Not one of them receives any subsidy.

He says, "Our foreign commerce last year, reduced to tons, was about 40,000,000 tons; the freight rate at least $5 per ton, amounting to $200,000,000," and that "we paid $500,000 per day in gold to foreign ships for the carriage of our goods." Mr. Senator HANNA, who followed Mr. FRYE a few days later, at Boston, in a speech on the same subject, said the same thing. Furthermore, he added, "No country on the face of the globe can stand that strain but the United States." But "we," the United States, don't pay these freight moneys. The buyer pays the freight money. Our wheat, corn, cotton, provisions, manufactures are for sale every day of the year at a market price. The buyer does what he likes with them. If he ships them abroad, or wherever he ships them, he pays for the transportation. In no sense can it with truth be said that "we" in this country pay for this transportation.

Of course, on imports, we pay the freight money; but our imports are less than one-third the amount of our exports, in tons.

The argument that there are $200,000,000 paid yearly for ocean foreign carriage which the Americans may take in by paying subsidies to ships is very misleading. Supposing this country should put afloat in the foreign trade 100 ships this year. How much of this sum would they secure? Do the honorable Senators think all the foreign lines would retire and leave the field to us? They would continue to run, and rates would decline, and there would be perhaps $100,000,000 for all lines instead of $200,000,000.

Furthermore, the buyer of merchandise has the right to say how it shall be shipped. If an American ship and an English ship are lying side by side and rates are the same, will the English buyer have his merchandise shipped by an American ship? By no means.

Still further, Americans own many foreign-built ships, which, under our peculiar laws, they are obliged to sail under a foreign flag. There are probably from 80 to 100 of them. A portion of these belong to three great lines now in the Atlantic service between the United States and Europe and which are owned or controlled in this country.

These lines earn a large portion of the great sum named by the Senators, and this, of course, already falls into American pockets. So, if one considers that this great sum is overstated in the beginning, that it will be very largely reduced in amount if American subsidized ships in any considerable number should be put into competition for it, that a large portion of it will inevitably be retained by the foreign ships now running, and that a portion of it is already secured by Americans through ships they now own, which are sailing under a foreign flag, what becomes of the argument of these Senators which is based on their statement that "we pay this great sum to foreigners, and that it may be gathered back to us by means of subsidized ships?"

How much easier and how much more business-like it will be if we not only permit these foreign ships now owned by Americans to be registered under our flag, but invite our countrymen to buy other lines to be put under our flag also (but for foreign trade only), and so get not only ships, but the business with them. This will build up our merchant marine and send our flag flying over the seas—a matter which some public men talk much about.

But Mr. FRYE says this will not protect our shipyards. That if foreign-built ships are admitted to American registry, even for foreign trade only, "our shipyards will not increase; they will build only for coastwise, lake, and river trade," and cries out: "What shall we do for the dying industry?" But these shipyards have not built ships to any great extent for foreign trade for forty years or more. They say they have not been able to do so, at least not for the European trade, and yet behold their enormous growth within that period! There is no more successful or flourishing line of business in this country than this "dying industry," as he calls it.

Our shipbuilding plants are growing in size, have doubled in number within a short time, are equal to any in the world, are turning out some of the finest ships in the world, and are full of business. What more does he want? The American Shipbuilding Company stands third on the world's list of shipbuilding plants in amount of tonnage turned out last year. But they can not or will not turn out ships at prices which will enable us to go into competition for the European trade. We have, in late years, exported iron and steel plates to be built into ships abroad. It would seem, therefore, that we can buy a ship made of American iron in England cheaper than we can buy one made of American iron in the United States.

One of Mr. Frye's arguments for a new subsidy bill is this: He says that "the four ships of the American Line, although receiving a subsidy of $750,000 per year, have never realized any profit, but have been supported by the company's ships (called the Red Star Line) which sail under the Belgian flag. This is a most extraordinary statement, and by it he condems the whole subsidy system by words out of his own mouth. If this were true, it would be a conclusive argument against any subsidies whatever.

Here is a line of first-class ships running between New York and Southampton, and receiving from the United States a subsidy of $750,000 per year, which, according to Mr. FRYE, not only makes no money, but is maintained by another line running between New York and Antwerp, which receives no subsidy at all. Both lines have weekly sailings, and are owned by the International Navigation Company. The only logical inference is that subsidies are an obstacle to success, and that steamship lines are more prosperous without them.

Furthermore, he declares that these "American Line steamers each carried, according to sworn statements, last year $4,200,000 worth of farm products, while the same tonnage slow steamer could not have carried more than $2,250,000 worth of wheat." Since the steamers of the Antwerp or Red Star Line are not only slower but smaller than those of the American Line, I presume they are covered by this statement. So it transpires that, although slower and smaller and without any subsidy and, I may add, with passenger lists insignificant when compared with those of the American line, they not only supported themselves but helped support the others.

Mr. FRYE says subsidies will put more ships afloat and so make rates lower. How low would he have them? It has been possible lately to contract for grain to Europe at 1 penny per bushel, which is less than $1 per ton. Hundreds of thousands of tons have been carried during the past five years at 2d. and 3d. per bushel, or less than about $1.50 to $2.50 per ton; and provisions and cotton on the same low basis. Cotton to-day can be contracted to Europe at about 12 cents per 100 pounds.

There is a feeling of pride in the desire that our flag may wave in foreign seas, but what satisfaction or what honor is there when it flies from the masthead of a subsidized ship? Sentiment is robbed of all nobility when it is supported by the force of money.

Commerce is in the line of individual enterprise, not of governmental favor, and while it should be fostered and encouraged and protected by Government in all legitimate ways, it is of no credit or importance when supported by Government money. Our flag at the masthead of a man-of-war signifies power, on a subsidized merchant ship the vulgarity of riches.

Mr. VEST. I have here also, which I desire inserted without being read, a portion of the minority report of the Committee on Commerce of the House of Representatives, made during the Fifty-sixth Congress upon the bill then advocated by the Senators from Maine and Ohio; and in it there is conclusively shown the fact that the difference in the cost of running a foreign and a domestic ship is grossly exaggerated, and that the money donated in these subsidy bills is unjustly given to the fast liners of the ocean, which do not carry the products of the agricultural people of the United States.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The extract referred to will be inserted in the RECORD in the absence of objection.

The extract from the report of the minority of the House Committee on Commerce is as follows:

COST OF BUILDING SHIPS.

The increased cost in this country of building ships and of maintaining and operating ships is put forward very prominently among the reasons for assistance to the shipping industry. Upon the question of the comparative cost of American with foreign built ships there can be no better witness than Mr. Charles H. Cramp. In the North American Review of January, 1892, he said as to the fast ships:

"The proper form in which to put the question is, Can you build a ship to do the work of the City of New York or the Majestic or the Columbia in all respects for the same cost? To that question I would reply: 'Yes; or within as small a margin as would be likely to prevail in a similar case between any two British shipyards.' * * *

"It is the fact that the 'first cost' of ships is not only not a prime factor, but it is not even a serious factor, in any competition that may occur between this country and Great Britain for a share of the traffic of the ocean. * * *

"American shipyards have built or are building about 40 naval vessels of numerous rates and types, all of the very highest and effective class in the world; and this development has been crowded into a space of about seven years. * * *

"The disparity of cost of naval ships between our yards and those of Great Britain, ton for ton, gun for gun, and performance for performance, has dwindled in seven years until, in the case of the three latest battle ships, the margin between our classes and those of similar construction abroad may be expressed by a very small figure. * * *

"If the current policy of naval reconstruction be pursued for another decade (1902), coupled with a vigorous and consistent execution of the measures recently enacted in behalf of the merchant marine, the question which forms the subject of this paper will be asked no more; unless, indeed, its point should be reversed and Englishmen be asking one another, Can we build ships as economically as they can in the United States?"

We reach the conclusion, therefore, through the testimony of the greatest shipbuilder in the United States, that the cost of the first-class ship, which receives nearly all the subsidy under this bill, is no greater than that of a similar ship built in England.

In the same article Mr. Cramp says as to the tramp ship, which receives very little subsidy under this bill:

"Put the plans and specifications of the average English tramp in the hands of an American shipbuilder, and he could not duplicate her. He would build a better vessel, of superior workmanship and neater finish in every respect; for the reason, to put it broadly, that the mechanics who make up an American shipyard organization are trained to a grade of performance which they could not reduce to the standard of tramp construction.

"Under these circumstances this branch of the subject may be dismissed summarily, with the statement that an English freight ship of the usual type could not be duplicated in this country at any cost. Whether our superior standard in vessels of this class is an advantage or a disadvantage in competition, I will not attempt to decide."

If we consider this expert testimony, we are forced to the conclusion, by taking it in connection with the bill under consideration, that we are asked to give most subsidy to the ships that need it least and least subsidy to the ships that need it most.

A recent article by George Wenlersse, in the Grande Revue, quoted in Consular Reports, March 3, 1900, says:

"Gradually the Americans are pushing their way into the British colonies. The last railroad built in India has American rails. American manufacturers export their iron and motors, their machinery, and galvanic wires to Cape Colony. Egypt, too, has Philadelphia bridge builders on the scene. Three hundred railroad coaches have found their way from Jersey City into the land of the Pharohs, and electical tramways are forged in the foundries of Pittsburg to connect Cairo with the Pyramids. Even Europe is not safe against the invasion of American goods. Russia, France, Germany, and Italy must pay tribute. England herself buys American locomotives, steel rails, paper ware, railroad coaches, and even coal. Sheffield, the home of the steel industry, has been dethroned by Pittsburg. It would be frivolity to remain indifferent to the expansion of this leviathan people."

Further on in the same article Mr. Wenlersse makes this striking statement:

"To-day ships may be built at Bath, San Francisco, Philadelphia, Wilmington, Chester, and Newport News as cheaply as anywhere in the world."

We remember very well that a few years ago the shipbuilding industry claimed that if it had free raw materials it could compete with the world. The raw materials were placed upon the free list, and the same men who said they would be satisfied with this special favor are now clamoring for the subsidy provided in this bill. The locomotive industry, very similar in its nature, has been given no such protection, and yet the locomotive industry has increased its export trade throughout the world.

In the additional plea for assistance, which they are now making, the shipbuilding people are begging greater advantage than has ever been given to any industry, seeing that they have for years already had free trade in their favor upon every item of which ships are made and upon every item needed to run ships, and, in addition to this, that they get most of their crews by hiring foreign labor in foreign ports. They have free trade upon what they buy and high protection upon what they sell, and yet they clamor for millions of subsidy. The unfairness of their demand is emphasized by the history of legislation in which they have been concerned.

In 1869 a committee was appointed by the House to investigate the cause of the decline of shipping interests. Sessions were held and testimony taken in all parts of the country. A report was made in favor of subsidy. The demand for it, however, did not come from the shipbuilders. Note the statements made by John Roach and Charles H. Cramp. Upon the causes of the decline in American shipbuilding, Mr. Roach said:

"America has lost her commerce, and what has she obtained in exchange for it? Simply the right of a few men to charge $9 per ton, in gold, on the importation of pig iron. Pig iron is the basis of all other metals connected with the making and repairing of ships. There has been a revolution in shipbuilding, and iron is the material from which they are now built. The high cost of iron produced by the tariff upon it is one of the principal difficulties our commerce has to contend with. I did not come here to ask a bounty. I came here to tell you that, while all other articles of American produce are protected to a great extent, there is no protection for American ships. If Congress will take off all the duties from American iron, reducing it to the price of foreign iron, then we are prepared to compete with foreign shipbuilders. The labor question is misstated. We are prepared to meet that difficulty and to ask no further legislation on the subject."

In reply to a question by Mr. Morrill as to the average rate of duty on materials entering into the construction of ships, Mr. Cramp said:

"About 40 per cent; and if our shipbuilders could be relieved from that, they could compete successfully with foreign builders. The difference in the cost of labor would be overcome by the superiority of American mechanics." * * *

The Commissioner of Navigation says, in 1899:

"Everything needed in building and equipping in the United States a ship for the foreign trade or for trade between the Atlantic and Pacific coasts of the United States is now admitted free of duty and has been so admitted for some years. Congress began the policy of free materials for shipbuilding for the foreign trade in 1872 and has steadily pursued and expanded that policy. * * *

"Finally, by sections 7 and 8 of the tariff act of August 15, 1894, which are repeated in sections 12 and 13 of the tariff act of July 24, 1897, the free list was extended to include all materials. * * *

"A like policy has been followed in regard to ships (supplies). (Section 16 of the act of June 26, 1884, Stat. I, vol. 23.)

"All articles of foreign production needed and actually withdrawn from bonded warehouses for supplies, not including equipment, of vessels of the United States engaged in the foreign trade, including the trade between the Atlantic and Pacific ports of the United States, may be so withdrawn free of duty, under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe.

"By section 16 of the tariff act of July 24, 1897, articles of domestic production when used as supplies for vessels of the United States, as described above, were exempted from internal-revenue taxes. The provision regarding coal is equally liberal."

In view of all these facts it is passing strange that the beneficiaries of these special favors should continue to clamor for additional assistance.

COST OF OPERATING SHIPS.

The next point to consider is the difference in cost of operating a ship under the American flag and under a foreign flag. In comparing the cost of running a ship under the American flag with the cost of running a similar ship under the British flag, both in a regular service between the same or adjacent ports, we have to take into consideration the following items: 1, coal; 2, oil; 3, trimming of coal; 4, stevedoring; 5, food; 6 insurance; 7, port expenses; 8, wages of officers and crew.

(1 and 2) Coal and oil will be bought by both ships wherever it is best and cheapest. There is thus no difference as to these two items whether the ship is American or British.

(3 and 4) The cost of trimming coal and stevedoring cargo ought to show no difference. As a matter of fact, the American Line pays for stevedoring 45 cents per hour for sundry work in New York, while several of the British lines pay the regular wages fixed by the longshoremen's union, 60 cents per hour for the same work.

(5) People who have traveled by the White Star Line (British), Cunard Line (British), and American Line (American), and who are thus able to compare the feeding on the steamers of these different lines, will admit that the quality and quantity of food supplied are very similar on all of these steamers.

(6) On the insurance item there ought not to exist any difference either as far as the rate of insurance is concerned. Of course the amount insured may be higher in the case of an American-built ship if the recent statements of our shipping people are to be believed in preference to their statements of a few years ago. However, the higher amount to be paid on this item by the American shipowner is not on account of having his ship run under the American flag, but having it built in the United States. Consequently the amount insured on the many foreign-built ships which, in accordance with this subsidy bill, are to be transferred to American registry will not be affected by the mere fact of changing the flag.

(7) The port expenses ought to be less for American vessels, which do not pay tonnage taxes in the United States, whereas foreign ships clearing from British ports have to pay this considerable item. Port expenses in Great Britain are the same for British and non-British steamers.

(8) Wages of officers.—Here we note the following differences:

Fast American liner (St. Paul):		Fast Liverpool passenger liner (Campania):
Chief officer	$120.00	Chief mate	$100.00
Second officer	70.00	First officer	75.00
Third officer	60.00	Second officer	62.50
Fourth officer	40.00	Extra second officer	55.00
Chief engineer	150.00	Third officer	50.00
First assistant engineer	100.00	Fourth officer	45.00
Junior first assistant engineer	85.00	Chief engineer	150.00
Extra first assistant engineer	85.00	Senior second engineer	100.00
Senior second engineer	70.00	Second engineer	82.50
Junior second engineer	65.00	Senior third engineer	75.00
Senior third engineer	60.00	Third engineer	72.50
Junior third engineer	55.00	Senior fourth engineer	67.50
Fourth engineer	50.00	Fifth engineer	60.00
Total	1,010.00	Total	995.00

This shows an immaterial difference of $15 in favor of the British ship.

The crew wages are as follows:

St. Paul:		Campania:
Carpenter	$50.00	Carpenter	$40.00
Carpenter's mate	35.00	Joiner	37.50
Boatswain	37.50	Boatswain	37.50
Boatswain's mate	27.50	Boatswain's mate	27.50
Master at arms	25.00	Boatswain's mate	27.50
Sailors	25.00	Master at arms	22.50
		Sailors	23.75
Total	200.00	Total	216.25

In these wages we do not find any material difference either.

Stewards received the same amount on both the American and British ships—$16.25.

In the engine room, however, the wages paid on the American ships are higher than those paid on the British ships:

St. Paul.		Campania.
Greasers	$40.00	Greasers	$30.00
Firemen	40.00	Firemen	25.00
Trimmers	30.00	Trimmers	22.50

If we take into consideration that the ships we are comparing at present have on board, say, 20 greasers, 50 firemen, and 50 trimmers, we arrive at the first difference of some consequence in favor of the British ship:

20 by $10	$200
50 by $15	750
50 by $7.50	375
Total	1,325

This would make a difference of $15,900 a year, to equalize which the steamship St. Paul would receive a yearly subsidy of $408,593.54.

In the hearings before the House Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries we find a statement made by Mr. Clyde on behalf of Mr. Griscom. It reads as follows:

"The sum that the American Line ships will get under the bill will be no more than sufficient to compensate their American owners for the addition in cost of furnishing ocean transportation with that type of ship as compared with furnishing it under the British or Norwegian or other foreign flag in the same type of ship."

We have seen that the only material differences between the cost of running an ocean liner under the American flag and the British flag are to be found in the wages paid the hands in the engine room. This difference does not amount to one-twentieth of the subsidy which the American ship would receive.

On the question of wages we quote the following from the Commissioner of Navigation (annual report, 1894):

"So far as able seamen are concerned, the actual competition to-day in trans-Atlantic and trans-Pacific trade is between American ships and British steamers, and a comparison of the wages paid on these two different classes of vessels will show only slight disparities in wages. Any comparison of monthly wages, therefore, unless accompanied by a full statement of all the conditions under which wages are paid and of the results attained, will be misleading. * * *

"The statement is doubtless within bounds that the pay of officers and wages of crews in the case of no foreign steamship company exceed 30 per cent of the total operating expenses. They constitute substantially the same percentage of the cost of operating steamships, increased only by the higher pay of watch officers."

The editor of the Coast Seaman's Journal, the organ of the organized seamen of America, says:

"Wages are equal on the vessels of all nationalities when shipping crews in any given port. In other words, it is the 'rule of the port,' and not 'the flag of the ship,' that governs wages. The usual statistics on this subject are grossly misleading."

"A change of flag to the American," says Shipping Commissioner King, of Philadelphia, "involves no increased expense either in crew's or officer's wages."

Says Mr. Chamberlain, the present Commissioner of Navigation:

"The difference between American and foreign rates of wages can be, and in fact is, overcome by shipping crews in foreign ports for the round trip."

Section 4519 of the Revised Statutes says:

"Every master of a vessel in the foreign trade may engage any seaman at any port out of the United States to serve for one or more round trips from and to the port of departure or for a definite time, whatever the destination."

And while the vessels under postal contract with the United States Government must hire American citizens to the extent of half their crews, the vessels of the American Line, according to Shipping Commissioner Dicky, of New York, "hire most of their men in Southampton, England, as all other vessels are at liberty to do."

Says the Commissioner of Navigation, Mr. Chamberlain, in his report, 1894:

"Unlike the manufacturer on land, whose labor market is, to a degree at least, restricted, the shipowner is at liberty to employ labor in any market where, on account of its abundance, its quality, or its cost, he finds it for his advantage to do so. * * *

"The laws do not require American shipowners to obtain their crews in American ports, nor, so far as ascertained, do the laws of any other maritime nation require its shipowners to obtain their crews in national ports. * * *

"Under normal conditions the crews of American steamships would be shipped in domestic ports, but an entirely abnormal state of affairs has been brought about by our continued failure to adjust our laws to current conditions. Reference to the reports of shipping commissioners and consuls show that only a small part of the crews of the Indiana, Illinois, Pennsylvania, and Ohio, and of the Pacific Mail steamships in Asiatic trade are shipped at New York, Philadelphia, and San Francisco, about four-fifths of their crews being shipped at Liverpool, Antwerp, and Hongkong."

Mr. VEST. I know that this bill will be passed by the decree of the dominant party in this Chamber. I do not make any pessimistic prophecy, but I am sure that the dream of foreign markets, which has been painted to us in such gaudy colors, will never be realized under the provisions of this measure. There will come a time when, like Dead Sea fruit, this law—and it will become a law—will turn to ashes upon the lips of those who now tell us that it will open up new markets and increase the already enormous commerce of this country.

I am not a prophet. I hope that the time will come when the glory and power of my country will be greater than that of any other people upon the face of the globe; but it will not come from unequal and unjust discrimination in favor of one interest against all others. If we make good our promise to the world and to coming generations of liberty, equality, privileges exclusive to none but common to all, we must preserve the great principle that this is a Government of the people and for the people and for their children forever.

Mr. MALLORY. Mr. President, I desire to state that I shall address the Senate on this bill to-morrow when it comes up in regular order before the Senate.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, incidentally during the very eloquent speech of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] the Senator from Ohio [Mr. HANNA] interjected the query as to how many Democrats had voted for the duty on lumber. I did not like to interrupt the Senator from Missouri, but I felt constrained under the taunt to say what I did. I now desire to quote from my language in the debate in 1897, when the Dingley bill was under discussion here. I then said:

Mr. TILLMAN. I should like to call the attention of these Democratic brethren of ours who are attacking our loyalty to the Chicago platform and to Democratic principles to the duties levied by themselves in the Wilson law:

"Buckwheat, corn or maize, corn meal, oats, rye, rye flour, wheat, and wheat flour, 20 per cent ad valorem."

Now, they declare here, as we all know, that these articles are articles of export and that any pretense of protection is a humbug and a fraud; and yet they themselves are only disputing with their Republican brethren over there as to the amount of fraud—whether the duty shall be 20 per cent ad valorem or 25 cents a bushel on wheat, and so on through. Now, let us have a clean record on this business. I stand here myself and announce that if we are to have this stealing from the people by protected interests, I want my share for South Carolina, and I am not ashamed to say it. [Laughter.]

Later on in the same debate, after some discussion by the Senator from Missouri and others, I said this:

I do not propose to be misrepresented here in the attitude which I have assumed in the broad light of day as an American Senator, responsible only to the people of South Carolina and enlightened public opinion throughout the country. If it comes to the question of protection for protection's sake, I am not a protectionist, unless it be to this extent: I announced the general doctrine the other day that it is for the best interests of the American people, taken as a whole, judged from the standpoint of statesmanship, to produce what we consume.

If there be any industry in this country which, by reason of foreign competition, can not live and give diversified labor or more employment to our people, and which by a small tariff can be protected to the extent that it can get on its feet, I say it would be wisdom to give it. The only trouble is that when you have started your infant by giving him first milk and then bread and raising him up to be a man, you continue to protect him until he begins to feel the effects of competition, and then he forms a combination or trust and marches abroad in the open light of day a robber, to take from every household in this land tribute levied through the forms of law by Congress under the system of protection. There is where I draw the line. I say you ought not to allow a single trust or combination to come in here and get a duty on anything, because you levy unjust tribute on the American people whenever you do it.

There is more to the same effect, Mr. President. In this connection I will simply say that I did not vote for the Dingley bill, but I voted to try to remove some of the inequalities in it; and when I saw an opportunity to enhance the value of a Southern product, such as lumber, and thereby increase the value of our timber preserves or reserves, or the land which has nothing but timber on it, and to that extent add to the amount of money that would be current in South Carolina, I felt it was my business to get such a provision in a tariff bill which looked to giving special benefits to other States and other communities. To that extent I have been in an attitude of difference with my Democratic brethren here, and my people have since elected me unanimously, without any opposition. So I think I am a very good specimen of a South Carolina Democrat.

In regard to the question we are discussing, I would not at this late hour trespass upon the Senate but for the fact that I expect to leave the city to-night for some days in order to attend to certain matters that I can not put off any longer. There are two or three points in connection with this ship-subsidy bill to which I desire to direct the attention of the country, or rather of the few Senators who are paying any attention to this debate.

We all realize, Mr. President, that this bill has been determined upon as a Republican measure. I do not know that any caucus has been held upon it; I do not know that the whip has been cracked, but the atmosphere of the Chamber indicates that it will go through and have the necessary votes.

There are some very queer and, to me, inexplicable provisions in it. The former ship-subsidy bill, or the subsidy bill which did not pass the Senate and the House last year, provided that the Postmaster-General "might" contract for the carrying of the mails. This bill "directs" the Postmaster-General to make contracts; and the limitations of the bill are such that a monopoly, or possibly one steamship line, is created, to be American owned and American built, and the Postmaster-General must make a contract with such a line of steamers, if there be only one, at any price that the owners of such line may offer to carry the mails. The only limitation is the amount of subsidy herein provided; such a line can get the maximum amount.

We have other provisions that indicate that it is class legislation pure and simple, that it has the interest of the shipbuilders and of certain other capitalistic influences behind it, and that that is the reason why it is going through here.

It is claimed by those who are fathering this measure and pressing it that it is in the interest of American commerce, and that it is our purpose to build up a merchant marine that will fly the American flag and be manned by American sailors. Now, listen to this from section 3:

And upon each departure from the United States the following proportion of the crew shall be citizens of the United States, to wit: During the first two years of such contract for carrying the mails, one-fourth thereof.

We are to subsidize vessels which will be allowed to employ three-fourths of their crews from among foreign sailors—dagoes, anybody in the world. It is not necessary that they be citizens of the United States at all.

The next three succeeding years, one-third thereof, and during the remaining time of the continuance of such contract, at least one-half thereof.

And so you see the humbuggery that obtains in the provisions here which look to having Americans go on American-built vessels under the American flag, carrying American commerce or the products of our country abroad.

Under the old bill there was a limit of $9,000,000 a year. Under this bill there is no limit. It depends entirely upon the profit there is in it as to how many ships will be built and what the final amount of the subsidy will be.

But the crucial point involved here, the only reasonable test, is whether this measure will accomplish what it is pretended that it is desired to accomplish—not pretended that it is desired, possibly those words are too harsh—but simply which it is hoped or supposed it will accomplish. If we do not obtain cheaper freight by reason of this added commercial fleet of American-built ships to the merchant marine, is it proposed that American shippers shall be forced to patronize these vessels in order to give them cargoes? Is it expected that foreigners will yield this trade, which is now so profitable to them, without a struggle, and that they will not cut under the rates fixed by the American vessels?

If we have the right to take the people's taxes and use them in such an expenditure as this, by which you say you shall pay so much for carrying the mail and so much per gross ton for the 100 miles sailed, why have you not the right to say to the shippers of products, agricultural and otherwise, from the United States, You shall patronize these American ships, let the freights be what they may. The one would be just as legal and constitutional as the other, and if you do not reduce by this means the rate of freight, what guaranty have you that your American ships built out of subsidies will not go empty when they go abroad?

You say they can not be run. Then they must compete with the foreign-built ships, and the question which is presented to us here as a practical and business one is, What good is to be subserved by producing an unnatural competition? Instead of leaving each ship to stand on its own merits and to compete for the trade, you put on an artificial condition here by adding to the income of owners of vessels an amount out of the public Treasury, the object being supposed to be to equalize conditions.

Mr. President, we are told that we can not go into the building of ships now because it is unprofitable. Why do we go into the buying of ships? It is notorious, unless the newspapers have all misstated the facts, that Mr. Morgan's syndicate has purchased the Leyland Line and other ships to the amount of 800,000 tons. They are being run to-day under a foreign flag. For what? Because our navigation laws will not allow them to come under our flag. Is it natural to suppose that simply because they fly the English flag, or the German flag, or some other flag that they are run at a lower rate of expenditure than they would be if they were under the American flag? Such an idea appears to me to be preposterous.

Moreover, what is the basis for the assertion that it costs us more to build ships than it does other nations, except the mere statement? Everybody knows that we compete with England and Germany and the balance of the world in building locomotives; that we ship locomotives all over the world in competition with other ironmasters. It is notorious that we competed with the English and built a bridge in Egypt because we could do it cheaper. Is it natural to suppose, is it reasonable, is it honest to pretend that we can not build ships as cheaply as England builds them if we can build locomotives and bridges cheaper? It is a slur and a slander upon American mechanics to pretend that we cannot do it.

The Senator from Ohio [Mr. HANNA] the other day made an eloquent plea from his standpoint for the necessity which rested upon us to provide against that evil day when a war in Europe should make it dangerous for us to ship our products in foreign bottoms, claiming that our wheat and corn and other produce would be dammed up here in our warehouses because of the fact that no American vessels were available to transport them across the sea. It is hardly possible—I believe it is altogether impossible—that the United States and England will ever get at war with each other. One reason for that is that England to-day is upon the verge of starvation, and if the American food products which we send her were cut off so that she could not receive her supplies of meat and wheat and other things from this side of the ocean, her people would be in sight of starvation in less than a year. We have a guaranty for England's good behavior in the fact that we possess a granary to which she is obliged to have access, and she could not afford under any possible conditions that I can see to go to war to force us to withhold her food supply.

That being so nearly true that no reasonable mind will dispute it, with the English and American navies combined to protect the fleets which will carry the produce of our farms across the Atlantic, is it possible, is there any man alive who can be made to believe that the combined navies of the world will ever surpass the navies of the two English-speaking people? Such an idea advanced by the Senator from Ohio appears to me to be simply moonshine, if I may use such a word.

There is another phase of this subject that is well worthy of consideration, and I am sorry a vote has been ordered on the bill before some examination was made into this matter and testimony taken by the committee. It may not be too late for the House of Representatives to take some action if it wants to after we have passed the bill and sent it over there But there are rumors in the air and we hear them every day, and we have been reading for a year or two of a great transcontinental and interoceanic transportation trust, a combination of railroads and steamship lines of the world into a trust, something that would put the commerce of the world absolutely at the mercy of the capitalists who would be thus associated.

You will say that this is an impossibility; but I hold in my hand something that would indicate that such a scheme has been on foot. Probably it is only waiting for this bill to became a law for the parties interested, whose names are on this paper, to begin their organization of a transoceanic and a transcontinental transportation company. I hold in my hand the prospectus of the United States Shipbuilding Company, dated May 7, 1901, signed H. W. Poor & Co.. 18 Wall street, New York.

I will read from it:

UNITED STATES SHIPBUILDING COMPANY.

A corporation is to be organized under the laws of the State of New Jersey, to be known as the "United States Shipbuilding Company," which shall have power under its charter, among other things, to acquire the several plants mentioned below, now engaged in the building of war vessels for the United States and foreign governments, vessels for the oversea trade, coasting and river service, yachts, sailing vessels, and barges. The corporation will, in addition, have power under its charter and will be equipped to build auxiliary machinery and to do all kinds of repair work. The corporation will own the only dry dock on the Atlantic coast capable of docking vessels of the largest size.

The following plants and the equipment thereof will be acquired by the corporation: The Newport News Shipbuilding and Dry Dock Company, Newport News, Va.; the Union Iron Works, San Francisco, Cal.; the Bath Iron Works, Limited, and the Hyde Windlass Company, Bath, Me.; the Crescent Shipyard and the Samuel L. Moore & Sons Company, Elizabethport, N. J.; the Canda Manufacturing Company, Carteret, N. J.

I will not read it all. I will ask to have it inserted in the RECORD. It gives the names of the following gentlemen who have consented to serve on the board of directors:

Henry T. Scott, president of the Union Iron Works.

Lewis Nixon, the Crescent Shipyard.

Charles J. Canda, president of the Canda Manufacturing Company.

John S. Hyde, president of the Hyde Windlass Company.

E. W. Hyde, president of the Bath Iron Works, Limited.

E. H. Harriman, chairman of board, Union Pacific Railroad Company.

H. E. Huntington, first vice-president of the Southern Pacific Company.

Irving M. Scott, vice-president and general manager of the Union Iron Works.

C. B. Orcott, president of the Newport News Shipbuilding and Dry Dock Company.

Edwin Hawley, president of the Minneapolis and St. Louis Railway Company,

James Stillman, president of the National City Bank.

Other directors will be named after the company is constituted.

It gives the proposed net earnings, and there is also a circular of information containing statements and reports from different experts as to the probable dividends that will accrue to the association, this monopoly of the ship carrying trade of the United States, at least, as well as the shipbuilding trade. I ask to have this inserted in the RECORD.

Mr. PERKINS. I should like to ask the Senator to give the date of the circular.

Mr. TILLMAN. May 7, 1901.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from South Carolina ask that both of the papers be printed?

Mr. TILLMAN. No; I ask that this circular be printed, and that the marked parts in the other documents be inserted, in which Mr. Hyde gives his opinion as to the present condition of shipbuilding in the United States, and how profitable it will be, and there is also a statement of Mr. Henry T. Scott which I should like to have go in.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from South Carolina? The Chair hears none.

The papers referred to are as follows:

UNITED STATES SHIPBUILDING COMPANY.

A corporation is to be organized under the laws of the State of New Jersey, to be known as the "United States Shipbuilding Company," which shall have power under its charter, among other things, to acquire the several plants mentioned below now engaged in the building of war vessels for the United States and foreign government, vessels for the over-sea trade, coasting and river service, yachts, sailing vessels, and barges. The corporation will in addition have power under its charter and will be equipped to build auxiliary machinery and to do all kinds of repair work. The corporation will own the only dry dock on the Atlantic coast capable of docking vessels of the largest size.

The following plants and the equipment thereof will be acquired by the corporation: The Newport News Shipbuilding and Dry Dock Company, Newport News, Va.; the Union Iron Works, San Francisco, Cal.; the Bath Iron Work, Limited, and the Hyde Windlass Company, Bath, Me.; the Crescent Ship Yard, and the Samuel L. Moore & Sons Company, Elizabethport, N. J.; the Canda Manufacturing Company, Carteret, N. J.

From the statement and reports mentioned below (copies of which may be had from the bankers) it will be seen that the works of the corporation will have a total annual capacity of 380,000 tons, exclusive of general repair, dockage, and collateral work, and assuming all the yards to be full of work, the services of about 24,000 men will be required, and about 275,000 tons of steel will be used annually.

The acquirement by this corporation of all the plants and properties above stated presents distinct advantages, as stated by Naval Constructor F. T. Bowles (now rear-admiral and chief constructor of the United States Navy) in his report dated December 22, 1900, as follows:

1. Each concern builds that for which it is best fitted and equipped, or that which its character, location, and labor can accomplish most economically.

2. Structural materials, steel, iron, timber, etc., can be purchased at the lowest rates, a prompt supply secured at points where it is most needed.

3. The technical knowledge of design, which comes from experience, records, and data of each concern, will be combined, thus giving confidence to customers that the results contracted for shall be attained.

4. The healthy professional rivalry of the various yards can be utilized to produce the best results in design, construction, and administration without the disastrous and narrowing devices of destructive competition.

5. The standardization of the numberless details of ship fittings, auxiliaries, and appliances, which are now almost as various and incongruous in design as they are in number, and their production in quantity by those best qualified, would produce enormous economies.

6. It will be possible to effect great economies by the separation of war ships and merchant construction into different establishments, thus avoiding the difficulties of organization and increased cost of radically different types of construction upon adjoining ships.

7. The better organization and management of the individual concerns would be a necessary and direct result of this incorporation. (See report of Admiral F. T. Bowles, United States Navy.)

The following gentlemen have consented to serve on the board of directors: Henry T. Scott, president of the Union Iron Works; Lewis Nixon, the Crescent Shipyard; Charles J. Canda, president of the Canda Manufacturing Company; John S. Hyde, president of the Hyde Windlass Company; E. W. Hyde, president of the Bath Iron Works, Limited; E. H. Harriman, chairman of board, Union Pacific Railroad Company; H. E. Huntington, first vice-president of the Southern Pacific Company; Irving M. Scott, vice-president and general manager of the Union Iron Works; C. B. Orcutt, president of the Newport News Shipbuilding and Dry Dock Company; Edwin Hawley, president of the Minneapolis and St. Louis Railway Company; James Stillman, president of the National City Bank. Other directors will be named after the company is constituted.

The aggregate of orders now in hand of the constituent companies exceeds $63,000,000, covering an average of eighteen months for completion, on which the estimated profit is over $7,000,000.

From the annexed statements and reports it will be seen that the business already in hand of the constituent companies, amounting to $63,000,000, with the additional business that can be secured, should produce the following estimated results:

Estimated net earnings for 1901	$4,223,000
Estimated net earnings for 1902	5,612,500
Estimated net earnings for 1903	7,500,000
Total estimated net earnings for three years	17,335,500
Estimated future annual net earnings, average	5,778,500

As the constituent companies are to be taken over with adequate working capital and free from debt, the profits to accrue on the contracts already secured will be available for dividends. The average net earnings, above estimated at $5,778,500, are equivalent to a sum equaling 7 per cent on the preferred stock and 6 per cent on the common and a substantial surplus.

I.

The company will be authorized under its charter to issue capital stock as follows:

Preferred stock (7 per cent, noncumulative)	$32,500,000
Common stock	32,500,000

II.

As soon as the United States Shipbuilding Company is duly organized the entire capital stock will be issued and delivered to the Mercantile Trust Company as depository to carry out the plan as herein stated.

III.

The United States Shipbuilding Company will have absolute ownership of all the properties of the constituent companies, free from all incumbrances (in the case of the Newport News Shipbuilding Company a fragment of $211,000 bonds outstanding can not be reached at present, but an equal amount of the preferred and common stock will be withheld until the bonds are retired), either through conveyances of the properties or ownership of all the outstanding stocks.

IV.

The plan will become operative as soon as Messrs. H. W. Poor & Co. notify the Mercantile Trust Company that the corporation has acquired the properties of the constituent companies in accordance herewith and the titles thereto have been passed by counsel.

V.

The corporation will have a cash working capital of $5,000,000, contributed under this plan, and in addition will have the cash, materials, supplies, and other quick assets of constituent companies on hand at the time of taking them over by this corporation, amounting, as estimated by the accountants to $2,500,000.

This prospectus is based upon statements and reports of Rear-Admiral Francis T. Bowles, United States Navy, chief constructor of the Navy, who gives an appraisal of values; of the accountants, Messrs. W. T. Simpson and Riddell & Common, chartered accountants, and of D. W. Folger, esq., accountant, San Francisco, Cal.; of the well-known expert shipbuilder, Lewis Nixon, esq.; of Henry T. Scott, esq., president of the Union Iron Works, California, and of E. W. Hyde, esq., president of the Bath Iron Works, Maine, copies of which can be obtained from the bankers.

For the purpose of carrying out the above plan Messrs. H. W. Poor & Co. will receive subscriptions for $20,000,000 preferred stock at par, with an equal amount of common stock.

H. W. POOR & CO.,
18 Wall street, New York.

MAY 7, 1901.

SUBSCRIPTION AGREEMENT.

Referring to the foregoing plan we hereby agree with Messrs. H. W. Poor & Co., of New York, and with each other, in consideration of our mutual promises and agreements and for other good and valuable considerations to subscribe, and do hereby subscribe, for the preferred and common stock of the United States Shipbuilding Company to the amount set opposite our respective names.

Each subscriber shall, at the time of making the subscription, pay to the Mercantile Trust Company an amount equal to 10 per cent of the subscription, the balance of the subscription to be due and payable as and when called for by Messrs. H. W. Poor & Co.

Each subscriber shall receive from the Mercantile Trust Company in consideration of his subscription hereto, at the time of payment, an assignable certificate of the Mercantile Trust Company, entitling the holder upon completion of the payments under this subscription and in accordance with the terms hereof to 7 per cent preferred stock of the United States Shipbuilding Company to the amount of the subscription at par, together with a like amount of the common stock of the said company when the certificates for said classes of stock are ready for delivery.

This agreement may be executed in separate writings with the same effect as if all the signatures were upon one, and shall bind and benefit the respective successors and assigns of all subscribers.

In witness whereof we have hereunto set our hands this —— day of May, 1901.

Name, —— ——. Address, —— ——. Amount, ——.

Henry T. Scott, esq., says:

"So far as the shipbuilding industry in America is concerned it is in its infancy everywhere; it has only just begun. Heretofore capitalists have not been attracted to it. Therefore the men in the business have had to proceed slowly, increasing their plants as they obtained the money out of the business, and in no place does this condition of affairs exist more strongly than on the Pacific coast. We have here little or no modern steam power or sailing vessels, and while we have a few ships of iron the majority are of wood. A great number of the latter would have been replaced during the last year had it not been for the fact that it was impossible to obtain material.

"There are not enough steamers or vessels to handle the business of this coast, and all of the large carrying trade is done in English bottoms.

"The completion of the military highway from Halifax to Vancouver and from St. Petersburg to Vladivostock, the rapid settling of British Columbia and the North Pacific States and the districts of Amoor and Manchuria, all depending upon us for their cereals, etc., change the world's front and transfer to the Pacific the activities and interests that for centuries have made the Atlantic the scene of marine operations.

"These conditions, due to the opening of China and the Far East and the occupation of Hawaii and the Philippine Islands by the United States, make the overshadowing event of the coming century the engineering and the industrial task of supplying their wants."

E. W. Hyde, esq., says:

"The output of the American shipyards for the present fiscal year will be larger than any year for nearly half a century.

"Forty-five years ago the American shipyards were building nearly as many merchant vessels and of a tonnage almost as great as that of Great Britain. During the four years preceding the civil war the product of the American shipyards represented a greater carrying capacity in tons than that of the rival shipyards of England. There is no good reason why the American shipyards should not now construct a greater tonnage than Great Britain.

"American shipyards are already constructing ships for European and Asiatic nations, and there is no good reason why a large amount of the shipbuilding trade from the Clyde and the Thames should not be brought to the yards of this Consolidated Company, which will possess such enormous advatages over any other company in the world.

"The great saving in the purchase of manufactured products and raw material for use in the combined concerns, and by the judicious distribution of orders to the various plants most convenient for the delivery of the vessels ordered, the common enjoyment of patent processes and machinery, the saving of a large number of high-priced duplicate officials, agents, and their salaries, traveling expenses, the unprofitable underbidding and unreasonable competition of the various concerns, the establishment of a central bureau of finance, together with purchasing, engineering, and labor departments, and the great advantage incident to the purchase of large quantities of manufactured materials and preferential deliveries provided for, and the consequent cheapening of transportation charges, the convenience and certainty of all supplies being received when required and of the quality desired, the greater facility with which proper labor can be supplied at the various plants when necessary at one and not at another, and the standardization of the great number of hull and engine details with their manufacture in quantity, considering all of which it will be found that the general and economic conditions will be so improved that the earning power of these concerns with their present capacity will be so largely increased that a new era of prosperity will be opened for them under the proposed cooperation."

Mr. TILLMAN. One more brief matter and I will apologize to the Senate for trespassing upon its patience thus long. One of the most seductive features of this scheme of so-called encouragement to the American commercial marine is that of national defense, the ability to utilize these steamers in time of war.

It will be recalled that we have four vessels now on that list, and in the Spanish-American war, we were told the other day, that as soon as these four vessels were put on duty all fear along the Atlantic coast subsided; that the tremors which had shaken and terrified Boston to the point where there had been a demand made upon the Massachusetts legislature for a State insurance against the Spanish fleet had subsided, and that these four ships really saved the country, so to speak, from a foray upon our shores by Cervera's fleet.

I shall not belittle the services to the country of those steamers. They were great. Everybody was willing to furnish the necessary amount of money that would supply them with arms, cannon, and put them out as videttes or scouts. But as a commentary upon the patriotism and the love of country which these shipowners in esse and in posse, those we now have and those we are going to have under this bill if it becomes a law, I have here the bill of expense. We declared war in April. It was practically ended in July. It was certainly ended in August. Now, what did those four steamers—the St. Paul, the St. Louis, the New York, and the Paris—cost this Government during the little time when they acted as auxiliary cruisers? I made this inquiry last December, when the other subsidy bill was up, and the Secretary of the Navy, under date of December 19, 1900, wrote me the following letter:

NAVY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, December 19, 1900.

SIR: Replying to your telegraphic inquiry of the 13th instant, relative to the amounts of money paid to the owners of the St. Paul and her three sister ships by the United States as auxiliary cruisers, and the cost of changing and restoring them after such service, I have the honor to inform you that the International Navigation Company was paid for the services of the St. Paul, St. Louis, New York, and Paris during the Spanish-American war as follows, viz:

For charter and running expenses	$2,106,133.50
For repairs to said vessels while in active service, including the cost of conversion into auxiliary cruisers	111,702.14
For restoration to their original condition as passenger ships	647,000.00
Total	2,864,835.64

Very respectfully,

JOHN D. LONG, Secretary.

Hon. B. R. TILLMAN,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

In a subsequent letter the Secretary of the Navy says:

There should be put to the credit of the Navy Department the sum of $739,943.70, the amount reimbursed by the War Department for the use of these vessels for the transportation of troops.

This merely changes the account against the Government from one department to another without altering the total cost to the United States.

Here were four vessels which we had been subsidizing from the time they first put the American flag at their peaks under the pretense that they were to save us in our emergency, and when that emergency came these liberal, patriotic owners were so exacting and exorbitant, or our Government was so liberal—both, I presume, because they had the right to drive a hard bargain, and they did—that we paid in six months during which they were in our service enough to build one of them, if not two. I do not know what those four vessels cost. Those who are more expert can furnish the information. I have not had the time to look it up. But it is very clearly shown by this statement that if this auxiliary navy which we are to create by this bill shall cost us as much in proportion in any future emergency of our nation as these four ships cost, then they are very costly luxuries, which we had better dispense with.

We had better confine ourselves to simply letting these vessels be built as means of transporting commerce, and then let the Government make its trade with them in the open market or buy vessels in Europe, as we had to buy them in the last war, for transports and other purposes. We bought vessels of war themselves in our emergency, and it is to be presumed that in any dire national straits, if we needed ships, with the limitless money that we have at our command we could buy all we shall need at a much cheaper rate than to pour untold millions into the pockets of this combination of capitalists, the names of whose members I have just given and who, whether they combine into a trust or act independently, to all intents and purposes are now a trust.

Mr. President, it seems so unjust, so wrong in principle, so outrageous in policy for the Senate and for Congress to take money out of the Treasury for such unholy and infamous purposes that I am astonished to find this great party, which claims to be exclusively the American party, stand sponser for it. The pretense of protection to American labor is exposed by the fact that they do not require these ships to be manned by Americans. The training school for seamen, which is held up here as a reason for doing this thing, is not contained in the bill at all. This invasion of the Treasury, this looting of the Treasury, if I may use the term, in the interest of men who are already multimillionaires, and some of them possibly owning fifty or a hundred or two hundred million dollars, is so outrageous that I reckon the best thing I can say is to hope that you will pass it and pass it soon, and that the American people will soon pass you on into the minority in this Chamber, and place the Government in the hands of men who will stand for the doctrine, America for the Americans and equal rights for all who do homage to the flag.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, March 10, 1902.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday last was read and approved.

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BURTON. I am directed by the Committee on Rivers and Harbors to report a bill (H. R. 12346) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes, and to ask that the same be referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. I desire to give notice that I shall seek to bring up this bill for consideration immediately after the consideration of the Post-Office appropriation bill.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I reserve all points of order on this bill.

The SPEAKER. All points of order are reserved.

The bill was read a first and second time, and, with the accompanying report, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and ordered to be printed.

CONSULAR AND DIPLOMATIC APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HITT. I desire to call up House bill 11471, the consular and diplomatic appropriation bill, which comes back from the Senate with amendments. I ask that the House nonconcur in the amendments and request a conference with the Senate thereon.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the amendments of the Senate to the consular and diplomatic appropriation bill be nonconcurred in and a conference with the Senate requested. Is there objection?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I wish to ask the gentleman from Illinois whether the minority members of the committee have consented to this action?

Mr. HITT. I have not been able to consult with them. The committee has been unanimous on the bill from the beginning. We have taken no steps to which all our members did not agree. I see that the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARK], a member of the committee, is present.

Mr. CLARK. That is all right.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection, and the order is made as requested by the gentleman from Illinois. The Chair appoints as conferees on the part of the House the gentleman from Illinois, Mr. HITT, the gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. ADAMS, and the gentleman from Arkansas, Mr. DINSMORE.

MINORITY VIEWS ON BILL FOR IRRIGATION OF ARID LANDS.

Mr. RAY of New York. Mr. Speaker, late on Saturday last the majority of the Committee on Irrigation of Arid Lands filed their report on the bill (H. R. 9676) appropriating the receipts from the sale and disposal of public lands in certain States and Territories to the construction of irrigation works for the reclamation of arid lands. I did not know that the report was to be filed at that time. I ask leave now to file the views of the minority of the committee, that they may be printed.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. RAY] asks to file the views of a minority of the Committee on Irrigation of Arid Lands, and that they be printed.

There was no objection.

BRIDGE ACROSS NIAGARA RIVER.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of House bill 10305.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 14 of the act approved June 29, 1898, entitled "An act to provide for the construction of a bridge across Niagara River," be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 14. That this act shall be null and void if actual construction of the bridge herein authorized be not commenced within one year from the date of the passage of this act and completed by June 30, 1905."

The amendment reported by the committee was read, as follows:

At the end of the bill add the following:

"Provided, That the said act of June 29, 1898, shall continue in full force and effect, as herein modified, notwithstanding said structure was not completed before June 29, 1901."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. What is the object of extending the time as fixed in the original bill?

Mr. ALEXANDER. This bill simply extends for one year the time fixed for the construction of the bridge. A bill similar to this has passed the House twice.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. This bill does not in any way interfere with that provision of the original bill by which the Government retains the right to amend?

Mr. ALEXANDER. That is not interfered with at all. This bill simply extends the time one year.

There being no objection, the House proceeded to the consideration of the bill; which was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. ALEXANDER, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

BRIDGE ACROSS EAST ST. ANDREWS BAY, FLORIDA.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of House bill 9332, to authorize the Dothan, Hartford and Florida Railway Company to construct a bridge across East St. Andrews Bay, navigable water, at a point about 1 mile east of Farmdale, in the State of Florida.

The bill was read. It provides—that the Dothan, Hartford and Florida Railway Company be, and is hereby, authorized to construct and maintain and operate a bridge across East St. Andrews Bay, navigable water, in the State of Florida; said bridge to be located about 1 mile east of Farmdale, in said State.

That said bridge shall be built and located under and subject to such regulations for the security of navigation as the Secretary of War may prescribe.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

There being no objection, the House proceeded to the consideration of the bill, which was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. CLAYTON, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

STATUE OF BENJAMIN F. STEPHENSON.

Mr. McCLEARY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the joint resolution which I will send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, etc., That permission be, and is hereby, granted the Grand Army of the Republic of the United States of America to erect a statue to the memory and honor of the late Benjamin F. Stephenson, founder of the Grand Army of the Republic of the United States of America, on one of the public reservations of the city of Washington, D. C., to be designated by the Secretary of War, the Joint Committee on the Library, the superintendent of public buildings and grounds, and the committee of the Grand Army of the Republic appointed by it for that purpose: Provided, That the statue, with pedestal, shall cost not less than $15,000, and that it shall be presented to the people of the United States by the said Grand Army of the Republic.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of House joint resolution 61?

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman if it is a settled fact in history that the gentleman named in the resolution is the founder of the Grand Army of the Republic?

Mr. McCLEARY. In reply, I would say that the request comes from the officials of the Grand Army of the Republic, and if there is any doubt about it, they ought to be the final authority, or at least the best authority obtainable, far better than I would be.

Mr. PAYNE. I know of one or two other gentlemen—soldiers—who have claimed the distinction of that honor.

Mr. McCLEARY. Historical matters are often matters of controversy, and we can only settle them according to the best authority available. This is the action of the Grand Army of the Republic in its official capacity, and they undoubtedly have considered the testimony, and this is their verdict.

Mr. PAYNE. Of course they ought to know who their founder is.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I would like to ask the gentleman who proposes to erect this monument?

Mr. McCLEARY. The Grand Army of the Republic.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Furnish the money, too?

Mr. McCLEARY. They furnish the money. There is no expense to the United States whatever.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution. [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

There being no objection, the House proceeded to consider the resolution, which was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. McCLEARY, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

HON. JOHN HAY.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution which I will send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the thanks of Congress be presented to Hon. John Hay for the appropriate memorial address delivered by him on the life and services of William McKinley, late President of the United States, in the Representatives Hall, before both Houses of Congress and their invited guests, on the 27th day of February, 1902, and that he be requested to furnish a copy for publication.

Resolved, That the chairman of the joint committee appointed to make the necessary arrangements to carry into effect the resolution of this Congress in relation to the memorial exercises in honor of William McKinley be requested to communicate to Mr. Hay the foregoing resolution, receive his answer thereto, and present the same to both Houses of Congress.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I could not understand what the Clerk read, and I would like to ask the gentleman from Ohio if this resolution has been considered by any committee of the House?

Mr. GROSVENOR. It has not. I would state that it is a copy of the resolution adopted by the House and Senate, both on the occasion of the address by Mr. Bancroft on the death of President Lincoln, and on the occasion of the address of Mr. Blaine on the death of President Garfield. It is simply a formal bringing to the notice of the Committee on Publication the action of Congress in that behalf.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. The resolution tenders the thanks of Congress, as I understand it.

Mr. GROSVENOR. It is in the exact form of the former resolutions that I have referred to.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I think it ought to be considered by a committee, and I shall ask that it be referred.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee objects.

RURAL FREE-DELIVERY SERVICE.

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. THAYER. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California.

Mr. THAYER. Will the gentleman from California yield a moment? Two or three minutes are all that I ask.

Mr. LOUD. I would suggest that I be recognized. Mr. Speaker, I wish to make a motion.

The SPEAKER. What is the motion of the gentleman?

Mr. LOUD. I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the further consideration of House bill 11728.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts in the chair, and resumed the consideration of House bill 11728.

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Chairman, I have a request to make regarding the consideration of this bill. The bill contains but one section, but contains quite a number of paragraphs, several paragraphs which I believe are unobjectionable to the great majority of this House. I do not know what the Chair might hold regarding the consideration of this bill, as to whether it will be considered as a whole or by paragraphs, and in order to relieve the Chair from determining that—and it is possible that the point might be made—I ask unanimous consent that the bill may be considered by paragraphs.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Mr. Chairman, I suggest to the gentleman that that was the order taken, that it should be considered to-day by paragraphs. That is the order, as a matter of record.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will refer to the RECORD. The Chair is informed that the agreement was that the bill should be considered under the five-minute rule, and that it was not stated whether it should be by paragraphs or by sections.

Mr. SWANSON. I should certainly prefer myself that it should be considered by paragraphs. As I understand the request of the gentleman, it is that it shall be considered by paragraphs and not by sections.

Mr. LOUD. I will say that I am perfectly indifferent about the matter.

Mr. SWANSON. I should rather have it considered by paragraphs.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Virginia object?

Mr. SWANSON. No, I do not, if I understand the request of the gentleman from California.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent that the bill be considered by paragraphs. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the first paragraph.

The Clerk (proceeding with the reading of the bill) read as follows:

Clerks, 4 classes, graded in even hundreds of dollars, at $900, $1,000, $1,100, and not exceeding $1,200 per annum.

Mr. SMITH of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk, to come in at the end of the paragraph which has just been read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert on page 2, after line 7, as a new paragraph, the following:

"That rural free-delivery carriers heretofore appointed and now in the service may be continued as carriers at a rate of compensation not exceeding $900 per annum, until such time as the Postmaster-General shall advertise for proposals and make awards to the several routes on which such carriers are now employed; and that the Postmaster-General shall not advertise for such proposals or make such awards for any route in operation at the date of the passage of this act until July 1, 1906, or until a vacancy shall occur by reason of the death, resignation, or removal of the carrier who may be serving on any such route at the date of the passage of this act.".

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. Chairman, I raise the point of order against that amendment at this place in the bill. I think it is a proper amendment to paragraph 4, which regulates the appointment and disposal of carriers heretofore appointed. The proper place for that amendment is paragraph 4.

Mr. SMITH of Illinois. Do I understand the gentleman as raising the point of order on the amendment?

Mr. SWANSON. I make the point of order that it is not germane to this paragraph, but that it is pertinent to paragraph 4.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Illinois on the point of order.

Mr. SMITH of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I do not understand that the point of order is well taken. It seems to me that this amendment comes in as properly at this particular place in the bill as later, as it refers to carriers already in the service and who presumably will continue in the service. Under these circumstances I do not see that the point of order is well taken.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. The Chair is clearly of the opinion that inasmuch as the bill is now being considered by paragraphs, and inasmuch as the amendment offered by the gentleman is expressly covered by paragraph 4, toward the close of the bill, this amendment is germane to that paragraph and not to the paragraph now under consideration.

Mr. SMITH of Illinois. This is offered, I will say to the Chairman, as an additional paragraph, and if adopted of course paragraph 4, as it now appears in the bill, would have to be stricken out.

The CHAIRMAN. It seems to the Chair that the admission which the gentleman has made would indicate quite clearly that this amendment is in order, not to the pending paragraph, but to paragraph 4, because the gentleman says that paragraph would have to be stricken out if this were adopted. The Chair rules that it is not now in order, but that it would be in order when paragraph 4 is reached.

Mr. SWANSON. I desire to offer an amendment.

Mr. LOUD. There is a committee amendment which comes first.

Mr. SWANSON. Oh, yes. I thought that the committee amendment had been read.

Mr. ADAMSON. I should like to move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. ADAMSON] is recognized.

Mr. ADAMSON. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] desires to offer an amendment which is material, and mine is only pro forma.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has recognized the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Chairman, it is not often that I obtrude any remarks upon this House, and I feel that I can afford to have a little indulgence. I have some remarks which will take somewhere between four and ten minutes to deliver. They relate to the transportation and delivery of the mails, and I ask unanimous consent that I may proceed until I conclude my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent that he may proceed until he concludes his remarks.

Mr. LOUD. One moment, Mr. Chairman. The gentleman does not want over ten minutes, does he? I think he ought to ask for not exceeding ten minutes.

Mr. ADAMSON. It will not exceed ten and one-half or eleven minutes.

Mr. LOUD. I object to unlimited time.

Mr. SWANSON. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman be allowed to proceed for eleven minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia asks that the gentleman from Georgia may be allowed to proceed for eleven minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Chairman, the authority to establish post-offices and post-roads, exercised by the Federal Government under the Constitution, is one legitimate function capable of benefiting fairly and justly all the people of the whole country. It was designed as a sort of general-welfare establishment in which the citizens of this Republic have constitutionally agreed that a sufficient amount of the public revenues shall be devoted to supplying the necessaries and luxuries of business and social communication.

Discoveries and inventions, the development of our country, the increase of population and commerce, have changed conditions, altered methods, and somewhat confused conceptions of the system, its origin and purposes. No doubt its operation, however rapid in transit or frequent in trips, should properly be limited to conveyance and delivery of written and printed matter. I can not subscribe to the doctrine professed by some honest but misguided people that the system may be properly run by electricity—that we should take over, own, and operate the telegraph and telephone lines of the country.

In like manner, following to its last analysis the insistence of others for parcels post and postal banks, the system would ultimately flounder and perish in the foolish attempt to monopolize the freight, express, and banking business of the country, while deceiving and disappointing the people of the rural districts in the "penny wise and pound foolish" policy of refusing to deliver newspapers and magazines at a cheap rate of postage. More monstrous, if possible, is the fallacy now advocated by "paternalism run mad," that the Government should drive private enterprise from channels already legitimately occupied and misapply public funds to establish a governmental cable monopoly between our own and far distant countries. Government should confine itself to governmental functions prescribed in the Constitution, leaving private enterprise untrammeled to do "its perfect work" and make profits to pay taxes to enable the Post-Office Department to carry the mails to every home in the land.

While the people will not brook extravagant expenditure, they demand the best service which can be obtained, considering local conditions of business and population. It is not feared that the Department will dishonestly or wastefully spend money; but very often it appears necessary to call attention to the fact that the Post-Office Department is not expected to provide revenues to conduct this Government, nor do very many people desire that it should be made even self-sustaining until its benefits have been extended to every region of the Union, as freely, if not as frequently, as to the more advanced communities now enjoying them.

At least until that stage is reached the people are satisfied that the system shall be liberally supported by the public Treasury, and they regard it as unfair to any suffering community to deny it postal facilities on the ground that they would not be self-sustaining. They are prepared to regard with equanimity a deficit in the postal service just as a man with pride and joy applies his income to the promotion and beautifying of his domestic and social relations, and a man would about as sensibly disrupt his family ties on the ground that they were not immediately financially profitable as for Government officials to talk about a deficit in an expanding and largely experimental postal system, designed and agreed upon solely for the convenience, necessity, and luxury of the people in their social, domestic, business, and political relations, upon no other condition than efficient service and honest administration, which imply business acumen enough to require, not that the Government gets back every dollar expended in each venture, nor yet that the people served get exactly the value thereof, but that they receive efficient, agreeable service, suited to their needs, and that the persons rendering the service are paid what their time, service, and talents are worth.

A carrier on a smooth, a short, or a thinly populated route may work less than another on a longer or a rougher or a thickly populated route, yet he must be committed to that work alone to the exclusion of other occupations. He renders all the service required and should have his pay. Population and business fluctuate; many changes occur to vary the conditions of routes. Certain it is that facilities increase business, especially and conspicuously in the postal service. Under the present administration of the prudent and able men in charge of the distribution of the mails no change is needed, except to authorize the expenditure of a greater per cent of our revenues, so as to hasten the glad day when every community within our borders shall enjoy proper mail facilities, through honest and capable service without regard to income from any particular new venture, leaving and reserving to Congress the task of economizing somewhere else, if necessary, to supply the funds to meet the demands of the service in which the people find the most valuable return for their money.

The rural free delivery has been as well administered as the appropriation therefor would allow. What the superintendent of that division needs is more money to enable him to have all applications acted on, at the same time so liberalizing requirements and conditions as to permit the extension of the system whenever the people desire it. Eventually the Government should and will deliver the mail at the door of every resident on a public road in the United States. The frequency of delivery will properly depend on conditions of population and business. Present regulations insure the appointment of the carrier selected by the patrons if he is competent, which is local self-government. He should not be appointed if he is incompetent, and experience will demonstrate that unfit persons will be rarely recommended.

The charge of partisanship made here is not sustained by my dealing with the division of rural free delivery. If it is true as to the great States whence the charge comes, it is remarkable that Democrats and Republicans from that region do not agree on the subject. Able Democrats demand a change to escape partisanship, while able Republicans demand a like change to escape fair conditions and secure partisanship.

Republicans are usually alert to discern political advantage, and some of them have been called everything else but dull on those subjects. Nor does there appear sufficient reason for the misgivings of some statesmen as to the power and importance of mail carriers as political propagandists. It is not probable that they will in the near future elect a Congress or control one after its election.

At least our friends in the region susceptible to such influence may find comfort in the careful calculation that persons of equal capacity performing identical duties in the same way, whether receiving higher or lower compensation, alike having to be recommended and examined, would not likely have their persuasive powers increased or diminished through the one differentiating feature of submitting competitive bids as to pay. My experience, I confess, may have prejudiced me against the competitive bidding system; but my observation of its operation certainly does not justify me in advocating its extension to other branches of the service.

The present wise, liberal, and honorable Second Assistant Postmaster-General is doing his best to remedy existing evils. I do not want him loaded down with any other contract system until he completes the reformation of that. He recognizes that a faster schedule can be made over a good road than over a bad one, and that good people laboring to develop a new community which is rapidly increasing in wealth and population are entitled to mail facilities to help them in their work. He recognizes that by making schedules as fast as the road will permit and prohibiting speculative, nonresident bidders he can secure direct competent and responsible carriers, who will do the work for what it is worth and secure to the beneficiaries the full service for which the Government pays.

Wherever he makes a new arrangement he improves the service. But many of the old miserable speculative contracts are yet in operation, or rather in existence; they can not operate. I have no word of censure for the original contractors. They did what they were encouraged to do by the Government under a false system. They took contracts at prices inadequate to run the schedules undertaken. If they pay it all to a subcontractor—which they frequently do, or more—they lose. The subcontractor who undertakes the service for a part of the price is utterly unable to do the work.

In the ruin of both original and sub contractor the people are defrauded of any service, the Government is laughed at as the victim of a disgraceful farce, and the people whom the Government pretends to serve are insulted as well as defrauded by the entire combination, unfortunate though it be. Leaving out of consideration the contractors, both original and sub, for whom I have great sympathy, there is an avenue of honorable escape for the Government and a method of relieving the people concerned. Every such contract ought to be immediately revoked and new provision made for prompt and efficient service which will bear such fruit in satisfying the people that stimulated business and social intercourse, always responsive to facilities, will come far nearer repaying the financial outlay than the present abortive pretense of service can ever do.

No system will work exactly alike in all communities. Uniformity is not a prerequisite to welldoing. This is a great country, possessing varied resources, inhabited by a great people of various habits, ideas, characters, and vocations. Exact equality and sameness can not be maintained in all details of administration. But the officials in charge of distributing our mails at present are able, honest, and as nearly exempt from partisanship as is usual with cultivated mortals. If Congress will abstain from any legislation concerning them, except supplying the necessary money, and allow them to proceed with the development of present plans, the Second Assistant Postmaster-General will certainly improve the mail service by railway and star routes, while the First Assistant Postmaster-General and the superintendent of rural free delivery will afford the world a revelation in the value and convenience of a general system beneficial to all the people.

Certainly the qualities of judgment and fidelity in exercising the functions of a postmaster while riding a rural free-delivery route ought not to be subjected to competitive bidding against the mere physical act of transporting the mail. In dealing with the administration of the Post-Office Department all good Congressmen should consider the ancient and holy philosophy: "There is that scattereth, and yet increaseth; and there is that withholdeth more than is meet, but it tendeth to poverty." [Loud applause.]

The Clerk read as follows:

Carriers at not exceeding $600 per annum: Provided, That hereafter all mail service on rural free-delivery mail routes shall be performed by carriers designated pursuant to an advertisement inviting competitive bidding, except as herein otherwise provided.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

Strike out lines 8 and 9 down to and including the word "hereafter," in line 9, and insert in lieu thereof the word "Hereafter."

Mr. SWANSON. The committee has the following amendment pending: "Carriers at not exceeding $600 per annum." I desire to offer an amendment to that amendment, and then I shall ask for a vote. I desire to defeat the committee amendment after it is amended with the amendment which I shall offer.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will submit his amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by adding at the end of line 8, page 2, the words "including allowance for equipment."

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. Now let it be read as it will be after amended.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. Chairman, I will state to the House that in the bill as originally introduced it read, "Carriers at not exceeding $600 per annum." The committee have stricken that out, and put "Carriers to be appointed in the future under the contract system." This amendment leaves it doubtful as to whether any additional allowance shall be made for horse hire and equipment or not. I desire it to be understood that carriers shall be paid $600 and that there shall be no addition to the $600. My amendment is to the committee amendment, which is stricken out. Then after that amendment is adopted I wish to defeat the committee amendment which proposes to strike that out, and leave it so that it will read, "Carriers at not exceeding $600 per annum, including allowance for equipment."

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Six hundred dollars a year, with all equipments?

Mr. SWANSON. All that he can get is to be $600. So that there can be no misunderstanding, I want to say that this bill as originally introduced left it in doubt as to whether $600 simply was to be paid as a salary, and that possibly might leave it discretionary with the Department to make an additional allowance. Of course we want that fixed, and my amendment is to make it clear that the salary shall be $600, including allowance for equipment. My amendment will make it read, if it carries, "Carriers at not exceeding $600 per annum, including allowance for equipment."

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Just a word. I know exactly what the gentleman from Virginia means, but I believe the language is such that it might be construed as giving to the Department power to pay them extra for equipment. I do not think the gentleman has been happy in the selection of the language to express his intention.

Mr. SWANSON. That is all they are to have for compensation and equipment.

Mr. GARDNER of New Jersey. Why do you employ the word "allowance?" Why not use the language "$600, which shall include horse hire and equipment?" In using the word "allowance" it carries with it the idea that the Department can make an allowance.

Mr. SWANSON. I want to make it clear. You can use any language you want to, but I want it understood that the carrier shall only get $600, including his labor and his equipment.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. Make it $600 and he furnish his equipment.

Mr. GARDNER of New Jersey. The word "allowance" might lead the Department to consider that they have a discretion.

Mr. SWANSON. I do not think including horse hire and cart can make it any stronger, but if gentlemen can suggest what would make it stronger I have no objection.

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. I want to make this suggestion, so that there will be no mistake. Suppose the gentleman adds this clause, "and no allowance shall be made for horse hire and equipment."

Mr. SWANSON. If you can make it any stronger, I have no objection.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the amendment be reported again.

The Clerk read as follows:

Carriers at not to exceed $600 per annum, including allowance for equipment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I do not think that the amendment accomplishes the purpose that the gentleman from Virginia intends it to accomplish. I think that the language of the amendment ought to be changed so as to say, "and no other allowance for service or for hire of teams shall be allowed the carrier."

Mr. KLUTTZ. Why not say, "and no other allowance of any kind whatever shall be made?"

Mr. SWANSON. That would be perfectly satisfactory to me.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, I desire to inquire whether this amendment proposes to amend the bill or to amend the committee amendment. I understood by the reading of the Clerk that it is to amend the committee amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. It is to complete the text before the committee amendment is voted upon. No other amendment has been offered yet.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I desire to state to the members of the House that, believing that the compensation of the rural carriers should be put into the appropriation bill for the year 1903 in accordance with the expressed opinion of the House about two or three weeks ago, that the compensation for that year should be $600, I went to the Department and asked the officers to prepare an amendment which would cover that, and the exact language was given to me that is offered by the gentleman from Virginia, "at a salary not exceeding $600 per annum, including allowance for equipment." Now, that is the language prepared by the Department for the appropriation bill.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. But that is the very language you do not want to use.

Mr. HILL. Then the Department does not know what it is talking about,

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. That language would require the Department to pay for salary and also equipment.

Mr. HILL. Not at all; it is included in the $600.

Mr. GARDNER of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, I want a moment to call the attention of this committee to the phraseology of that language prepared in the Department, as stated, and to what it means. It is the first language used in any law or proposed law up to this time authorizing the Department to attempt to segregate the salary from the equipment expenses. Now, this committee can adopt the Department language in that amendment if it wants to, but they shall not do it if I can prevent it, and be under a misapprehension as to what it means. It means that the Department, under that language, has the authority, and will exercise it, to say that of the $600 $400 shall be salary and $200 shall be the equipment allowance. Now, does any genius know how to lay down a better basis for them to come into the next Congress and say, "Four hundred dollars a year is a pitiful salary for these carriers;" and when you say, "No; they get six," they will say, "No; that has been segregated; $200 is for equipment allowance and the salary is $400?" Now, it is a fact this amendment was prepared outside of this Chamber, and it has its purpose, and it is well understood that it will accomplish it.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. There is no danger of its being adopted.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. Chairman, so there can be no misunderstanding about it. I think the amendment is all right as it was offered, but I want to withdraw it and offer another one.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent to withdraw his amendment. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. SWANSON. Now, Mr. Chairman, I think I have fixed it so that there will be no misunderstanding about it. It want to state distinctly that that is all I want the carriers to be paid. Now, I offer to amend so that it will read—

Carriers at a salary not exceeding $600 per annuum, and no other or further allowance shall be made to said carriers.

Mr. BARTLETT. May I make a suggestion to the gentleman? If the gentleman will put in there the words "at a salary not to exceed $600, no further allowance shall be made," etc.

Mr. SWANSON. I hope this will satisfy the House. My amendment is to make it so that it will read "at a salary not exceeding $600 per annum. No further allowance shall be made to said carriers."

Mr. WARNOCK. I would like to ask the gentleman if that amendment would not have the effect of depriving the letter carriers from all commissions for issuing money orders and for selling stamps?

Mr. LOUD. They do not get any commission.

Mr. WARNOCK. Do not they get some allowance?

Mr. SWANSON. None whatever.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend the committee amendment, so that it will read:
"Carriers at a salary not exceeding $600 per annum, and no other or further allowance for salaries shall be made to said carriers."

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I want to offer an amendment, and if the language is not better than the one proposed by the gentleman from Virginia I will not present it. I will take his judgment. I move to amend by adding, after the words "six hundred dollars," the words "which compensation shall be in full for all services rendered and equipment furnished."

The CHAIRMAN. Is this offered as an amendment to the amendment?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Yes, I offer it if the gentleman from Virginia thinks the language is better than his. It is to insert after the words "six hundred dollars" these words: "which compensation shall be in full for all services rendered and equipments furnished."

Mr. SWANSON. I think that language might include something else—repairs or something of that kind. I do not think the language of my amendment can be made any stronger than it is.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I will submit my amendment for a vote of the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana offers an amendment which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Which compensation shall be in full for all services rendered and equipments furnished.

Mr. SWANSON. I make a point of order against that.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of the opinion that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia is not strictly an amendment to the committee amendment, but is a preferential amendment to perfect the text, to which one other amendment may be offered.

Mr. LOUD. If this amendment should be received, would there not ultimately be three amendments?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes; the committee amendment and two preferential amendments to perfect the text, which are always in order.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. If the gentleman from California, who knows the object to be accomplished, will say that he regards the other language as stronger or better to accomplish the purpose, I will withdraw my proposition.

Mr. LOUD. I do not care anything about the amendment. I am only concerned as to where it is leading.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I do care something about the matter; and I wanted the gentleman's opinion as to whether my amendment would accomplish the purpose we both have in view.

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Chairman, I desire to make a suggestion regarding this amendment. The gentleman from Virginia has come here this morning with an amendment fresh from the Department. Now, if there is any design in it, I do not think there is a member on the floor of the House who knows what the design is. The gentleman from Virginia tells you what he wants. He says, "I want this, and when you have done this, I want that;" and he says he is satisfied that the Department does not intend to make any additional allowance.

I would like to know what his authority is for that statement. The gentleman from whom he gets his information has said in unequivocal language that he never meant to recommend, and never would recommend, an increase of salary for carriers above $400, yet he now recommends $600. What faith can be placed in the word of a gentleman who has testified on at least two separate occasions, as is shown in the record of the report of his hearing before the committee? The language of the bill, if you want to pay these carriers properly, is sufficiently explicit. If you go beyond the language that is used there, you at least mystify the matter.

This is simply a bill providing legislation, and the appropriation bill when it comes before you, if the Post-Office Committee can have its way, will be so safely guarded in reference to the appropriations made that he who runs may read and interpret correctly the meaning.

Now, there are three or four or five different propositions presented here; and I have no doubt that if this question were discussed fifteen or twenty minutes longer, there would be some more. The gentleman from Virginia has twice receded from his position on an amendment offered here, thereby admitting that he did not know the effect of the amendment he had offered. I say again, the language of the bill fixing the salary at $600 is as explicit as this bill should be.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. Chairman, I have nothing to say in reply to what the gentleman from California may say in reference to somebody at the Department. I do not know to whom he is alluding as a man who has twice broken his word. When the deficiency bill was up the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HILL] stated that he wanted to limit these salaries to $600; and he went to the Department and asked that an amendment be drawn there which they would construe as fixing that limitation. I did not do it.

Mr. LOUD. I should like to ask the gentleman in all sincerity whether the gentleman to whom he refers is afraid that this legislation may get away with him and wants Congress to tie him up so that he can not go beyond the law?

Mr. SWANSON. The gentleman asks me to say something "in all sincerity." I wish to say there is no time when I do not speak "in all sincerity." I am not one who sometimes speaks "in all sincerity" and sometimes does not. I do not know whether the gentleman was making any allusion to myself.

Mr. LOUD. I was referring to the other gentleman.

Mr. SWANSON. I say, "in all sincerity" (for at all times I speak "in all sincerity"), that if any man can show me how the language can be made stronger so as to fix this salary at $600, which some of us think the language introduced by the gentleman from California who introduced this bill does not do, I should like to hear it. Who introduced this bill? The gentleman from California. The bill provided that the salary of the carrier should not exceed $600. It was thought that that language might allow something to be added as payment for horse hire, etc.; so we wanted it understood that when $600 is paid it is to be in full for all allowances, for everything.

The Department thought the word "including" would do that, and they said they would so construe it. They have to construe the language of the bill, and I was satisfied when Mr. HILL told me that the Department did so construe it as including allowance for everything; but there are some members who think it not strong enough, so I was willing to use the strongest language that could be drawn, to fix it so that $600 would include equipment, would include horse hire, would include repairs and horse feed and everything; and I would like to see anybody get anything that is any stronger.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Will the gentleman read his amendment right there?

Mr. SWANSON. I will read my amendment, and I want every man to listen to it and see if this does not fix it conclusively and definitely, so that there can not be the remotest doubt about it. First, however, I want to explain to this House a parliamentary consideration, so that they can understand it. The bill originally introduced by the gentleman from California had this included in it:

Carriers at not exceeding $600 per annum.

The committee decided not to put carriers to be appointed in the future on a salary, so they struck that provision out of the bill as reported from the committee. The proposition before the House now is the committee amendment striking out "Carriers at not exceeding $600 per annum."

It was thought that that language was so ambiguous that the carriers might put in a claim for equipment—for horse hire, for repairs—so the Department wanted it distinctly understood that that $600 included everything. Now, I propose that that provision shall read as follows, if my amendment prevails:

Carriers at a salary not exceeding $600 per annum, and no other or further allowance or salary shall be made to such carrier.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. That fixes it at a salary alone of $600. It does not say anything about equipment, does it?

Mr. SWANSON. "No other or further allowance or salary shall be made to such carrier."

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I did not hear that.

Mr. SWANSON. There shall be no further allowance for equipment or for repairs.

Mr. RANDELL of Texas. I would like to ask the gentleman if the object of his amendment is to make a uniform salary or a graded salary?

Mr. SWANSON. It is to make a salary not exceeding $600, and where they do not work but three or four hours they can pay them $300. This fixes the limit to which you can go. If the carrier works simply one hour he can get $100.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Who is to determine that?

Mr. SWANSON. The Department, according to the length of time he takes on the route.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. I would like to ask the gentleman if he does not think this language will accomplish his purpose more specifically than that he has written.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman be allowed additional time so that he may answer the question.

There was no objection.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. "No other sum shall be allowed or paid to said carrier for service, hire, or expenses."

Mr. SWANSON. The word "allowance" is a broader term than any other term you can get, and I shall insist on this amendment. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I was not in the committee when the gentleman from Virginia offered his amendment. I understand, however, from his speech, that it proposes to fix the salary of rural carriers at $600, which shall cover the equipment and all expenses and allowances of every kind.

Mr. SWANSON. That is right—not exceeding that.

Mr. CANNON. Not exceeding $600 a year.

Mr. SWANSON. And on short routes they can pay less.

Mr. CANNON. Now, Mr. Chairman, I have given but little attention to this bill, but I want to express the belief for myself that $600 salary to the carrier, when on the average he furnishes his wagon and the two horses that will be necessary and all the equipment, including repairs and maintenance, and covers his 25 miles a day, unless there is a further compensation somewhere or in some way, is not sufficient for an efficient service. [Applause.] I do not believe that an efficient service, on the average, can be given for less than $1,000 compensation, if it covers the wagon and the two horses and the man every week day in the year. Now, this proposes to limit it to $600. Where is the other $400 to come from? If by apt provision you can allow the carrier to be protected in doing an express business or a package business by which he can make the other $400, then he can afford to perform the service. But unless you do by apt provision and administration allow him to do this you but commit a fraud upon ourselves and upon the carriers and the whole people when you fix the total compensation at $600. I should be glad to know from the gentleman whether he believes that this will settle the compensation.

Mr. SWANSON. I am satisfied that $600 will be satisfactory to the carriers. I have heard of no complaints. They are now getting $500. This is an increase of $100, and I have found that most of the gentlemen who want to put the service under the contract system say there will be a very great saving, and say they can get it for less than $600. Those gentlemen have insisted that they can get good service for less than that amount.

Mr. CANNON. I do not believe it. I do not believe this Government can or ought to get this service for less than $1,000 a year, and that $1,000 a year must come either entirely from the Treasury or a portion of it from the Treasury and a portion of it from the package and express business that the carrier can work up for himself. Now, I think any scheme that we enter upon ought to keep that aggregate compensation in view.

Mr. KLUTTZ. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. CANNON. Yes.

Mr. KLUTTZ. I should like to ask the gentleman if he is not getting satisfactory service on something like a hundred routes in his district now for $600?

Mr. CANNON. I do not know how many routes there are. I do know that I have had frequent applications favoring an increase of salary; and, further, when you pay $1,000 a year in the metropolis for a letter carrier and $850 a year in the smallest city for a letter carrier who works eight hours, and who has no horse nor wagon to keep, I know the man who claims that he can get this service for $600, with all that it means, is either very short-sighted or is not sincere, in my judgment.

Mr. SWANSON. Will the gentleman permit me?

Mr. CANNON. Yes.

Mr. SWANSON. Does the gentleman favor the contract system or the salary system?

Mr. CANNON. I favor the best system, and earnestly and honestly I am a seeker to find the best system.

Mr. SWANSON. The proposition before the House is to let this on the contract system or to fix a salary.

Mr. CANNON. Does my friend contemplate, in addition to the $600, that the carrier on an average will make at least $400 from the public?

Mr. SWANSON. I should like to say to the gentleman that this amendment simply limits what the Government shall pay. There is nothing in this bill which prohibits him from being an express agent. The Department recently issued a rule——

Mr. CANNON. What does it provide?

Mr. SWANSON. Which prohibits him from acting as an express agent and getting additional compensation, but there is nothing in this bill which prohibits it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. CANNON. I wish the gentleman could be recognized just a moment further.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. GRIGGS], a member of the committee.

Mr. GRIGGS. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Illinois to conclude, if he has not concluded.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Illinois may conclude his remarks. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. CANNON. I only want to say this, and I do not want to take much time. I think this House and its membership is friendly to the rural delivery service. I think there is no question about that. I think, further, that we want to do the best we can for this service possible. I think, further, that we want to fix this salary at a sufficient amount to make compensation, and I am trying to find out whether $600 will do it. Now, the gentleman says the carriers are prohibited from doing express business.

Mr. SWANSON. By the rules of the Department; not by anything in this amendment of mine.

Mr. CANNON. Well, let us change the rule, if it ought to be changed. In other words, if we fix it at $600 it is idle and foolishness, unless somewhere, by act or proper regulation, the carrier is to get the other $400.

Mr. KLUTTZ. Will the gentleman offer an amendment making it $1,000?

Mr. CANNON. I do not want to offer that amendment unless I knew how to express it. In other words, I want to say that I am for $1,000 compensation, and I am trying to ascertain by gentlemen on the committee and members of this committee, can such an amendment be offered that will give the carriers $1,000, in part from the public and in part from the Government?

Mr. SWANSON. The gentleman can offer that amendment, if he so desires to do, as the bill is before the committee. I want to ask the gentleman as to what he thinks there ought to be paid in salaries by the Government?

Mr. CANNON. To the carrier?

Mr. SWANSON. To the carrier.

Mr. CANNON. A thousand dollars a year, unless we provide so that he can make the other $400 from the public he serves, and there will never be a good and efficient service for any less money.

Mr. SWANSON. Does the gentleman get good service in his district?

Mr. CANNON. It has just started.

Mr. SWANSON. How long?

Mr. CANNON. Only a year, to any considerable extent.

Mr. SWANSON. Has it not been a year or two, and the service satisfactory?

Mr. CANNON. It has just started; a good service. When we brought Mr. Machen before the Committee on Appropriations two years ago, I think it was, he said that it would be $300 a year, and he could get any number of carriers at that. The salary has now been increased to $600. That service is here, and it is here to stay, and to stay at not less than $1,000 a year. And I am for it and say so, although you are for it and not willing to admit it.

Mr. SWANSON. No. The difference between the gentleman and myself is that I can not get him to say whether he is for the contract system or the salary system.

Mr. CANNON. I am for the contract system if it will bring better results. [Laughter on the Democratic side.]

Mr. SWANSON. Why do you think it will bring the best results?

Mr. CANNON. Oh, gentlemen, laugh. After all I had hope, not being upon this committee, without any information, that they might make a proper provision for this service. I have no pride of opinion about it. If I had power to make it the contract system or the salary system, under proper safeguards, I do not know which I would do without further information.

Mr. SWANSON. Does the gentleman think the contract system would cost more than it does now to supply the service?

Mr. CANNON. The contract system to the carrier?

Mr. SWANSON. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. Yes; $1,000.

Mr. SWANSON. You think he would get $1,000 under a contract?

Mr. CANNON. If it is worth that, he will get it.

Mr. SWANSON. I hope you will plead with the gentleman from California and other gentlemen, who state that it would save money to put it under the contract system.

Mr. CANNON. Oh, if the contract system allows the agent to do a package business, he gets some compensation for that. How much, I do not know. If this system allows the agent to do a package business, he will get some compensation, how much, I do not know; but I will enter into the domain of prophecy now and say if you fix it at $600, you will be compelled to increase it to $1,000, unless the Post-Office Department makes regulations which will allow him to gather up the $400.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia is recognized.

Mr. GRIGGS. Mr. Chairman, I happen to belong to that unfortunate—if I may use the term—majority of this committee which has proposed to this House the contract system so far as the payment of the rural carriers is concerned. We have been denounced by gentlemen who are opposed to that system as desiring to impose upon the farmer a cheap service in contrast with an expensive service in the cities throughout the country. We have been denounced as being in favor of making hard contracts against the farmer boys and in favor of the city carrier.

Yet the gentleman from Virginia, in proposing his amendment this morning, fixes the salary, in the event that the contract system is not adopted, so that the salary of the rural carrier shall not be increased by allowance or otherwise above $600. I do not go as far as the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] on this matter. I believe that an allowance ought to be made, however, for horse hire and for maintenance and equipment. Gentlemen say we would impose a cheap service upon the country. Gentlemen say we are discriminating against people in the country in favor of the people in the city. And yet these very gentlemen insist that under their system proposed by them the law must unequivocally say that there must be no increase over $600 for the rural carrier.

Mr. KLUTTZ. Does the gentleman want to offer an amendment to make it a thousand dollars?

Mr. GRIGGS. No, sir.

Mr. KLUTTZ. Did not the gentleman contend that it was more expensive under a salary than it would be under a contract system?

Mr. GRIGGS. I did.

Mr. KLUTTZ. Then why does the gentleman argue that $600 is too small a salary?

Mr. GRIGGS. It shows the inconsistency of the gentlemen who oppose the contract system.

Mr. KLUTTZ. I think the gentleman is showing his inconsistency and the inconsistency of the gentlemen on the other side.

Mr. GRIGGS. I am glad that the inconsistency of gentlemen is not always dependent upon the opinion of my friend from North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I was going on to say that in either event the fixing of the salary for carriers shows what the Post-Office Committee of the House has insisted upon all the time, that the diversity in districts in different parts of the country will demand different salaries. One route can be carried for one sum and another for another, and yet it would be impossible for the Post-Office Department to agree upon any regulation that would fix different salaries in different sections.

In a country without hills, in a level country, a route might be carried for less than $600. In a hilly country, with rough roads, it might cost more than $600. The position of the opponents of the contract system here this morning but clinches the position of the Post-Office Committee on that question. We assert that under the contract system the service and pay for it could be regulated to fit the different districts and different sections and different routes throughout the United States without any discrimination.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Could not you do it under the law as it is now?

Mr. GRIGGS. No.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. In a hilly country they could shorten the route and do it. Down in my country they make it 18 miles if it is a rough, hard road.

Mr. GRIGGS. All I have to say in reply to that is that if the gentlemen who talk about frauds in the star routes will open the door to do this, they will open the door for fraud wider and bigger than any ever was opened to fraud in the United States in the history of our legislation.

Mr. CANDLER. Does the gentleman from Georgia believe that under the contract system you could secure efficient service for less than $600?

Mr. GRIGGS. I think some routes could be carried for less than $600.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Georgia has expired.

Mr. GRIGGS. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Chairman, for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent that he may proceed for five minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. GRIGGS. Now, Mr. Chairman, in reply to the question of my friend from Mississippi, I say that some routes can be carried for less than $600 and others may cost more. But my friend from Mississippi must realize that whenever a maximum salary is fixed by Congress, the Department will pay the maximum salary everywhere in all districts, in all the States, on all of the routes.

Mr. CANDLER. Do they not regulate it now in the Department by making some routes shorter, and paying for a route of 15 miles $400; a route of 20 miles, $500, and 25 miles, $600?

Mr. GRIGGS. I will say that after being six years on the Post-Office Committee, and keeping a close watch on these things, I never heard of a difference of salary in the rural free delivery until this debate came up in the House.

Mr. CANDLER. The Department publishes it in the regulations.

Mr. GRIGGS. In my district there is the same salary for every carrier on every route, and I presume a like condition prevails elsewhere in the United States. They do have what they call half routes, if my friend will permit me. These carriers carry the mail one day, and then the next day they omit it; and then carry it the next day, making an every-other-day service. They have routes like that, but as far as a route of 15 or 10 miles is concerned, I never heard of it until the debate began on this bill.

Mr. BARTLETT. The rules and regulations in my country do not permit a route for less than 20 miles.

Mr. GRIGGS. Under the rules as submitted to us and as carried out—and I presume in every other district it is the same, as my friend from Georgia says—no route can be established unless it comes up to the rules and regulations which say there must be 100 families and the route must be at least 20 miles long.

Mr. OTEY. Does not the Post-Office Department say in its regulations that upon a route of 15 miles long $400 shall be paid?

Mr. GRIGGS. I have never seen such a regulation.

Mr. CANDLER. I have read it in the regulations.

Mr. GRIGGS. It must be a new regulation.

Mr. CANDLER. No, I read it a year ago—last summer. It is provided that for 15 miles the pay shall be $300; for 20 miles, $400; for 25 miles, $500, and since then the new regulation allowing $600 has been made. There has been an increase allowed of $100 for each 5 miles of travel. That is the regulation of the Department.

Mr. GRIGGS. Then it has never been put into effect in the Second district of Georgia.

Mr. CANDLER. In your district have you had any difficulty in getting carriers at the present salary, $500, and do you believe there will be any difficulty of that kind in the future?

Mr. GRIGGS. We have been able to get them all along.

Mr. CANDLER. And I presume there have been more applications than you could satisfy.

Mr. GRIGGS. All I am trying to show is that the Post-Office Committee are not the only people in the United States who favor a cheap service.

Mr. LATIMER. Will the gentleman allow me a word? If we are trying to arrive at the most equitable method of payment possible for these carriers, why should we not put the compensation on the basis of $25 a mile? Then for 32 miles the pay would be $800; for 24 miles, $600. This would provide for short routes now in existence. In my district there are a great many routes of 19, 20, 21, 28, or 31 miles. If we fix the pay at $600, the carrier who travels 31 miles gets only $600, and the carrier traveling only 19 miles gets just as much. I think, therefore, that the most equitable proposition that can be made is to fix this pay upon the basis of $25 a mile. In that way the rate of pay can apply equitably to short routes and long routes, to routes in mountainous or in level parts of the country, to routes where the roads are bad or routes where they are good.

Mr. GRIGGS. The gentleman must remember I have only one minute more.

The CHAIRMAN. Half a minute.

Mr. GRIGGS. There are various methods of computing the service of the carriers on these different routes. The mileage basis, I admit, seems to be an equitable one. But if you are to adopt a rule exactly equitable, the compensation ought to be based upon the number of hours required to go over the route, because——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GRIGGS. I ask unanimous consent to finish my sentence.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that his time may be extended for one minute. Is there objection?

Mr. HILL. I will not object if we can take a vote when the gentleman has concluded his remarks. I make the point of order that the debate on this amendment has been exhausted long, long ago.

Mr. BARTLETT. I ask that the request of my colleague [Mr. GRIGGS] be put.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. GRIGGS] desires one minute more.

Mr. HILL. I will withdraw my point of order to allow the gentleman to finish his sentence.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. GRIGGS. Do I understand, Mr. Chairman, that I have the floor?

The CHAIRMAN. For one minute.

Mr. GRIGGS. The mileage basis of pay would be very equitable provided all the routes throughout the country were exactly similar; but some routes are hilly, some level, some rough, some smooth; some have macadamized roads, some have mud roads. Therefore I do not think the mileage basis, if applied throughout the country, would be equitable. Compensation based upon the time required to go over the route would be the only equitable system, and if some gentleman would offer an amendment like that he would probably find some of us who are against the salary system supporting his amendment.

A MEMBER. And even that system would not be absolutely equitable.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee addressed the Chair.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I make the point of order that debate is exhausted.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I move to amend by striking out the last word. Mr. Chairman, I desire to reply to some of the questions of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] propounded to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] on the question of salary and an efficiency of the service under the rural service at $600 per annum.

Mr. Chairman, even at $500 the Department has had numerous petitions from persons who wanted to be employed as carriers on rural routes already established or about to be established in my Congressional district. I have had, and the Department has had, no trouble in getting intelligent, capable, honest farmers, or country boys to carry the mail under the rural system over the hills, across the mountains, across the Cumberland River, indeed, throughout my great and historic district, at $500, or at the salaries that have heretofore existed.

I have received no complaint from them of the salaries they have been receiving. The service has been entirely satisfactory in this respect, and I have heard of no other kind of complaints that have not been easily remedied since June, 1900, when the system was begun in my district. Let us compare now the rates received under the old star-route contract system that are still in existence and the new star-route contract system that began about a year ago, which requires the carrier to live on the route he carries, and the rates or salaries paid to the rural carriers. Here are the official figures, and no one denies that the old and the new star route have been and are still clamored for as business or paying investments. What do the official figures show we are paying under the three systems?

We pay under the "old star route 3.83 cents per mile traveled;" under the "new star-route contract we pay 5.72 cents per mile traveled," an increase of "0.68 cent, or 13 per cent," while we pay the rural carrier per mile per year, or 313 working days, traveling 25 miles a day, or 7,825 miles annually, the sum of 0.0767 cent, making a difference of less than 2 cents more for the rural service than for the new-contract star-route service.

Mr. LOUD. I will state, for the information of the gentleman, that the average is less than 22.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I am taking the average as 25 miles, the usual number of miles to each rural route. The routes are laid off as near as can be to 25 miles in length, the aim being to get 125 people on each route. The figures which I have used are official. You can find the amounts paid for the star-route service which I have stated at page 209 of the Postmaster-General's report for 1900, while the calculation as to the rural route anyone can make, which shows that we pay 1.95 more per mile for the rural service than we do for the new contract service which shall hereafter obtain in the star-route service.

So there must be something more meritorious in the rural system than in the new star-route contract system, because there is very little difference between the salaries paid in the two services. We find no fault of the rural service, and we do of the contract service. As I stated here a few days ago, there were 2,600 defalcations in the contract system, about 700 in one month, in 1900 and 2,900 last year. In addition to this direct monetary loss—because the bonds sued on in these defalcations proved to be practically worthless—we have under the contract system a bad service, at least an inadequate service, that is unsatisfactory, while the rural service meets the demands of the farmer.

There seems to be no trouble to get contractors under the contract system at about 5½ cents per mile, but we do get an unsatisfactory service, and we have had, and I can not see that we will have any trouble to get carriers under the rural service at about 7 cents per mile, but we do get a satisfactory service.

Let us see how many rural carriers we have. On the 15th of February we had 7,155; on March 15 we will have 545 more; on April 1, 326 more; on April 15 we will have 16 more. These figures are official. I procured them yesterday. This does not look like we can not get rural carriers at $600, does it? In addition to this, there are now pending 7,413 petitions for the rural service, while 1,010 cases have been refused. There have been over 16,000 applications for this service.

So it would seem ridiculous to state that we can not get in the future a splendid rural service all over this country at the rate of $600 a year.

I do not object, in fact, I favor letting the carriers take bundles, etc., and receive compensation just as any other carrier under such regulations as the Department or as Congress may make. The carrier can make an extra honest penny this way without, I think, interfering with his official duties. He is deprived now of this privilege, I am told, by some departmental rule. But Congress can override this rule and give the carrier this right. I shall favor such an amendment to this bill. The Postmaster-General gives the star-route carrier the right to carry freight, and I see no reason why the rural carrier should be denied the privilege.

Under the present system the Postmaster-General has varied the salaries paid according to the services rendered. In a short route he has paid a small salary, commensurate, it seems, with the service rendered. He has increased it where the travel is hard, over mountains, or in river countries. The service, or rather the salary, has been based upon, it seems, the kind and amount of service and not so much upon the miles traveled. Both, however, can be and should be considered in adjusting the question of salaries.

Mr. SIMS. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Yes; certainly.

Mr. SIMS. This is a practical question. I am not seeking to involve my friend in anything. Suppose the carriers in the country parts of your district request an increase of salary equal to the city carriers, would you not vote for it?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. With the present lights before me, I believe they will be satisfied and will make money at the rate of $600 a year, and will give us a splendid service. Otherwise they would not accept or remain in the service. I have had no complaints at a $600 salary. The service may be worth more and when it proves to be and the matter is shown to me by petition or evidence, why then it will be time enough for me to decide as to whether or not I would vote to increase it. I have implicit faith in the honesty, the patriotism, and the good citizenship of the country people, and I do not believe that they would insist as a body upon unnecessary salaries or anything else unnecessary for their welfare.

I am the farmer's friend; I have stood by him and aided him in his just and legitimate demands, and I shall continue to do so, and I shall continue to support all measures that tend to alleviate the adverse condition that naturally surrounds him; and I want to say here that I utterly repudiate the accusation that the farmers or rural carriers will resolve themselves into an "army" and march here, or inveigh against Congress by petition or letter or otherwise, and make unrighteous, unjust, or unnecessary demands upon Congress in reference to this rural service.

They have made demands on Congress, and they did it by petition, as they had the right to do. And some of their demands have been granted. But the relief came as the petitions did—legitimately, in decency and order. No one was hurt. Congress was not terrorized. Why, then, with such a record as this, knowing the farmers as we do, should we fear them? Why should we not trust them? Why discredit their good citizenship, their good morals, their high and patriotic purposes? For one I do not and I shall not.

But suppose they do petition Congress. Suppose everyone that we shall appoint or that is appointed will do so, the outside estimate of the total number of carriers that will take the place of each and every one of our star-route contracts will be from forty-five to fifty thousand. Will they demand a higher salary than the star-route contractors? They are already receiving nearly 2 cents more per mile than the contractors, and we see that there are thousands who are glad to get the job, and many of them have served for over two years—some since 1896—and they have not resigned, and but few die.

Again, the rural service is reaching out to supply a daily mail service to 21,000,000 farmers or country people. The Department informed me—that is, Mr. Machen—yesterday that they had figured the cost to serve each one of this 21,000,000 with a daily mail under the rural system at a gross cost of 75 cents per capita; that is, we would pay to serve these 21,000,000 $15,750,000. This sum, he further stated, was to be credited with the "savings" from the discontinuance of star-route contracts and post-offices and increased revenues from the rural system.

The increase from the rural system last year was 11 per cent, while there has been an annual gain under this system of from 8 to 10 per cent. Under the nondelivery Presidential offices the gain has been 3½ per cent and in the strictly rural systems 2½ per cent. The Postmaster-General states that last year there was a saving of $173,404.41 from discontinued star-route contracts and $120,221.43 from post-offices discontinued, making a "saving," as he said, of $293,625.84.

Last year, then, we had to credit the output for the rural service $293,625.84, an increased revenue to the amount of 11 per cent and a splendid and satisfactory service to the farmer. The Postmaster-General says in his last report that under the free-delivery system in cities we are serving 32,000,000 people at a cost of 50 cents each per annum; that on July 1 last we had 866 cities thus served with two mails per day collected by 16,389 carriers, and we paid about $15,000,000 for the service, or perhaps a little more, while our rural output for our postal service was nearly $119,000,000—the revenues nearly $112,000,000.

So to serve 32,000,000 of our people we paid this amount—$15,000,000—while to serve the country people, numbering 21,000,000, we will pay about the same amount, to wit, $15,750,000, less the increased revenue and the saving from star routes and post-offices discontinued. Is it but just and fair, if we can do this for the country people, that we should do so? We are serving now in the country about 3,500,000 people with about 7,700 rural carriers, and no member of this House opposes this country service.

Some fear it will cost too much. The official figures which I have shown do not support this contention. And even if it did, we should not despoil the system by placing it under the star-route service that is so objectionable and unsatisfactory. Then, why discriminate against the country people, who support the cities which have free delivery, or the towns which have a convenient service, though not free? Can the cities do without the support of the country? No; they never will. The interests of the two peoples are mutual. The success of one is felt by both; so are the reverses.

Last year the star-route service cost $5,204,416.86, and still the farmers were dissatisfied, and naturally so, because the service was uncertain—unsatisfactory—and a great body of the farmers were not reached daily. Last year we had 22,797 star routes, with a total length of 267,357 miles. The annual travel necessary to perform service over these routes amounted to 134,404,541 miles. Multiply this number by 7 cents, the rate per mile to the rural carriers, and we get what the cost to the Government would be gross when the star-route service is entirely succeeded by the rural service, the amount being $9,408,317.87.

I take it for granted that the departmental or clerk hire and incidental expense will be about the same under the contract service turned into a rural service as under the rural service as it now exists. So this expense is a stand-off, we can say.

We then see that by paying 75 cents gross per capita to serve 21,000,000 people (that are now in part served or insufficiently served, certainly unsatisfactorily served, under the star-route service) they would be satisfactorily served by the rural service at a gross cost of $15,000,000. This sum is to be credited as is shown by the increased revenues of the rural service and the saving from the star-route service, which we see costs over $5,000,000 annually, and certainly this sum is to be credited by the output saved by the discontinued star-route services and post-offices succeeded by the rural service.

So, assuming that these figures are correct—and my calculations each are based upon official figures—the expense of the rural system, when it partially succeeds the star-route service, or when it entirely succeeds the star-route service, need not scare us from undertaking to perpetuate the rural system in a safe and satisfactory manner, which seems to be the case as it is now.

It can be changed and improved from time to time, and doubtless will be done. It is a new system with us. It is in its infancy. It will doubtless be perfected from time to time, but with the evidence before me, I can not see now my way clear to abandon a service so satisfactory and beneficial to the farmer by substituting the contract system, that has heretofore proven so unsatisfactory both to the Government and to the patrons of the same. It has doubtless been used for political purposes, which is wrong, but should we destroy this system, deny the farmer, for that reason? No. But we should legislate against such abuses and restrain and restrict such abuses as far as possible, which I hope will in the future be done. Now that it is placed under the civil-service laws, we have it placed on the statute books.

Mr. BROMWELL. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I make the point of order that the debate on this amendment is exhausted.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee makes a pro forma amendment.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. That amendment has been withdrawn by the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. BROMWELL. No; it has not, and it is not going to be until I get through. I am speaking to his amendment. Mr. Chairman, for the information of the House—because I do not believe one member out of fifty in this House has read the hearings before the Post-Office Committee, in which Mr. Machen testified—I want to read a portion of what occurred in those hearings.

I want to read a portion of these hearings for your benefit. The question was asked by the chairman of the Post-Office Committee of Mr. Johnson, the First Assistant Postmaster-General:

You have gone from $300 to $400, and now from $500 to $600, in three years. What evidence have you now that $600 is adequate?

Mr. Johnson replied:

Because we have gotten along reasonably well with $500.

The CHAIRMAN. You tell me that they are resigning at the rate of 8 a day, or 2,500 a year. Do you think $100 additional would be so much more that it would keep them in the service?

Mr. JOHNSON. I think so. That seems to be about the estimate we have from all sources.

The CHAIRMAN. Whom do you get your estimates from?

Mr. Machen answered:

Last August the Postmaster-General issued an order which practically debarred the rural carriers of any perquisites that they were accustomed to get before that.

The CHAIRMAN. What perquisites—prohibiting them from doing anything else?

Mr. MACHEN. From acting as agents for express companies, and such things.

Now, I want to read the next paragraph particularly, for the purpose of vindicating Mr. LOUD'S position in this matter:

The CHAIRMAN. Then let me say to you that $600 is not an adequate salary and I would not advocate it. If a man shall devote his whole time to the service of the Government, furnishing a horse and cart, which will cost him about $250, I say $600 is not enough. I don't believe any Government official, knowing the facts in the case, should come here and urge Congress to enact legislation that will give a man a salary of not more than $850 a year net for all of his time. I am surprised that you can do that.

The First Assistant Postmaster-General replied:

Throughout many country districts they won't earn any more than that.

And Mr. Machen added;

These same fellows will get $3, $4, or $5 a week in a country store, and work much longer hours.

The chairman of the committee [Mr. LOUD] remarked:

Why, some one told me the other day that we were getting schoolmasters and such high-class men as that to perform this service.

Mr. JOHNSON. Through Tennessee they tell us that a good many schoolmasters are employed as rural carriers, and in the New England States also.

The CHAIRMAN. Congress will not say to all these men: We want you to devote your time exclusively to our service for $850 a year, net. Such a proposition is not worthy the consideration of men. I am pretty emphatic in that, and I have been regarded as a close figurer on salaries. I am surprised that any Government official should advocate it, $850 salary for a man to do this work, devoting all of his time.

Mr. MACHEN. In most cases we will get men that own their own farms, that have their own horses, or if they are school-teachers they have their horses, and they can afford to do this work with the equipment that they already have much cheaper than a man who has to go to a livery stable and hire a horse, or buy one and go into the business of running this route.

The CHAIRMAN. You will not deny, Mr. Machen, that, taking the country as a whole, the keeping of sufficient horses to perform this work, and the wagons, and the maintenance of the horses, will average at least $225 a year?

Mr. MACHEN. Not in the country. I will keep horses in Washington in my stable for $8 a month for feed.

The CHAIRMAN. Well, the horses have to be curried and fed and taken care of, and the wear and tear on the horse, and the interest on the money invested——

Mr. Machen interrupted to say:

They all feed their own horses; they have the feed on the farms.

Mr. SWANSON. The school-teacher, on the average, gets about $35 a month in my State.

Mr. GRIGGS. What is the average pay of a school-teacher in California, Mr. Loud?

The CHAIRMAN. Fifty or sixty dollars a month; not less than fifty for women.

Mr. GRIGGS. I doubt if the average is over $40 a month for the United States. Now, the horses don't cost over $60 or $75 apiece; you can get them in Georgia for that.

Mr. MACHEN. I do not think it costs the carriers in Carroll County who own their horses $150 per annum.

The CHAIRMAN. You have the sworn statement of Mr. Hill that the care of a horse costs $300 a year. All of those items he presented in a sworn statement regarding the conditions in the State of Connecticut. Your salary must be adequate for the maximum man. If a man can work in Georgia for $200 a year, he must necessarily have $700 or $800 in the State of Massachusetts, or in Connecticut or Illinois, or in other higher-priced sections of the country. Will not the man in Georgia demand as much salary as the man in Connecticut?

Mr. MACHEN. That same condition applies to other service. Nobody will contend that it costs as much to live in Toledo Ohio, as it does in New York, the salary being the same in each case.

The CHAIRMAN. You make a distinction on the size of cities. You can not make any distinction here, because that ought not to cut any figure. You can not say that a man in Connecticut shall get $600 a year, and that a man in Georgia shall get $400. You must pay the maximum salary.

Mr. MACHEN. That is right; you must fix one salary for the whole country.

Mr. GRIGGS. Twelve and one-half per cent on the cost of horse and wagon would pay for wear and tear.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this amendment be closed.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia moves that all debate on this paragraph be now concluded.

Mr. CANNON. Is that on the gentleman's amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. This is on the paragraph and amendment.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I will ask the gentleman not to do that. This is an important question, whether we shall enter into the contract system or shall continue the salary system.

Mr. SWANSON. I make the point of order. I shall insist on closing debate. We have had a week's debate and there has been ample time to discuss it.

Mr. SHAFROTH. We have not been discussing the amendment for a week.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia moves that all debate be closed on the paragraph and amendment.

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Division, Mr. Chairman.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes, 73; noes, 49.

So debate was closed on the paragraph and amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee will be withdrawn.

Mr. CANNON. A parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CANNON. Is it now in order to move an amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia, fixing the salary at $1,000?

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment of the gentleman from Virginia, if the Chair recollects it aright, does not fix the salary at $600, but simply decides that it shall include allowance, if the Chair is correct. After that amendment is disposed of, it will be in order to move to change the amount.

Mr. CANNON. Then there will be an opportunity hereafter when that amendment can be offered.

The CHAIRMAN. There will be an opportunity after the vote is taken on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, on the substitute that I presented, if I may have unanimous consent, I desire to make a request concerning it. It is simply a matter of interpretation or the artistic form of the language, and I ask unanimous consent to withdraw the substitute for the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent that he may withdraw the substitute which he offered for the amendment of the gentleman from Virginia. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and the substitute is withdrawn.

Mr. CANNON. I ask that the amendment as it is now be read.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment as it now is will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 2, line 8, insert after the word "at" the word "salary;" also after the words "per annum" in line 8, "and no other or further allowance shall be made to said carrier."

Mr. CANNON. So that the amendment if it is adopted will read as follows.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read it as if adopted.

The Clerk read as follows:

Carriers at salaries not exceeding $600 per annum, and no other or further allowance or salary shall be made to said carriers.

Mr. CANNON. Now, I offer an amendment to the amendment, if it is in order now.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the words "six hundred" and insert "one thousand."

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair on first blush is of opinion that it will not be in order now, because the gentleman's amendment leaves the text exactly as it now is in that respect and simply amends it in other respects, and it will not change that phase of the bill. The amendment which the gentleman from Illinois desires would be in order after the one of the gentleman from Virginia has been voted upon. The question is upon the amendment which the Clerk has reported.

The question was taken, and the amendment agreed to.

Mr. CANNON. Now, Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out "six hundred," as the text is now left by the amendment of the gentleman from Virginia, and insert in line 8 the words "one thousand."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois moves to strike out the words "six hundred" and insert the words "one thousand."

Mr. TOMPKINS of New York. Mr. Chairman, I rise to offer an amendment to the amendment. My amendment is to substitute the words "eight hundred" for the words "one thousand;" so that it will read "eight hundred" instead of "one thousand."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York offers an amendment to the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois by inserting "eight hundred" instead of the words "one thousand."

Mr. MAHON. A parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MAHON. Is this debatable?

The CHAIRMAN. It is not debatable.

The question was taken on the amendment to the amendment, and it was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is upon the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois, substituting for the words "six hundred" the words "one thousand."

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. CANNON. I ask for a division, Mr. Chairman.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 25, noes 107.

So the amendwent was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is upon the committee amendment.

Mr. HILL. A parliamentary inquiry. As I understand the question now, it is this: This amendment on the part of the committee strikes out the whole clause relating to salaries, so that those who want to vote to fix the salary system will vote no on this amendment, and those who want to vote for the contract system will vote aye——

Mr. LOUD. I raise the point of order against gentlemen debating the question.

Mr. HILL. Am I right?

The CHAIRMAN. The question is upon the adoption of the committee amendment, which is to strike out the words which have already been amended by the amendment of the gentleman from Virginia and insert the word "hereafter."

Mr. FLEMING. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment to that section as amended now by the vote taken on the amendment of the gentleman from Virginia.

The CHAIRMAN. That is in order.

The Clerk read as follows:

But carriers shall not be prohibited from doing an express-package business, provided it does not interfere with the discharge of their official duties.

The question was considered, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LATIMER. Mr. Chairman, I want to move an amendment to the amendment by striking out the words "six hundred dollars" and inserting the words "twenty-five dollars a mile." I want to say to the House——

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is exhausted on this paragraph. The gentleman moves to amend by striking out the words "six hundred dollars" and inserting in place thereof the words "twenty-five dollars a mile."

The amendment was considered, and rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is now on the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was considered, and rejected.

Mr. LOUD. Now, Mr. Chairman, I would like to know how that paragraph stands. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The committee amendment was rejected.

Mr. LOUD. And so no salary is fixed?

Mr. SWANSON. Oh, yes; the salary is $600, and no further allowance can be made. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Chairman. The committee moved to strike out of the bill the words "carriers at not exceeding $600 per annum." Before the motion to strike out was put, I offered a further amendment that no further allowance should be made, etc.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state his understanding of the situation. The bill stands exactly as originally reported by the committee and as printed.

Mr. SWANSON. With the amendment adopted by the committee?

The CHAIRMAN. Certainly.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, in order that there may be no misunderstanding as to how the bill now stands, I ask unanimous consent that the Chair instruct the Clerk to read the paragraph to the committee as it now stands.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the paragraph as amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

Carriers at a salary not exceeding $600 per annum, and no other or further allowance or salary shall be paid to said carriers, and the carriers shall not be prohibited from doing an express-package business, provided it does not interfere with the discharge of their official duties: And provided, That hereafter all mail service on rural free-delivery mail routes shall be performed by carriers designated, etc.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the proviso succeeding the amendment, which is contained in lines 9, 10, 11, and 12 on page 2.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Connecticut will either repeat his amendment or submit it in writing.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. Chairman, before we proceed further I want to submit an amendment at the proper time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Connecticut has offered an amendment.

Mr. HILL. Would it be proper, Mr. Chairman, to move to strike out the next paragraph on the rest of the page and the top of page 3, or can I only move to strike out the paragraph that has been read?

The CHAIRMAN. The only paragraph before the House is the one that has been read.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Connecticut may be allowed to include in his motion all that portion of the bill that refers to the contract service, because that is the proposition before the House, and there is no necessity for taking half a dozen votes upon the same subject.

Mr. LOUD. The gentleman can not get unanimous consent to do that. We have plenty of time. The Clerk will read the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Connecticut.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by striking out lines 9, 10, 11, and 12 on page 2.

Mr. LACEY. Has that paragraph been read, Mr. Chairman?

Mr. HILL. It has.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Connecticut moves to strike out lines 9 to 12, inclusive, on page 2.

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. LOUD. I demand a division, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry. As I understood, we were considering down to the words "per annum." I have an amendment that I desire to offer to lines 9, 10, 11, and 12.

The CHAIRMAN. If the gentleman from Iowa has an amendment to those lines, it will be in order before a motion to strike out.

Mr. LACEY. I did not understand that debate had been closed on those lines.

The CHAIRMAN. The paragraph extends down to the end of line 12, and debate has been closed on the paragraph.

Mr. LACEY. I do not want to offer my amendment unless I have a chance to say something about it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California demands a division of the vote on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Connecticut.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 97, noes 40.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HILL. Now, Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to strike out all the remainder of the bill down to line 19, page 3.

Mr. LACEY. I object, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. PADGETT. I desire to offer an amendment to the paragraph as it stands.

The CHAIRMAN. The paragraph has been struck out.

Mr. PADGETT. But I believe the first clause was left. To that part of the paragraph I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

That hereafter all honorably discharged ex-Confederate soldiers shall have the same privileges and preferences of employment as rural free-delivery mail carriers as are now, under existing law and regulations of the Post-Office Department, accorded to honorably discharged Union soldiers.

Mr. BROMWELL. I would like to amend that by inserting, after "ex-Confederate soldiers," the words "and colored men."

A MEMBER. They can become carriers under the contract system. [Laughter.]

Mr. HILL. I move to lay both amendments on the table.

The CHAIRMAN. That motion is not in order in Committee of the Whole. The question is on the adoption of the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BROMWELL] to the amendment of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. PADGETT].

Mr. PADGETT. I desire to speak on my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate has been exhausted.

The question being taken on Mr. BROMWELL'S amendment to the amendment, it was not agreed to; there being—ayes 56, noes 62.

The question being then taken on the amendment of Mr. PADGETT, it was rejected, there being on a division (called for by Mr. PADGETT)—ayes 34, noes 76.

The Clerk read the next paragraph of the bill, as follows:

First. That before any person shall be designated to carry the mail on any mail rural free-delivery route, the Postmaster-General shall cause an advertisement to be posted for not less than ten days, in a conspicuous place accessible to the public, in the post-office from which the mail is to be carried, inviting proposals, in such form as he may prescribe, for the service to be performed. The service shall be awarded to the lowest bidder who shall furnish evidence satisfactory to the Postmaster-General that such bidder is a legal and actual resident of the district or territory in which the proposed service is to be performed; that he is a reliable and trustworthy person, of good moral character, able to read and write, and having sufficient intelligence and ability to properly perform the service, and who shall tender sufficient guaranties that he will personally perform acceptable service; but the Postmaster-General may reject all proposals submitted under any advertisement.

The amendment reported by the committee was read, as follows:

Add at the end of the paragraph the following:

"Provided, That no person shall be awarded a contract for more than one route under this paragraph."

Mr. SWANSON. I move to amend by striking out the paragraph just read.

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. I wish to offer an amendment which I think takes precedence of the motion of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON].

The CHAIRMAN. Before the question is taken on striking out this paragraph, it is in order to offer amendments to perfect it.

Mr. SWANSON. I recognize that amendments must first be voted on before the question is taken on my motion to strike out.

The CHAIRMAN. The motion to strike out will be regarded as pending.

Mr. SWANSON. I claim the right to be recognized for five minutes on my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is entitled to the floor.

Mr. SWANSON. I yield my time to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BURNETT].

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, the rural-delivery system is yet in its infancy, and I desire to say that no law passed by Congress in many years has been more in the interest of the masses of toilers in the country than this.

It is the best educator for the people in the rural districts that has been attempted by the Government, and I am opposed to beginning thus early to meddle with a system which is doing so much good.

I have only a few routes in my district, yet wherever they are established the effect is soon apparent.

The first route established in the district was from my home town of Gadsden, a little less than two years ago. The carrier, Mr. Sutton, is an intelligent farmer, who is as proud of his route as the engineer becomes of his engine, and has great pride in building it up.

At the anniversary of its establishment he had a little entertainment at his son's house and invited several friends to be present, and I was one of his honored guests. In the meantime I had secured two other routes from the same place, and the carriers were both present at the old gentleman's reception, both of them men of reputation and intelligence. The old man entertained the party by detailing some facts concerning his route.

Among other things he showed that there were daily papers being taken by citizens along the route, into whose homes a daily paper had never regularly gone before. He showed that the circulation of weekly papers had more than doubled along his route within the year. He showed that the correspondence of the people had greatly increased. He showed that he, himself, was encouraging the people along his route to take and read the papers.

Now, Mr. Chairman, if that had been some underpaid, ignorant carrier, under the contract system, who was carrying this mail at starvation prices, do you suppose he would ever have raised his voice to encourage the people thus to extend and enlarge their facilities for education?

On the contrary, with his poor horse and his rattletrap cart, he would have discouraged them, in order to make his own burden lighter.

Mr. Chairman, I believe that this work was in part undertaken by our Government for the purpose of aiding in the education of the people. If so, this very purpose will be largely promoted by having well-paid, intelligent carriers, who will take pride in aiding this purpose of a splendid system.

So far as the people are concerned, it is working well under the present arrangement. Then shall we tear it down merely because it is perverted to political ends in some sections?

The great masses of the people are not raising their voices against the partisanship in the appointment of carriers. Then is it right that it shall be torn down and upon its ruins another system of at least doubtful efficiency be built up merely to aid the waning fortunes of some politician?

The partisan discriminations that gentlemen have referred to in this debate are wrong and should not be made. But at last, unless the people for whose benefit the system was established are crying out against such partisanship, are they badly hurt by its existence?

If partisan carriers are impairing the efficiency of their service by any injustice to members of any party, then, Mr. Chairman, that matter, by proper charges, protests, and proofs, can, under this bill, be easily remedied. If they are guilty of pernicious interference in politics, that, too, can be corrected.

But let us not undertake to visit against a wise and wholesome law the infractions of that law.

Is it true that the advocates of this bill see that the people are becoming informed and will become more and more so, and for that reason desire to destroy the source of this information and wreck this means of that development? I hope not; and yet I believe that the effect of this bill, if passed, will be right along that line.

Mr. Chairman, I want to see my people educated. Without the education of the boys and girls—the young men and maidens of my country—I see before them the dark clouds of adversity and financial trouble rising higher and higher as the years come and go. The time was when the old farmer could get along with the meager requirements of the three-months' school attended between the crop seasons; but in these days, when every article that he buys and every article that he sells is controlled by trusts or by the gambling boards, the only way in which he can enable his son to cope with them is by putting in the head of that son that which the execution in the hands of the sheriff can not take from him.

Let no cog be placed in the wheels of such development. Let a just government that takes a just pride in an intelligent citizenship not lay its heavy hand upon a system which, if fostered, will prove a benefaction to the toiling masses remote from the crowded marts of trade.

Gentlemen cry out that if the present system of paying the carriers is continued it will take an enormous sum to support it. Some tell us that one hundred millions will soon be required to support the system. So far, it has not approached that mark very rapidly. But suppose it does. The money is going to be spent somehow, and should it so arouse the fears of those who keep watch at the Treasury door, because a few paltry dollars of it is beginning to drop into the slender wallet of the farmers of my country? Better spend it that way than to be squandering it by the millions in shooting Christianity into Filipinos who are crying for freedom. Better let it go into the pockets of the farmer boy who rises with the sun and goes whistling to carry the letters to the eager neighbors along his way than to pay it into salaries to the datos with which to practice polygamy in our distant isles. Better let it go to pay some sun-browned son of toil to deliver sweet love-laden missives to the country lass than to pour it into the coffer of the trusts.

You pay your Philippine governor $20,000 per year, and yet you complain to pay the struggling carrier the paltry sum of $600 per year from which to furnish his cart and horse and his own hard toil.

Gentlemen argue that there will be a large deficit in the Post-Office Department; that it will not be self-sustaining. Well, let the deficit come. We have had a deficit every year in that Department since 1860 except one. The burdens of taxation are upon the people anyway, and if it is spent in affording better facilities for education and mental development, in order to prepare them to meet the changed conditions that confront the masses, I say let the appropriation grow and increase until at every cottage doorstep the foot of the mail carrier may be heard every working day in the year.

The Treasurer's report to-day shows an available surplus of more than $175,000,000. Take off $70,000,000 by cutting out the war revenue and we still have over $100,000,000, and that vast sum increasing every year.

The Republican party votes down or smothers every proposition looking to the reduction of the burdens of tariff taxation. In order to promote and encourage trusts, they propose to keep those taxes at the high-water mark. So great has this infamy become that many of the things purchased by our consumers are sold to the English farmer cheaper than to the American, and with unblushing audacity they smile while their victim complains at this injustice, and ridicule his cry for relief.

Gentlemen, we see no relief to come during the present Administration, and if the money must be piled higher and still higher in the coffers of the trusts and in the Treasury of the Government, in the name of common justice I beg you to let some of it flow back to the relief of the people from whom you have extorted it.

I would have favored the proposition of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] to increase the pay of the carrier to $1,000 but that I believe it was put on for the purpose of loading down the bill and defeating it.

Again in reply to the threat of a deficit, the Postmaster-General in his report shows that the deficit for 1903 will not be $3,000,000, which is less than a third of what it was three years ago.

With this little deficit what untold benefits will come to the 6,000,000 of people who each day step to their gates and take their mail from the hands of the carrier as he passes, or from the boxes near by.

The bill seeks to let the routes to the lowest practicable bidder, with certain restrictions. Gentlemen, when you do this you have destroyed the efficiency of our system. Every day the people in some country neighborhood or another have to suffer from the inefficiency of underpaid carriers, whose cart is breaking down or whose horse is giving out or dying.

But a few days ago I received a letter from one of my constituents asking me to see if the Post-Office Department could not help him to collect his ferriage from a delinquent star-route carrier. The carrier had bid off a double daily route from the railroad to the county seat of one of my counties for about $138, and had contracted to pay $150 for his ferriage. He expected to supplement by carrying passengers and freight to and from the railroad, but this would not work, and he soon found himself unable to even pay his ferriage.

This is but one instance among many of a similar character.

In the cities our friends have their mails delivered inside their doors two or three times a day by carriers who receive from $800 to $1,000 per year, working eight hours each day.

Should one of these carriers fail for a few days to deliver the mails promptly, what a howl would be raised. Yet the Representative of the city constituency thinks it a matter of no importance if the people in the country and the smaller towns are the victims of the underpaid carrier along their routes.

Gentlemen, if you honestly want to economize, why is it that you always want to begin among the poor and the oppressed? This is no cry of demagoguery, but is the statement of a solemn truth. Whenever it is desired to better the condition of the toiling masses in the country by holding out to them some of the benefactions of a great Government, some man begins to cry out economy, and if there be one who would stand between them and the impending blow, he is taunted with being a demagogue.

This rural delivery, Mr. Chairman, will, if fostered, bring much good to those who are to-day struggling for intelligence and information; and no false cry of economy can deter me from lending it my aid until the voice of the rural carrier is heard upon every roadway in the land.

I want to see it extended until it webs every rural district. I want to see in every cottage the weekly county paper, at least, and in as many as possible the daily paper, so that those who toil can learn to watch the cunning of those who do not.

The gentleman from California [Mr. LOUD], with a sort of spirit of humiliation, confesses himself to be the father of the rural-delivery child, but claims that he brought the bairn into the world with the understanding that he would never earn more than $300 per year. But since the child has begun to grow and wax strong and to merit twice that amount, the unnatural father wants to strangle him in his own home. But, fortunately, this big infant persistently refuses to be strangled, but is just about to overturn the father himself. And he ought to do so. Shame upon any man who would state before the assembled representatives of the American people that because he was told that the farmer could carry the mails over 20 to 25 miles every day, through mud and slush, through rain and snow, furnish his horse and wagon, feed his horse, himself, and his family for $300 per year, and because the people say he is worth more and demand it for him will now try to wreck and destroy the system! Shame, I say, upon such a man!

But, Mr. Chairman, it will not be done. The representatives of the people are here, and in solid ranks we will meet the assaults of those who would tear down the rural system and strike down the assailant, until not one shall be left to raise his lance against this splendid means of education for those who can not go to the more costly institutions of our land. Let the good work go on!

If a protective-tariff system continues to take the money from the sweat of the toiler and pile it up in the coffers of the Government, let this be one of the arteries through which a small portion may flow back to the people. If it flows into their hearts and their heads, it can do much good, and as education, intelligence, and good morals increase it can no longer be said of us—

> Ill fares the land, to hastening ills a prey,
> Where wealth accumulates and men decay.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment which I will ask the Clerk to read, and I ask in this connection unanimous consent that it be considered in connection with the preceding portion of the bill. It is a complete and coherent proposition in itself; but I would like to get it before the committee without confusion so that they may get the sense of it.

Mr. SWANSON. I reserve all points of order on the amendment until I hear what it is.

Mr. LACEY. Very well; let it be read first, and we can agree on the form in which it may be presented to the House.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the proviso in lines 4 and 5 of page 3 and insert:

"Provided, That the Postmaster-General is hereby authorized and directed to test the practicability of performing the rural free-delivery service by contract on such newly established routes as he may select, under the following conditions:

"First. That before any person shall be designated to carry the mail on any mail rural free-delivery route by contract, the Postmaster-General shall cause an advertisement to be posted for not less than ten days, in a conspicuous place accessible to the public, in the post-office from which the mail is to be carried, inviting proposals, in such form as he may prescribe, for the service to be performed. The service shall be awarded to the lowest bidder who shall furnish evidence satisfactory to the Postmaster-General that such bidder is a legal and actual resident of the district or territory in which the proposed service is to be performed; that he is a reliable and trustworthy person, of good moral character, able to read and write, and having sufficient intelligence and ability to properly perform the service, and who shall tender sufficient guaranties that he will personally perform acceptable service; but the Postmaster-General may reject all proposals submitted under any advertisement: Provided, That no person shall be awarded a contract for more than one route under this paragraph.

"Second. That no additional compensation shall be allowed to a rural free-delivery carrier unless pursuant to an advertisement and award of service as herein provided.

"Third. That under such regulations as the Postmaster-General may prescribe, a substitute carrier may be employed, at the expense of the regular carrier, to temporarily perform the service on any rural free-delivery mail route.

"And shall report to Congress, not later than January 10, 1903, his views regarding the practicability and advisability of performing such service by contract thereafter."

Mr. SWANSON. I make a point of order against this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman state his point of order?

Mr. SWANSON. My point of order is that the committee has already voted that this rural-delivery service shall be by carriers and not by contract. This is simply the bill reintroduced by the gentleman from Iowa. This committee has already decided in the amendment just adopted that rural-delivery service shall be by salaried carriers. This is to change that by a contract system, and I say it is contrary to what the committee has already decided. That question has been passed on, and having been passed on it is not in order to bring it up for decision again.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of the opinion that although the committee may have expressed its intentions in the former paragraph as to the general principle, yet that would not be inconsistent with a wish to experimentally try the contract system as is proposed in this amendment. It is not for the Chair to determine that the committee would hold the two inconsistent. That is for the committee.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman, I would like to make a point of order. I understood the gentleman from Iowa offered this resolution and asked that it be considered in connection with the amendment which was made a while ago. That has been passed and we are now on another paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understood the gentleman from Iowa to withdraw whatever proposition he started to make.

Mr. HILL. Do you understand that this amendment is offered as an amendment to the first, second, or third paragraph?

Mr. LACEY. It is offered as a substitute for the committee amendment. I gave notice, however, that further on I will move to strike out the preceding words, because this duplicates the language.

Mr. HILL. There is a motion already pending to strike out the whole paragraph.

Mr. SWANSON. As the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HILL] has well said, I have a motion pending to strike out this provision.

The CHAIRMAN. That is pending.

Mr. SWANSON. That was the first motion submitted.

The CHAIRMAN. Certainly.

Mr. SWANSON. As I understand, this is also a motion to strike out and insert.

Mr. LACEY. A substitute for your motion to strike out and insert.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not understand that it was so stated.

Mr. SWANSON. In what form does this amendment come in?

Mr. LACEY. The heading of the amendment will show.

The CHAIRMAN. It moves to strike out the proviso in lines 4 and 5, page 3, and to insert instead thereof.

Mr. LACEY. This is a substitute for the amendment, which is a motion to strike out, without inserting anything.

The CHAIRMAN. The proviso in lines 4 and 5 is the committee amendment. The gentleman from Iowa moves to strike out the committee amendment which is pending and to substitute instead thereof the amendment which the Clerk reported.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry. As I understand, if this amendment should prevail, it would be an amendment to the first section.

The CHAIRMAN. Yes; it is an amendment to the committee amendment to that section practically.

Mr. SWANSON. To that section. If that is carried and my motion to strike out prevails, then his amendment, including section 2, goes out?

The CHAIRMAN. Certainly.

Mr. LACEY. There is no difficulty about the proposition, Mr. Chairman. I would ask before commencing that I have unanimous consent to proceed for ten minutes instead of five.

Mr. HILL. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Connecticut objects.

Mr. HILL. I have no objection to the gentleman having the five minutes to which he is entitled under the rule.

Mr. LACEY. I thank the gentleman for his courtesy.

Mr. HILL. The gentleman is entirely welcome.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Chairman, this is a proposition that the gentlemen who favor this bill have announced themselves as entirely favorable to. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] in his remarks the other day told us that he would like to have the experiment tried. Now, I am with the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] in his opposition to the attempt to change this system generally to the contract system, and voted with him upon that proposition; but the present proposition is a simple one, authorizing the Postmaster-General to try experimentally a few contract routes. He is establishing routes every day, and this simply authorizes him to try the experiment of letting some of them by contract.

Certainly that is an experiment that ought to be made, and perhaps ought to have been made heretofore; but it has not been made, and therefore it ought to be made now, and by the time Congress takes this matter up again we will have had a fair test of the question as to whether one system is better than the other.

I think my friend from Virginia ought to recognize the fact, if he believes that the salary system is better than the contract system, that a test of a few routes by the contract system would only demonstrate all the more clearly that he was correct in his original proposition. If, on the other hand, it proves satisfactory and is found to be more efficient and cheaper than the present system, it ought to be adopted. In other words, we ought to try both systems instead of adopting a hard and fast rule that will tie the hands of the Postmaster-General and prevent him from investigating any other method than the one proposed in this bill. That is all there is in this proposition. It is a very simple one and a very just one. No difference which view any member of this House may take as to whether we ought to have the contract system or the other system, certainly there is no reason why the contract system is not worthy of a trial, and that is all this amendment proposes, nothing more and nothing less.

Mr. TOMPKINS of New York. Does this leave the carriers to be appointed at $600 a year?

Mr. LACEY. This leaves the carriers to be appointed at $600 a year, leaves the law just as it is, but authorizes the Postmaster-General to make a few contracts, a sufficient number to investigate the question; contracts for the new routes to be established, a sufficient number of them to test the effects of this service. Now, why should not this be done?

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. Chairman, in attempting to discuss this question, I feel very much like the young man who was commissioned to write an essay on "The Snakes in Ireland," and who began his essay by saying, "There are no snakes in Ireland." I am sorry, sir, to acknowledge that in the district I have the honor to represent, which is perhaps one of the most intelligent districts in my State, there are no rural-delivery routes. None have been established. I have earnestly been endeavoring to get routes established in my district since the day I came to Congress, and have requested the Department to send inspectors there, but an inspector has not visited my district. Applications, however, for several routes are now pending.

I do not say this, Mr. Chairman, in justification of the bill now pending before the House, because I am opposed to it. I am opposed to making any change in the experiment the Government is now making of a system which seems to be perfectly satisfactory to the people who are trying it and enjoying its benefits, privileges, and blessings, because I believe, Mr. Chairman, that this system will prove a great blessing to the whole country. I am not in favor of injecting now into this project any scheme that will cripple it or that will in any way destroy its usefulness where it has been established or where it will be established. Now, I am surprised at the proposition presented by the distinguished gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY], in asking business men upon the floor of this House to experiment with an experiment. He says that the Postmaster-General should go out and make a few experiments and report back to this House.

Mr. Chairman, that seems to me child's play, for a man with his experience to talk to business men about such a proposition as that. I think that the Representatives upon the floor of this House are practical enough, have had business experience enough, to know that the system which we are now enjoying is conducted on a reasonable basis; that we can not inaugurate any plan under which the Government can get its work done and let the people enjoy this benefit for a less rate of compensation than $600 per annum.

Mr. LACEY. How does the gentleman know that without trying it? I propose that the Department should try it. This system of carrying free delivery has never been tried.

Mr. THOMPSON. I have seen the abomination, curse, and disgrace of the star-route system in my district, and it has been a menace and shame upon this great Government to have such carriers as are imposed upon our people under this star-route system. I am opposed, Mr. Chairman, to this Government bartering its offices out in any such way as has been done under the star-route system. Speculators have gotten in charge of this system, and they are imposing upon the people of my State. I have now, Mr. Chairman, letters from four good men who have been induced by undue influence to take contracts on these star routes at such a price as they are unable to carry them for, and they are begging me by petition and letters to see the Post-Office authorities and get their pay increased. Mr. Chairman, we do not want any more systems of this kind imposed upon our people. Six hundred dollars for carrying the mail twelve months in the year and twenty-six days in the month is, in my opinion, a very small compensation for the work; and, besides, the rural carrier has a great deal more responsibility than the ordinary star-route carrier. He has the responsibility of a postmaster; he is carrying a post-office on wheels. [Loud applause.]

The mail carrier is required to travel regularly in all kinds of weather, rain or shine, cold or hot, and take with him a supply of stamps and receive money for money orders, postal notes, etc., and for this responsibility and labor he is entitled to reasonable remuneration, as well as for the use of his horse and wagon which he is required to furnish.

I am as much in favor of retrenchment and reform as any member of this House, but why begin here to use the pruning knife? Let us see. The city carriers are paid from $900 to $1,200 per annum, and yet not one word is said by these economical gentlemen about placing them under the contract system, or putting that service up to the lowest bidder.

Mr. Chairman, I can not see how or why the bill is here at all. As a rule, when any such sweeping and important new project or change in existing law is brought before Congress there is a large popular demand behind it, or at least the semblance of such a demand. That is the case with the other large measures now before Congress—Chinese exclusion, the isthmian canal, the Cuban question, the Philippine question, the Pacific cable, ship subsidy, oleomargarine, protection of the President, war-revenue-tax repeal, reclamation of arid lands, Territorial statehood, and so forth. But this bill appears to have no popular backing whatever. There is no excuse or occasion for it at all.

If the advocates of the bill could prove that the contemplated change would be an improvement on the present system that would justify the bill, even if the country had not asked for it. But they have not proved it. They have not made out their case at all. I have listened to all their arguments in vain. They do not carry conviction. There is nothing in them. All that the champions of the bill can say is that they fear the salary system may become too expensive, and that they hope the contract system may prove more economical. Their opinions, Mr. Chairman, are worth no more than the opinions of those who differ with them. In fact, they are not worth as much, because it can be proven that the present system is a great success, and the presumption is always against a change.

As it is conducted now the rural free mail delivery has the respect and the hearty approval of the whole community. The farmers and others living in and near the small villages and sparsely settled towns are delighted with it. It has ushered in a new era in the rural districts, and has relieved them, in a great measure, of their worst disadvantage and drawback—isolation. For ages past and until the advent of this beneficent system the great trouble with the farmers and their families has been that they could not keep up with the times. They absolutely could not spare the time from their work to go every day to the post-office, perhaps 2, 3, 4, or 5 miles distant; and, even if there were time, there would be other obstacles—bad roads, storms, sickness, etc. Herein the city people always have had until now the advantage. No matter how busy they might be, or how sick, or how bad the weather, the city people have had their mail delivered regularly once or twice or oftener every day; and now, thanks to this new rural mail delivery, the farmers at last have begun to get theirs, too, with equal regularity.

The farmers are entitled to just as much consideration and just as good service as those who live in cities. They are the bone and sinew of this country. Put a wall around your cities and shut out the country, and grass will soon grow in the middle of the streets. Tear down your cities, and the country will soon build new ones. The country is the pure fountain that sends forth our best men and women. The men who wield the greatest influence upon this floor are the men who come from the humble country homes. Our great men do not come from the gilded palaces where lives of ease, comfort, and elegance are spent; nor from the cities where vice, dissipation, and immorality reign supreme; but from the industrious, Christian, country homes that are uncontaminated by evil influences.

Thus, if a preference is to be shown, we owe it to the country and not to the city. The farmers, the honest tillers of the soil, have been overlooked and neglected, and I can not support a measure that will in any way deprive them of the service they are entitled to.

If let alone, this system will grow and the time will soon come when this great, progressive Government will be sending the mail each day to the door of every farmer in the land. I will not be content until the people whom I represent shall enjoy this blessing. The daily rural free-mail delivery not only disseminates knowledge and enlightens the homes of the people, but it also encourages the movement for better public roads. One of the prerequisites for obtaining a general rural delivery is good roads. To establish and build good roads through the agricultural districts of this country will increase the value of our lands and make our farmers more progressive, more contented, and more happy.

We must encourage our people to live on their farms by making farm life more comfortable by placing daily papers in their homes. The newspaper is perhaps the most potent factor in popular education to-day. It molds public sentiment; it inspires higher ideas and nobler purposes, and creates in the breast of the country boy an ambition to move out on broader lines. Send the papers, daily and weekly, to the homes of our people; encourage them to read and to keep in touch with our Government in its progress and you will increase the wealth of the nation. The records show that Congress has dealt out its appropriations with a lavish hand to the great railroad corporations to induce them to carry the mails quickly between the great cities.

The last Congress appropriated $175,000 to one railroad for carrying the mails a few hours quicker between New York and New Orleans. No thought of economy was suggested by any member here then. But now the people in the country are to have some benefits, and we hear the cry "Economy, economy!" I can not give my support to any measure tending to destroy, impair, or impede this present rural-delivery system. I hope soon to be able to get it established all over my district and to send the mail to the door of every farmer in it each day. Then will the prophetic words be realized:

Lo, the winter is past; the rain is over and gone; the flowers appear on the earth; the time of the singing of birds has come, and the voice of the turtle is heard in our land.

[Applause.]

The rural carriers have been a part and parcel of the communities they have served, men known personally to all the families along their routes, respected and trusted by them all. They have been appointed in the same way and on the same footing as other employees in the mail service, the same as city carriers and railway mail clerks and post-office clerks. They have been selected on their merits, and have served on their merits. The people whom they serve so well have come to regard them with affection as personal friends. Many instances have been reported where the farmers have voluntarily shown their appreciation by befriending and assisting the carriers in various ways, by giving them coffee and food and feeding their horses, by giving them shelter and warmth in a time of tempest, by breaking the roads ahead of them in snowstorms, etc. Fancy them doing such things for a contractor, especially when that contractor is represented by a stupid hired menial.

Now, without any complaints against these carriers, without any popular wish or demand for a change, without any good reason whatever for it, we are suddenly asked to upset this splendid system which has been so satisfactory and beneficial to our rural communities, and to substitute for it the old, discredited, corrupt star-route contract system, letting out these rural mail routes to the lowest bidder on contract. For heaven's sake, why? Will the contractors do the work any better? They can not possibly do so. They will probably not do it as well. Will they do it any cheaper? No; it can not be done any cheaper, if done well, than it is done now. If there should be now and then bids for contracts much lower than the salaries now paid, that would simply be presumptive evidence that the bid was not in good faith, or that it meant inferior service.

It is true that the bill professes to prevent collusion, straw bids, subletting, and other well-known scandals of the contract system; but the scandals would creep in all the same. They always do. They did in the old star-route times, as we all know. They do to-day. There is any quantity of subletting in star routes to ignorant, illiterate, irresponsible persons in our Southern States right now, and I have no doubt it is the same way up North and out West. The farmers have no love or sympathy for the star-route contract system. They want the present system continued, and it ought to be continued. It is successful, universally liked, and will soon pay for itself, as the similar system now pays for itself in the cities.

The more this supposed extension of the contract system is contemplated the more repulsive it appears. The records show that it has always been a failure as between the Government and individuals. It has uniformly led to inferior work, popular dissatisfaction, dishonesty, and scandal. The Government has no right—no moral right, at least—to rely on the contract system for executing the public work, except in cases where no other is possible—as, for example, in the carrying of immense quantities of mail for all distances by rail and on sea or in barren sections of the country and wildernesses of vast extent where scarcely anybody resides. If the Government should put the rural delivery under the contract system, why should it not put the postmasters and the post-office clerks and the War Department and the Mint and the Bureau of Engraving and Printing under the contract system? Very likely it could find persons willing to bid very low for the privilege of coining the Government's gold and silver and printing its currency.

The whole atmosphere surrounding the contract system is one of duplicity, jealousy, and dishonesty. There is a great tendency in it even to the awarding of contracts as well as in the execution thereof. Bribery and collusion are inseparable from it. Inferior and dishonest work is its natural and inevitable offspring.

On the contrary, the whole tendency of the present system is toward better and better public service and steady progress upward morally and socially and intellectually in the whole community. To upset this system just as it has got well started, and to substitute for it the malodorous contract system, which the farmers distrust and do not want, would be, to put it in the mildest possible term, an inequitable folly.

By all means, defeat this proposition. Let well enough alone. [Applause.]

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. Chairman, one of the strongest arguments that was made by the gentlemen who are opposed to the pending bill was that the Post-Office Committee was trying to impose something upon the House that had not been tried, something that was purely experimental, and that might fail. Here comes a proposition, which is presented by the gentleman from Iowa, which gives power to the Postmaster-General to make an experiment to see whether or not under the contract system this rural free delivery can be conducted in a proper manner. It does not supersede the regular carrier nor the regular system. They are not affected.

The other day the distinguished gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] in his appeal to this House stated that he felt that an experiment should be made, and that they were not opposed to an experiment under the contract system; but now when the question comes whether or not we will make the experiment objection is raised in every way that it can be. Mr. Chairman, I want to call the attention of the House to this fact: We are beginning a system which is going to have 50,000 employees. It is a great system. It is one that ought to be conducted on business lines. An experiment should be made to determine whether or not it can be conducted properly and in a business manner upon the contract system.

Mr. LACEY. I would like to ask the gentleman from Colorado a question.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Certainly.

Mr. LACEY. Are there not many routes in Colorado that could not be let for $600, and therefore this would give an opportunity for more expensive routes to be established?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I have no doubt of that, and I have no doubt that in many instances routes will be obtained under the contract system which could not be obtained under the other. The routes in some parts of the country, as in Colorado, are very long, because distances between cities and towns are very great. Other routes are over mountains, where the service can not be had for $600 a year. Should we be denied the benefit of rural free delivery because such a limit has been fixed in the bill? We know there are inequalities in almost all the routes. It has been shown that they vary in length from 16 to 38 miles; some over good and others over muddy roads; some in a hilly and others in a level country; some in densely and others in sparsely settled communities. There are various other inequalities. If the Department could demonstrate to gentlemen of the House that the contract system is better for some parts of the country, why not give it the opportunity to do so? Why should not the lover of the rural free-delivery system be in favor of adopting a provision which will give us ultimately the very best system and permit the Department to ascertain by experiment which is the best?

The system should and is going to cover the entire country. The question whether it can be done at an economical cost to the Government is one that is going to seriously affect various other questions in the Post-Office Department. We are all hoping for a 1-cent letter postage. Everybody desires it, but if an increase of salary is to occur, such as is indicated by the conservative chairman of the Appropriation Committee or as has been admitted by a number of gentleman who have spoken here on the floor of the House, you can readily see that it would impair the revenue derived from the Post-Office Department to such an extent that it would be impossible ever to obtain 1-cent letter postage in the United States.

Mr. Chairman, this amendment provides for an experimental service only. We have passed the section which requires the employment of post-office employees on a salary. This provision simply says to the Postmaster-General: "You can make the experiment and see how it will work as to the rural free delivery." He can report the result back to this House; he can not adopt it as a general system without your consent; unless the figures which he presents demonstrate that it is a better system or that it would make the service better throughout the United States, you will have the say as to whether or not the result of that experiment shall be made a permanent part of the service of the Department. It will also give relief to such parts of the mountainous States where the routes are too difficult to admit of a $600 service, and I therefore hope that the amendment will be adopted. [Applause.]

Mr. PRINCE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I think this House might as well be frank in the discussion of this question. Some of us pretend to be in favor of the contract system and some in favor of the salary system. For one I have listened to the debate, and I am willing to state frankly and fairly that I am in favor of this salary system. We might as well be frank about it. We can not deceive this House nor the country. It is a question whether we should be in favor of paying the rural carriers $600 a year or whether we shall be in favor of permitting it to be let by contract, some carriers to receive $200 and some $1,000 or $1,200.

Now, gentlemen of the House, who are the men that want to carry this mail? They are our own people; they live in our own country; they pay our taxes; they support the flag and maintain the Government. If we pay to 17,000 carriers in the city in the neighborhood of $800 or $1,000 or $1,200 a year, what reason is there that we can assign to our constituents in the country that they should not be paid $600 for services rendered? It seems to me that the amount we are asked to pay to these men is not exorbitant; that the amount to be paid is fair and reasonable and just, and for that reason I am in favor of coming out squarely and taking a direct position upon this question and saying that we are in favor of paying a salary to these people.

Some say that this is an experiment. There is not a gentleman in this House but knows that this rural delivery is here to stay. We are constantly being importuned by our people throughout the district to increase the service and to enlarge the system, and if that be true why should we try and dally in one way and another and talk here in favor of taking one position or another? To me it is perfectly plain that the country is in favor of the salary system. I venture to say that there is not a man on the floor of this House who has received a communication from his people to favor, as an experiment, the star-route system in the rural free-delivery service. On the contrary, for days and days I have been receiving communications from my people asking me to favor paying the rural carriers who are bringing the citizens their mail in the country, putting them into communication to-day with the city and with the world that they desire to be put in communication with, and for one I am willing to take my stand and vote in favor of paying these men $600 a year.

The question about whether it is a large amount or whether we are entering upon a great unknown field is a question that might have been asked when we started to pay the city carriers a certain amount; but thus far that question has not been discussed with reference to paying them too much.

Gentlemen of the House, I hope and trust that we will show to the country that we are in favor of paying for services well done, paying such an amount for carrying the mail in the country as will insure prompt and efficient service. [Applause.]

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I have heard some communications read from postmasters opposing the contract system, and I can understand why any partisan postmaster who has such a political pull under the present system would oppose any change. It has been said there is no demand for the contract system; that no one has requested it. Of course, Mr. Chairman, the way I consider it, it was not necessary for the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, whose duty it is to provide the best system for the delivery of the mail, to sit down and wait until they receive letters from the farmers about a system which is new and to which they have given but little attention as to the best method of carrying it on; but it was their duty, as that committee had charge of this subject, to consider it and present to this House their conclusions without waiting for requests from anyone.

I have received a letter from a gentlemen who is not a postmaster, who speaks the opinion of a good many people on this question. I will not put his name in the RECORD for I am not authorized to do so, but I vouch for him as truthful and reliable, and a good citizen of his community. Writing on the 6th of March, he says:

> I notice some discussion in Congress in relation to the method, etc., of "rural free-delivery" service. I trust you will see the advisability of putting this system on the contract basis. As it is to-day it is nothing more nor less than a political machine of the basest character. We have four rural free-delivery routes from this post-office. The carriers are usually loaded with political documents and "sample copies" of newspapers of the most rabid Republican type, and are constantly relating to the postmaster and to each other what a wonderful "hit" they made in an argument with some Democrat. I presume, however, that it is useless for me to tell you how the matter is conducted here, for I guess it is the same wherever there is such rural service. I trust you will do your very best to exterminate this most damnable and contemptible electioneering scheme.

And he adds:

> All Republican newspapers by our newsdealer unsold, I am informed, are distributed by the carriers, as well as hundreds of other such documents, to the farmers along their respective routes.

It is not strange that the circulation of the daily newspapers is increasing. And, Mr. Chairman, to show that the complaint is not confined to Democrats alone, I refer to an article in the Washington Post of this morning—a special—embodying complaints by Republicans, charging that one of these route inspectors or special agents, surrounded and sanctified by the atmosphere of civil service [laughter]—the charge is made that he and other Federal officials have aligned themselves to renominate a certain man for Congress against another Republican candidate.

I will not designate the district; it would be unfair; for I have no doubt there are many others where similar influences are at work. So the complaint is not confined to Democrats, but it comes from Republicans as well. And you will see how this ground of complaint will grow in the future if you continue the present system.

I do not wish to discuss the star-route system. If there are any members of this House who, having heard the discussions and arguments here, have not yet discovered that the contract system provided in this bill is far different from the old star-route system, then no arguments can reach their case.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, on January 19, 1900, I introduced a bill into this House to cure some of the evils of the star-route contract system. I could never get that bill considered by the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads. But I notice now that the sinner has at last repented, and has incorporated my measure in this bill as virtually his own. The Post-Office Department at that time concluded that if I would not push that measure of mine they would originate a rule, and they did originate a rule, based upon the lines of this bill. A copy of that rule I now hold in my hand; and I find it has been incorporated in the pending measure.

But, Mr. Chairman, that does not end the trouble. The star-route business has been going on just the same. The parties interested in the star-route business from the State of Iowa, together with some parties in the District of Columbia, have been perpetrating the same frauds as willingly and as rapidly as ever. The evil does not cease. The rule of the Department is not enforced. The same swindling is going on to-day. The idea of compelling these contractors to live upon the route is not carried out and will not be if this contract system goes on.

I have listened to the learned discussions here and have witnessed some strange things. For instance, I have found out that the patriot of Illinois, "Uncle JOE CANNON," who has been in this House for twenty years, professed that he would like to put on an amendment here if he only knew how. He has since that declaration gone to night school, I presume, as he has availed himself of an opportunity to get in an amendment.

Gentlemen say here that we ought not to pay a salary of $600 when we can get people under the contract system to do the service for less. But anyone who demands of the mail carrier that he shall render this service for less than $600 knows that he will not get good service. By such a system you are undertaking to economize at the expense of people who can least afford to be thus treated. You do not hesitate here to spend money to build up corporations, to build up combinations of capital that can afford to pay half a million of dollars as a salary. How cheerfully you vote for a measure of that kind. You have never said "no" upon any of those propositions. Where does your economy fall? Upon those who can least afford to submit to cutting down—who only accept service at beggarly wages because they must take it or starve.

Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to the bill recommended by the committee through its chairman. I have listened to the specious arguments presented by its advocates and tried to see if in any way possible, if by any interpretation of language, any combination of circumstances, the provisions of their bill would work out to the benefit of the people who are interested in the success of free rural delivery, but it has been in vain. There is only menace to the service and a threat of injury to the patrons thereof by making the service inadequate and inefficient.

I am in favor of the rural delivery system. A great many city residents frequently get the idea into their heads that they are of more importance than the farmer or dweller in the country, but they are greatly mistaken. It may be that there is a greater accumulation of wealth in the city, but, man for man, in all that goes to make up the honor, character, virtue, and glory of our nation the country districts are far in the lead. In point of numbers, the population of all the cities with over 10,000 inhabitants is nearly balanced by the population of rural districts and smaller towns, and this second division are as justly entitled to the privileges of mail service, in all its extent, as are those who dwell within city limits.

Rural delivery is a great help in the building up of good roads. It is also a great educational force, in that it permits a wider and freer dissemination of literature and works of science and art. It offers the farmer the advantage of daily knowledge of the markets, and affords him opportunity to take advantage of the mail promptly. More letters are written, more papers taken, the registry and money-order business is enlarged, and in scores of ways it, in blessing, brings blessings in return. I would like to see the service extended until a network of routes should be established so that no home so remote, no family so isolated, but would be reached by the mail service. This is the perfection for which we should strive.

A start has been made, and the Post-Office Department is endeavoring to enlarge and expand the service, and the Department prefers to continue a system of carriers upon salary, which has been tried, no longer an experiment, but an acknowledged success, rather than to change to the antiquated system, which in this connection is an experiment and in other service has been honeycombed with annoyance, trouble, scandal, and fraud.

I believe it is our duty to treat city and country alike, giving each efficient mail service. Rural delivery is here to stay. So satisfactory has it been to the people wherever it has been instituted that from all parts of the country are coming petitions for the service. The trouble is that as the Department is handicapped by lack of funds it can not put a large enough force into the field to keep up with the demand. In my own district alone there are nearly a hundred petitions on file, not yet acted upon, and some of them over two years old. This is not the fault of the Department, as it is doing all it can, with its means, to meet and comply with the requests that are piling up day by day, but it is swamped by the enthusiastic reception of the system by the people.

The chairman of the committee says, as a reason why there should be a change and that instead of having a carrier on a salary of $600 per annum the service must be performed under contract and the lowest bidder get the job, that if it is not done the carriers will form a union and ask for more pay, and threaten us with their vengeance if we vote against their request. Now, isn't that just awful! Intimidation, coercion, and violence! Perhaps they will. Perhaps, as they will undoubtedly all be men of intelligence, they may read history and recall how in 1896, and again in 1900, the banking trusts and all the great syndicates and corporations threatened the workingmen with dire vengeance if they did not vote as their employers dictated. The gentleman from California has not forgotten the Republican campaign methods and is afraid the carriers will steal their thunder. But even if they should make this threat, how insignificant it would be, with their 50,000 or even 100,000 strength, when contrasted with the threat of one trust, or of the Pacific Railroad Company. The chairman of the committee is a good Republican, a stalwart of the stalwarts, and yet in his advocacy of this bill his zeal for his star-route friends seems to have overcome his discretion and betrayed him into some queer statements and revelations.

He says that the appointment of these rural carriers has heretofore been one of the perquisites of Congressmen as political patronage. This may be true of the Republicans, but the pie counter has been closed to the Democrats. The system is now under the classified civil-service list, and yet from this Republican witness we have the statement that it is "whispered" that patronage will not be disturbed; that Congressmen—that is, Republican Congressmen—may have the naming of the rural carriers in their districts in spite of the civil-service rules. Hence, therefore, according to his argument, vote for his bill!

I have said before, and I repeat, I am not a believer in the civil-service system as it has been conducted. It is a delusion and a fraud. It is a door that a key does not open, but yields to the pressure of a hidden secret spring. Merit is not to count, but the "promised" dispenser of party patronage will control appointments. Is not this an interesting sample of Republican honesty, as viewed by the gentlemanly chairman?

The rural mail service is of Democratic parentage, and is the outcome of Mr. Wilson's efforts in its behalf. Under Democratic administration it was economically and ably conducted; the carriers received $300 per year, and no complaints were heard. "But," continues the gentleman from California, "the Department came into the hands of the Republican party, and now it has grown to be the most extravagant bureau ever organized." Now, this is good Republican testimony, but I do not think the gentleman intended to speak so frankly. He was thinking only of making the change to a contract system—a system where, perhaps, there might not be as much political patronage, but where greater fraud and corruption could come in.

These speculators in star-route contracts have watched with amazement and fear the growth of the rural service system, and with greedy longing have sought to bring it within the grasp of their malodorous ring. You all know how under a former administration certain officials in high places, having too much love for certain people, shared with the favored contractors in amassing fortunes illegally obtained from the Government. As a system, the contract method of having our mail carried has been most pernicious, rotten, and unsatisfactory, and it would seem that the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads are seeking to discredit the rural service and bring it into disrepute. We may judge the future from the past.

Human nature is the same to-day as it was yesterday, and it will be the same in the future. It is true the committee has tried to surround their bill with apparent safeguards. They have added a provision contained in a bill which I introduced in the House on January 19, 1900, and could never get the worthy chairman of the committee to consider, and they say that the bidder must be "a legal and actual resident of the district or territory in which the proposed service is to be performed," but this does not make the contract method desirable. The lowest responsible bidder is to get the job, and then, independent of Government control, the service will run down, and the last stage of the system will be worse than any in its history.

The main plea put forth for this virtual abandonment of the present system is the expense of the salaried carrier. The advocates of the bill in one breath say that the salaries of these rural carriers may two or three years from now amount to fifty or sixty millions of dollars. Well, why not? This is one of the few Departments of the Government that comes in close relations to the individual and is of service to the people, a Department run as a business and through its receipts is almost self-sustaining. Now, why single out this Department and talk about its expense, yet say nothing of its revenues. Just look at our Army and Navy departments. See the millions of dollars we are paying out in a war from which we do not derive a single penny in return; why, we are not even getting glory. A war in which not a single element of patriotism or love of country is involved, but simply the exploitation of the schemes of a favored few; for this my friend will vote to pay out not $15,000,000 or $60,000,000, but hundreds of millions, and then talk about the expense of from 8,000 to 60,000 rural mail carriers. Oh, be consistent!

I have not the slightest doubt but that it will cost an immense sum when the free rural-delivery system is fully developed, but in the light of past experience the postal receipts will be largely increased, but even if they were not, I would far rather prefer the money being paid to carry the mail to all the people of this country than to maintain an offensive, oppressive, bloody, inhuman warfare against a people contending for freedom, whose motto is "For God and our native land," as this country is doing now.

If it be true that under the contract system the routes will be shorter, and therefore the pay less, it will be offset by the fact that the number of routes will be increased, and thus the total cost will be greater.

The amount paid the rural carrier—$600—is none too much to pay the class of men it is the aim of the Department to keep in the service, and who are capable of meeting the responsibilities and performing the duties of that position; and yet it is not the interests of the few carriers or contractors that should be mainly considered. It is, How shall the people be best served? They are satisfied now. There is no demand coming from anywhere for a change except from the committee room and from the horde of hungry contractors, who are longing to get a chance to make another raid on the Treasury.

The people want no change; they only want more routes under the present plan. The Department is satisfied, and the able superintendent of the rural system, who has given much thought and study to the service, and is as well, perhaps better, informed upon the comparative merits of the two methods, advocates the continuance of the present way of having salaried carriers, as better service is rendered, better discipline maintained, and a higher class of carriers secured.

It is again the question as to the relative merits of a contract or a salaried system, and the question time and again has been decided adversely to contractors.

To show the absurdity of the contention, it is only necessary to follow the proposition out to its logical conclusion. If the contract system is good, is the best for the rural carrier, it is the best for the city carrier, for all the employees in the other great departments of the Government, and for the executive, the legislative, and the judicial branches of the Government; carry it into business houses, into schools, and into the churches. Why, the bare suggestion refutes the assertion and claims for the system.

The advocates of the bill are alarmed lest the carriers should have political ideas and influence. It is the prerogative of any American citizen to exercise his political right, and to forbid the exercise of that right is un-American.

The idea or suggestion that these carriers will immediately besiege Congress for increased salary is a chimera, is crossing the bridge before it is reached, and a virtual confession at the outset that they are illy and insufficiently paid, and is unworthy of the men who, having the respect and confidence of their neighbors, have been recommended by them for appointment.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that my colleague [Mr. THOMPSON] may extend his remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Unanimous consent is asked that the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. THOMPSON] have leave to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I should be glad to have the attention of the committee for five minutes. There are now nearly 8,000 carriers who have their equipments. It would not be just or proper to turn them over to the contract system until they had been employed a reasonable time. I will not vote for any proposition that would do that. If we are to have the present system and no contracts, then, as I said a little bit ago, I am in favor of at least a thousand dollars pay. This bill so far fixes it at $600, but an amendment has been offered that gentlemen think would enable the carrier to earn the other $400. I hope it will. If it does not, then later on I would favor legislation to give the carrier the other $400 by way of compensation from the Government.

Now, the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY] is offered, as I understand it, to make it the duty of the Postmaster-General to try the experiment, not on any routes now existing, but on a limited number of routes to be established, to let them under the contract system, with a provision that one man can have only one contract, that he must be competent, and must live on the route. In my judgment that amendment is wise, because what we all want is to get an effective system for the people. I am not sure myself that the contract system is the best, but this tries the experiment; and, in my judgment, in all good faith, without any partisanship on this question, we ought to try every experiment that may be a success, now, while we can, because the Postmaster-General tells us that in six years from this time from 45,000 to 50,000 carriers will be employed, and their total compensation will no doubt be from $45,000,000 to $50,000,000.

Now, it will do nobody any harm. It will not harm those who are in the service if we adopt this amendment. It will not apply to any route upon which the service is now established, and with the bent of the Post-Office Department it will not apply on very many of the routes to be established between this and January. Now, in view of this great service, having a common interest with everybody else, it does seem to me that we ought not to be stampeded, without using every means within our power to get the best service for all the people at a reasonable cost, in a service that inside of six years must cost us $50,000,000.

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Chairman, this amendment of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY] has been offered in good faith, I have no doubt, but it is intended as the entering wedge to put into the hand of the Postmaster-General the power, if he is hostile to the salary system, virtually to destroy what this committee has already said should be done. It puts a weapon in his hands which will enable him to do that if he is hostile to the salary system.

In a great many parts of this country the contract mail service of the United States, as to the horses and wagons and the service rendered by people, is a disgrace to this Government. If you put these rural free-delivery routes under contract, I do not care if a man is allowed to take only one, what will be the result?

Take a route for which a man ought to have six or seven hundred dollars, and for that route some fellow with an old horse and wagon, who, perhaps, has been on his uppers for six or seven months, will offer to carry that mail for two, three, or four hundred dollars, or for less than any man who is fit to be in the service can carry it. It will be the old story. Have you not had trouble about men of this kind, who will undertake this service and go ahead for five or six months and then throw up their route and put their bondsmen in trouble to find substitutes or carry the mails themselves?

Now, Mr. Chairman, the contract service has been tried over and over, and we are trying it to-day, and I say two-thirds of that service is a disgrace to this Government in the rural districts. We have had the free rural carriers at a salary of $500 a year. All over my country we have magnificent, costly wagons, with the words "Free rural delivery, Route No. 1" or "No. 2, United States mail," with good horses, and they have been rendering to the people a service that is entirely satisfactory.

The people living in the rural districts do not want any of your contract service, because they have recently got rid of a contract service which was not satisfactory.

You talk about the expense of 50,000 carriers. This country could better afford to have 80,000 rural carriers with a salary of $600 a year than to have 50,000 contractors.

I am opposed to this amendment. I do not know how the present Postmaster-General stands on this question; I do not know how his successor may stand; but if he is hostile to putting carriers on a fixed salary, under the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY] he can experiment along the line which he is in favor of and he can destroy the system as it exists to-day.

You talk about paying the bills. The people of the United States in the rural districts want to be put in contact with the world, and they want the best service they can get. They want it as good as the people in the cities have. This Congress can pass no legislation that will come closer to the people than to provide for the delivery of the mail to them in this way. I am not afraid of the expense. When you give the men who pay the taxes the benefit of the delivery of mail right at their doors, there will be no bill to be paid that will be met more graciously than the bill for the carriers' salary. Now, I hope those who are in favor of rural carriers at $600 a year will vote this amendment down.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. SMITH of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, is any additional amendment in order under this paragraph?

The CHAIRMAN. It is.

Mr. SMITH of Illinois. Then I desire to send to the desk the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment. Does the gentleman offer an amendment to the amendment?

Mr. SMITH of Illinois. Yes.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend the amendment offered by Mr. LACEY by adding thereto the following:

"Provided, That the Postmaster-General shall not advertise for such proposals or make such awards for any route in operation at the date of the passage of this act until July 1, 1906, or until a vacancy shall occur by reason of the death, resignation, or removal of the carrier who may be serving on any such route at the date of the passage of this act."

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry. Is that amendment in order at the present time?

The CHAIRMAN. It is.

Mr. HILL. There is a motion to strike out?

The CHAIRMAN. There is a motion to strike out and an amendment in the nature of a substitute, which is subject to amendment.

Mr. HILL. And this is an amendment to that substitute?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair so understands.

Mr. SMITH of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, there is great concern on the part of many of the members of the House with reference to the retention of the carriers already in the service. It has been manifested in many of the remarks that have been made that this service is a permanent service and that the object which we should have in connection with it is to try to secure the best methods by which these carriers shall be selected. I am certainly in favor of trying the experiment of the contract system, but I do not want it done at the expense of any of the carriers who are now in the service, and the object of my amendment is that the two may go together, that all of the routes now in operation shall have their carriers retained until 1906, which will give them four years from July 1, or until July 1, 1906.

Within that time the contract system can be easily and fully settled—whether it will or will not be a success—and I believe that if we are going to try the contract system at all—to authorize the Postmaster-General to do that—that we should adopt this amendment, which will absolutely keep the present system in existence, and let the contract system, or an experiment of the contract system, apply only to routes hereafter to be established. I do not see that any man can object to this character of an amendment. It is a safeguard for the present system; it is a safeguard to those now in the service. It may be said that the Postmaster-General would not interfere if this permission was given him to try the contract system, that he would not interfere with the routes already in force and effect.

Well, possibly he would not; but it will be no reflection upon his integrity and his honor for us to provide by this amendment, as I seek to do, that the present service and the carriers in it shall not be disturbed before July 1, 1906, and that he shall not let to contract or accept any bid for the same on the routes in effect on the day of the passage of this act until July 1, 1906. I hope the amendment may be adopted.

Mr. KLUTTZ. Will the gentleman yield to a question?

Mr. SMITH of Illinois. Certainly.

Mr. KLUTTZ. The gentleman wants to try this experiment in the districts of those of us who have no routes?

Mr. SMITH of Illinois. Not at all. It may be on some routes established in my district, or the districts of other gentlemen, and upon those this experiment can be tried just the same as in the districts of those gentlemen who have none.

[Mr. BLACKBURN addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. BOUTELL. Mr. Chairman, the long debate upon this bill has demonstrated one fact beyond a peradventure, and that is that this House is unanimously in favor of the free rural delivery service; and if we represent the entire people we may now take it for granted that they are in favor of an extension to its utmost capacity of this valuable and popular service. That is a strong point made. There are men about me now, perhaps some in this Congress, who remember that forty years ago when the question of free delivery in cities came up in Congress it met with opposition from all quarters.

It was called an expensive, unnecessary, and extravagant service. To-day we realize the benefits that the free-delivery service in the cities has conferred upon this country. Six years ago, when the rural free-delivery service was first started, there were those who were highly sceptical as to its practicability and ultimate benefit. We have at last come to the point, Mr. Chairman, when the whole country and the representatives of all the people are committed to the establishment and to the furthest possible extension of this service. On that point we are all agreed. The Department estimates that with this system extended to take in the entire country there will be some 50,000 routes.

Now, I submit in all candor to those gentlemen who advocate the salary system whether, when this entire country is covered, we shall not have a great diversity of routes, not only in length but in the cost of service. We can not cover the entire country with routes that will be uniform either in mileage, in hours necessary to complete the service, or in the cost of living and maintenance of equipment.

The point I want to impress on the committee is this: That those who are in favor of the fullest possible extension of the service must admit that when it is extended to cover the entire population, we shall have not uniform routes but a great diversity of routes.

Now, if that is so, $600 as an annual compensation to a man on the more expensive routes, who must furnish his own horse and wagon, is utterly inadequate and ought not to receive the approval of the House. A four-hundred dollar net compensation in New England and generally in the northern parts of this country, where living and the maintenance of equipment are expensive, is entirely inadequate. It will be impossible to maintain routes in the Rocky Mountain region at such a figure. It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that unless we provide to-day for some method by which the Department may at least test and report to us on the workings of the contract system we shall fail to act for the best interests of the rural free-delivery service.

I believe, Mr. Chairman, that on a uniform-salary basis this free-delivery service will be broken right in two in the middle, and we shall not be able to carry the service over the entire country. As I have said, a salary of $600 a year would be entirely inadequate in some parts of the country while entirely ample in others; entirely inadequate on some routes while entirely adequate on other routes in the same vicinity.

The House has expressed its preference to-day for the salary system. What I wish to urge upon the friends of this service—and there are no better friends of the extension of the service than the members of the committee who advocate the contract system—is that we give to the head of the Post-Office Department the necessary authority to give a limited number of routes a fair test under this contract system and report his conclusions to some subsequent Congress. [Applause.]

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman, I wish to call the attention of the House briefly—and I shall not take up the five minutes—to one proposition that has been advanced, and that is that the Post-Office Department should have discretion in the matter. Absolute discretion is given the Department, and to hold its own grip over the whole thing, under the original amendment as proposed by the gentleman from Virginia, because there the Postmaster-General has authority to award these routes at a salary not to exceed $600 a year. If he has a chance to try a new route in a new part of the country at a salary of $300 a year, it is his privilege to do it. If he wishes to try it at $200 or $400 or $500, he has that privilege. Under authority given by that amendment provided by the gentleman from Virginia not only can he practically experiment if he chooses, but he can hold his grip on the situation, which he absolutely loses by advertising for proposals.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. May I interrupt the gentleman a moment?

Mr. HILL. Certainly.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Do I understand that the amendment to which the gentleman refers has already been adopted?

Mr. HILL. Yes; and no further amendment is needed.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Do I understand that the amendment permits the Postmaster-General under a salaried system to pay one salary in Connecticut and another in Mississippi?

Mr. HILL. I understand the fullest discretion is given the Postmaster-General to pay a salary at a sum not exceeding $600.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Then the Postmaster-General will have the discretion to pay one salary in Connecticut and another in Mississippi.

Mr. HILL. He has always had that discretion ever since this system has been established. This proposition simply continues for one year more precisely the practice that has existed heretofore.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Then I want to give notice——

Mr. HILL. I can not allow my time to be taken up further.

There is another reason why this measure should not be adopted, and that is that you are mixing up two systems; you are putting a civil-service system and a noncivil-service system side by side. This would not work so badly if you would put carriers on the two kinds of service at points remote from each other. But for one I do not want a contract given in my district which will make the carriers there dissatisfied. Dissatisfaction would inevitably exist on both sides—among the contractors and among the carriers. It would be a mistake to put the two classes of employees, the contract man and the salaried man, side by side—a great mistake. I submit it would be a great mistake to undertake this experimental system.

But if the Postmaster-General is authorized to experiment within the lines of the bill as now drawn——

Mr. GARDNER of New Jersey. But he is not so authorized.

Mr. HILL. He absolutely is.

Mr. GARDNER of New Jersey. You do not say so. You say you say so, but you do not.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Will the gentleman from Connecticut allow me a moment?

Mr. HILL. Yes, sir.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Is it not a fact that ever since this service was started different salaries have been paid in different places?

Mr. HILL. Certainly, not only in different parts of the country, but in the same county. Here are hundreds of cases, memoranda of which I have before me, where there are variations of salary, the salaries running at $250, $275, $350, $400, and so on. This has been the practice of the Department for some years past.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. What I want to know is whether under this amendment the Postmaster-General would have the discretion to pay one salary in one part of the country and another salary in another part of the country. If he is to have such discretion, I want to serve notice that, whether a Mississippian makes more money out of this system or less, I shall insist, if the salary system is to be established, that all the people who are doing the same service shall receive the same compensation.

Mr. HILL. The Postmaster-General for six years has had the authority to use his discretion in this matter; and he has used it not only in different parts of the country but in the same part of the country, the compensation varying according to the character of the route—whether hilly or level, mountainous or plain. It is a discretion to pay whatever the service may be worth within the allowance of $600.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. The gentleman from Connecticut yielded to me just now, but I was interrupted. Now, right on that point I want to refer the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] to page 116 of the report of the Postmaster-General for 1900, where he shows that he has allowed different salaries on different routes because some routes are level, with good roads, and others are mountainous, with rough roads. In 1896 we paid $150 and afterwards $300. In 1898 we paid $400 and July 1, 1900, we paid $500. These figures can be found at page 116 of the Postmaster-General's report for 1900.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HILL] has expired.

Mr. SWANSON. I move that debate on the pending paragraph be closed.

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. Before that motion——

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. Before that motion is put I wish to remind the gentleman from Virginia that I have an amendment I want to offer.

The CHAIRMAN. The closing of debate will not preclude the offering of amendments.

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. But I wish to discuss the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Virginia to close debate on the pending paragraph.

The question being taken, there were—ayes 69, noes 52.

Mr. LACEY. I call for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. LACEY and Mr. SWANSON were appointed.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 86, noes 50.

So the motion of Mr. SWANSON to close debate was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The first question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SMITH] to amend the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY].

The question being taken, the amendment of Mr. SMITH of Illinois was rejected, there being—ayes 19, noes 73.

Mr. FLEMING rose.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. FLEMING] wish to offer an amendment?

Mr. FLEMING. I wish to offer an amendment to the amendment. I ask the Clerk to read it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend the amendment by adding after the word "select" in line 3, the words, "not exceeding 45 in number." So as to read:

"Provided, That the Postmaster-General is hereby authorized and directed to test the practicability of performing the rural free-delivery service by contract, on such newly established routes as he may select not exceeding 45 in number, etc."

Mr. FLEMING. I simply want to make it experimental, so that there shall be no mistake about that.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I want to ask the gentleman who offered the amendment if what he proposes is not being done under the present system?

The CHAIRMAN. Debate has been closed.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I hope the committee will indulge me for a minute. Did not the gentleman from California state——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that he be allowed to address the committee.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I simply want to ask one question.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. Chairman, I must be impartial, and I shall have to object to any unanimous consent.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. FLEMING].

The amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY].

The question being taken, on a division, demanded by Mr. LACEY, there were—ayes 54, noes 92.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was rejected.

Mr. SMALL. I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Carolina offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add the following:

"The Postmaster-General shall establish rural free-delivery service in the several States in the proportion, or as near as may be, which the rural population of each State shall bear to the aggregate of the rural population in all the States, and the same ratio shall be observed as far as practicable in the establishment of such service in the several Congressional districts of each State: Provided, That if the applications on file for such service from any State or district are not sufficient to enable the Postmaster-General to maintain the ratio herein provided, then he may establish the service in other States, observing the same ratio as far as may be practicable."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment.

Mr. SMALL. Is debate in order upon the amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is closed by order of the committee.

Mr. SMALL. I ask unanimous consent——

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is made. The question is on the adoption of the amendment.

The question being taken, on a division, demanded by Mr. SMALL, there were—ayes 50, noes 94.

Mr. SMALL. I ask for tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chairman appointed Mr. SMALL and Mr. LOUD.

Mr. SMALL. I ask that the amendment be again read for the information of the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection the amendment will be again reported.

The amendment was again read.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 61, noes 96.

Accordingly, the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON], to strike out the paragraph.

The motion was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Second. That no additional compensation shall be allowed to a rural free-delivery carrier unless pursuant to an advertisement and award of service as herein provided.

Mr. SWANSON. I move to strike out that paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] moves to strike out that paragraph.

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. I move to amend that by striking out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN] is recognized.

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. Mr. Chairman, I gave notice the other day under general debate that I would offer an amendment providing that no person should be designated as carrier on any route until he filed with the Department a certificate signed by a majority of the bona fide patrons of the route that his designation as carrier would not be objectionable to them. I believe that the people along the routes ought to have a veto power against any objectionable or distasteful carrier. I stated that with that, and with one other amendment, I would favor the contract system as preferable to the present system.

I object to the present system, because in my judgment it leaves the power in the Post-Office Department to reject any carrier and to appoint anyone it sees fit. It is true that the Department has adopted certain regulations in the nature of civil-service rules, and if your inspector performs his duty under the law the people will get good service under it. Yet the inspector has almost an absolute and unlimited power to so report his examination as to select any man he wants as carrier. But, Mr. Chairman, I want a new system in order that the States in the South may get their proper share of this service.

I stated the other day that in the Republican State of Iowa more routes had been established than in the entire eight States from the Potomac River to the Texas line. Afterwards it was suggested that I ought to have stated the number of applications which had been filed from those various States. If you will establish one route in a neighborhood or in a county, immediately thereafter many applications will be sent in from that county. The establishment of a route brings forth the application for more routes.

Mr. GRAFF. Suppose that a majority of the patrons of a route happen to be colored people. Would your measure allow the appointment of a colored carrier for that route?

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. I see the point of the gentleman's question, and the gentleman will understand that I said "bona fide patrons." The Department could very properly hold that a bona fide patron must be a regular subscriber to some paper, secular or religious, or part owner of a box or something like that. I think the majority of the bona fide patrons ought to have a voice in the selection of carriers.

Mr. GRAFF. Anybody would be a bona fide patron who was eligible to receive mail.

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. Well, we deny that, and I very much regret that the gentleman insists on injecting the race question into this subject. It is very unfortunate. One would not be a patron who neither sends nor receives mail, just as one is not the patron of a school who does not send to it, although he lives in the district. However, I do not want my attention distracted from this proposition. I want to read some figures to the House which I am sure will enlighten gentlemen.

Mr. TOMPKINS of New York. Would you regard a colored man who was in the habit of receiving letters as a bona fide patron?

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. If he was in the regular habit of it, yes. If he was a customary receiver or a customary sender of mail, yes.

Mr. TOMPKINS of New York. Good.

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. Now, Mr. Chairman, in the eight States I named the other day there had been 500 routes established on February 1. I count as established routes which had then been ordered to be established.

In those States there had been 1,745 applications filed, showing that 28 per cent of the applications had been favorably acted upon. In the State of Iowa there had been 1,461 applications and 718 establishments, showing 49 per cent. In the State of Ohio there had been 1,503 applications and 677 establishments, a percentage of 45.

Here is a list of States in which there have been applications only exceeding by three those from the eight States that I named; but these States, which have solid Republican delegations in this House and in the Senate, from which 1,748 applications have been filed, have had 1,081 establishments made, or a percentage of 62.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. Mr. Chairman, I ask for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Carolina asks that his time be extended for five minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. The States to which I referred are (in this list I count as established those which were ordered):

State.	Application.	Established.	Per cent.
California	150	96	64
Connecticut	165	114	69
Maine	161	106	65
New Hampshire	121	94	77
Rhode Island	23	15	65
Vermont	113	70	62
Maryland	236	193	81
North Dakota	31	18	58
Washington	51	37	72
Wisconsin	697	338	48
Total	1,748	1,081	62

These States have 39 Congressional districts.

Now, let us see how the percentage runs down in the States I named:

State.	Applications.	Established.	Per cent.
Virginia	205	69	33
North Carolina	398	64	16
South Carolina	319	140	44
Georgia	641	175	27
Alabama	133	43	32
Mississippi	34	3	09
Louisiana	10	5	50
Florida	5	1	20
Total	1,745	500	28

These States have 61 Congressional districts. The pamphlet to which I have referred contains figures which show that on February 1 there had been established throughout all the States, except the eight Southern States named, 47 per cent, or nearly one-half, of the routes for which applications had been filed.

Now, you can easily see why I favor some change in the system. Our people want this rural free delivery. We are anxious for it, and with this amendment, which I shall offer as a separate paragraph, I believe we can have satisfactory routes.

I call attention to this percentage in the belief that it may have something to do with the increase of routes in my section, and will enable us to get a more impartial service than we now get under the civil-service regulations as promulgated by the Department. Let us have more inspectors or special agents in the South, so that our people can be supplied with the service. Increase the number of inspectors, if necessary.

Another thing. I have been informed that other gentlemen in my State have been allowed to name a part of the carriers. I have named perhaps a majority of those who are to-day carring the mail in my district; yet I understand throughout the North and West that the rule was to give all these routes to the Republicans prior to February 1.

Under the present rules a member of Congress has nothing and can have nothing to do with the naming of carriers, if they are honestly enforced. But prior to February 1, 1902, while in my State Democratic Representatives were permitted to name one-half of the carriers, and while in other States in the South, where Republicans have no hope of success, Democrats have been permitted to name all the carriers, yet in the States in the North and West, where some districts are close, Democratic members of Congress have not been permitted to have any voice whatever in the selection of carriers. These facts tell the tale of partisanship, and possibly explain in part why so many routes have been established in those sections.

Mr. TIRRELL. Have you investigated as to Massachusetts to see how many routes there are there?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I hope the gentleman will not be diverted from the important argument that he is now making.

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. Yes; I have the figures as to Massachusetts. In Massachusetts 123 petitions have been received and 75 routes established—a percentage of 61. Very good for Massachusetts to get routes on 61 per cent of the applications filed.

Now, the very fact that so many Republicans have been appointed in these other sections of the country convinces me, with my knowledge of human nature and political parties, that unless some change is made in this system that it will be used as a great political machine for whichever party is in charge of the Administration. The people of the mountain section of the South already know the influence the revenue officers—the gaugers and storekeepers and deputy marshals and collectors—have used in politics, not only on the country at large, but upon the selection of their own party nominees. We have felt that influence. Acting upon our experience, I see a great danger in the 50,000 free rural-delivery carriers that we may have hereafter going through the country daily, partly in the interest of the Administration. I believe that there ought to be proper protection and safeguards thrown around the system, and we ought to change the present to a better system. [Applause.]

Mr. SALMON. I now offer the amendment that I sent to the desk, which I ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert after line 8, page 3, the following:

"Hereafter if the petitioners applying for the establishment of a rural free-delivery route shall request that the carrier be selected upon the contract principle, the Postmaster-General shall make such selection in manner as follows:

"First. That before any person shall be designated to carry the mail on any mail rural free-delivery route the Postmaster-General shall cause an advertisement to be posted for not less than ten days, in a conspicuous place accessible to the public in the post-office from which the mail is to be carried, inviting proposals, in such form as he may prescribe, for the service to be performed."

Mr. HILL. I make the point of order that this is not germane to the paragraph. It provides an entirely different system.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair could hardly rule until he has heard the amendment read.

Mr. HILL. It is perfectly apparent so far as it has been read that it does not apply to the additional compensation for carriers already chosen, and is not germane to it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is inclined to rule that the point of the gentleman from Connecticut is well taken, but the Chair is inclined to the opinion that this will be permissible as a separate paragraph.

Mr. HILL. But it would only be in order as a separate paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. It is not in order at this time. The gentleman will withdraw it temporarily until after this paragraph has been disposed of. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Virginia to strike out the paragraph.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Jersey now offers the paragraph preceding line 19, page 2, which the Clerk will report. The Clerk read as follows:

Insert after line 8, page 3, the following:

"Hereafter if the petitioners applying for the establishment of a rural free-delivery route shall request that the carrier be selected upon the contract principle the Postmaster-General shall make such selection in manner as follows:

"First. That before any person shall be designated to carry the mail on any mail rural free-delivery route the Postmaster-General shall cause an advertisement to be posted for not less than ten days in a conspicuous place accessible to the public."

Mr. HILL. I make the point of order that it can not be read until we have read down to line 19. The gentleman offers it as an amendment to three paragraphs, and it can not be read until we have read to line 19.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands that the gentleman offers it as a separate paragraph.

Mr. HILL. He offers it as a substitute for a portion of the bill which has not yet been read.

The CHAIRMAN. If that is so, then it is not in order. It is offered as a separate paragraph. The gentleman stated that over and over again.

Mr. HILL. The gentleman offers it as a substitute, but it is for a part of the bill down to line 19, and we have not read down to line 19.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Preceding line 19.

Mr. SWANSON. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SWANSON. As I understand, section 2 has been struck out?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman means paragraph 2.

Mr. SWANSON. Paragraph 2.

The CHAIRMAN. That has been struck out.

Mr. SWANSON. As I understand it, paragraph 3 in the bill is in order. Is it in order to offer a separate paragraph at this time?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes; it attaches to the bill as a separate paragraph.

Mr. SWANSON. It seems to me that we should complete the bill before a separate paragraph is offered.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of the opinion that a separate paragraph does not necessarily go to the end of the bill. The Chair thinks that this amendment is obviously germane.

Mr. SWANSON. It seems to me that if it is offered to attach to something, it ought to be attached to something that has been read. The position I take is that if the gentleman desires a distinctive proposition controlling rural free delivery in addition to what is contained in the bill, he ought to offer it as a separate proposition after the bill of the committee is disposed of. I do not see to what it attaches until we complete the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of opinion that the paragraph which the gentleman offers is plainly germane to the bill and can be introduced as a separate paragraph, but the Chair is of the opinion, as suggested by the gentleman from Virginia, that it would be more appropriate and more regular and much better if the paragraph was offered after the subject which is treated of here has been acted upon by the House; that is, after sections 3 and 4 have been disposed of. The Chair will suggest to the gentleman from New Jersey that he withdraw his amendment and renew it again, which will prevent all question.

Mr. SALMON. I will do so, Mr. Chairman. I really thought that this paragraph had been disposed of.

The Clerk read as follows:

Third. That under such regulations as the Postmaster-General may prescribe, a substitute carrier may be employed, at the expense of the regular carrier, to temporarily perform the service on any rural free-delivery mail route.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out that paragraph.

Mr. LOUD. I would like to ask the gentleman from Virginia what his object is? Does not the gentleman want authority to employ a substitute?

Mr. SWANSON. I think the present civil-service rules provide that the carrier may select his own substitute.

Mr. LOUD. The civil-service rules are not law.

Mr. SWANSON. They are law when promulgated by the President, and the President can not revoke them. It has been so held by a test case in the Supreme Court. My objection to this paragraph is that there would be a conflict as to whether the civil-service rules should prevail in connection with the appointment of a substitute or whether it should be left entirely with the Postmaster-General. I think, to have a harmonious system, it would be better to let the carrier select the substitute, and when the substitute comes up for appointment under the civil-service rules—when a carrier is removed—the carrier will be selected just as a carrier for a new route. I want to say, in connection with the civil-service rules, that the best authorities hold that when the President has put a department under the civil service he has not the power to take that department out from under it again.

Mr. SLAYDEN. It has been done, however.

Mr. SWANSON. I do not believe he can do it; and if this was to be in the law, there would be a question whether the control of the substitute was left to the civil service or whether it would be left by this bill to the Postmaster-General, and consequently I think the system would be more in consonance with harmony to have this provision struck out.

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Chairman, I am inclined to think that the House may be in a frame of mind to do something to-day that they may be sorry for to-morrow, when their better judgment comes. If you do not enact this provision, then there will be no law to permit the appointment of a substitute. I care nothing about the civil-service rules; you have no statute that will permit the appointment of a substitute. Without a statute, after we put this service under the statutory law and segregate and provide for it, I say that the Postmaster-General, notwithstanding the civil-service rules, would not be authorized to permit the employment of a substitute. Now, gentlemen, let us not lose our heads on this proposition.

Mr. SWANSON. I do not want to.

Mr. LOUD. I think the gentleman has lost his. The civil service can not promulgate statutory law; they can not make a new office. Heretofore, under the lump-sum appropriation, where we gave the Department three million or four million dollars, they could expend this money as they saw fit. But here we propose to appropriate a specific sum of money for inspectors, a specific sum for carriers; and now if you have no statutes that permit the appointment of a substitute, you are repudiating the substitute carrier because the law itself does not mention any such officer, and, not being mentioned, it is prohibited by law. The gentleman from Virginia and his followers can strike it out if they want to, but they will have no statute authorizing a substitute carrier.

[Mr. SMALL addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. Chairman, the object of my amendment is to prevent any lack of harmony in the rural carrier system. The rules promulgated by the Civil Service Commission, of which Mr. Procter is president, contain this provision with reference to providing substitutes in the rural free-delivery service:

18. A carrier will be required to furnish a suitable substitute. Whenever a carrier becomes separated from the service the postmaster shall employ the substitute carrier, if there be one at the time, and if not, any suitable person until regular appointment can be made. The appointment of a new carrier shall operate to separate the former substitute from the service, the new carrier to furnish his own substitute as herein provided.

Now, as I understand, when it is necessary to fill a vacancy in the position of a carrier the substitute has to undergo the same examination as if a new carrier were appointed.

Mr. HAY. By what authority can the Civil Service Commission create an office?

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. Chairman, in reference to that I will say that this Commission has issued rules and regulations governing the entire rural delivery—putting the entire appropriation and the employees under the civil service.

If gentlemen who have studied the question more thoroughly than I have are satisfied that there will be no chance for the appointment of a substitute unless this bill passes I am willing to withdraw my objection.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. What is the gentleman's objection to this provision for substitute carriers?

Mr. SWANSON. My only objection is that I prefer the substitute carrier should be named by the carrier himself under civil-service rules as promulgated than that the Postmaster-General should name him.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I will state to the gentleman from Virginia that a few days ago they reversed the return of one of the supervisors because he did recommend the appointment of a substitute and put a substitute in office.

Mr. SWANSON. I withdraw my motion, as gentlemen who have examined the subject tell me that the Civil Service Commission would not without authority take action of this kind.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the withdrawal of the amendment? The Chair hears none.

Mr. SALMON. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Hereafter if the petitioners applying for the establishment of a rural free-delivery route shall request that the carrier be selected upon the contract principle, the Postmaster-General shall make such selection in manner as follows:

First. That before any person shall be designated to carry the mail on any mail rural free-delivery route, the Postmaster-General shall cause an advertisement to be posted for not less than ten days, in a conspicuous place accessible to the public, in the post-office from which the mail is to be carried, inviting proposals, in such form as he may prescribe, for the service to be performed. The service shall be awarded to the lowest bidder who shall furnish evidence satisfactory to the Postmaster-General that such bidder is a legal and actual resident of the district or territory in which the proposed service is to be performed; that he is a reliable and trustworthy person, of good moral character, able to read and write, and having sufficient intelligence and ability to properly perform the service, and who shall tender sufficient guaranties that he will personally perform acceptable service; but the Postmaster-General may reject all proposals submitted under any advertisement: Provided, That no person shall be awarded a contract for more than one route under this paragraph.

Second. That no additional compensation shall be allowed to a rural free-delivery carrier unless pursuant to an advertisement and award of service as herein provided.

Mr. HILL. I make the point of order that this amendment is not in order. If it is, I should like to know to what paragraph it applies.

The CHAIRMAN. It is not in order as an amendment, but is offered as a separate paragraph. The Chair wishes to state to the Committee of the Whole that at the suggestion of the Chair the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. SALMON] withdrew this amendment when he offered it to paragraph 3. That paragraph having been continued in the bill, the proper place for the amendment, in the opinion of the Chair, is before that section, the point at which the gentleman offered it. The Chair suggests that unanimous consent be given that the amendment may be offered at that point. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. SALMON. Mr. Chairman, I can not understand how anyone who is in favor of leaving questions, political or otherwise, to the majority of those interested can object to the passage of this paragraph. You have denied the selection of the carriers to those who are in a general way the selectors of the carriers under the contract system; but where the petitioners for a route specially ask that the carrier be selected on the contract principle, it seems to me there can be no possible objection to listening to the request of such petitioners.

In my belief, the time will come when all these carriers will be selected in the way proposed by this bill as it came from the committee, for it is the only just and proper way of making this selection. Who can know better what it is worth to carry the mail in a certain neighborhood than the people who are living in that neighborhood, and the great variation in the value of the services in different neighborhoods is such that you can not do justice to the carriers unless you pay them what they agree upon and are willing to do the service for.

It does not mean, as has been indicated on this floor in the arguments that have been made, that you will have a cheap service. It has no such intention as that, but it is to have a service performed by those who perform it at a price that they are willing to do it for and not at a price to be fixed arbitrarily by some one sent into that neighborhood from the Post-Office Department here. I believe that this paragraph will add very much to the benefits that are to be derived under this measure, and that the rural free delivery will be more easily established and be more satisfactory to the people throughout the country if this system is adopted.

[Mr. BARTLETT addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. BROMWELL. Mr. Chairman, replying to the gentleman from Georgia, I want to call his attention to the fact that the privileges that are given to the discharged Union soldiers in the way of preference in public employment limits that preference and that privilege to those who have been disabled and discharged by reason thereof from the service.

I take it, therefore, that even if a preference was attempted to be extended to the Union soldiers, or for that matter to the ex-Confederate soldiers, to bring them within that class they would have to be utterly unfitted for this rural free-delivery service.

A MEMBER. To what amendment is the gentleman speaking?

Mr. BROMWELL. I have attempted on the floor of this House to secure an extension of that preferential bill to include all soldiers and sailors, as well as those who by reason of wounds or disease were discharged from the Army. And I venture to say that many of the gentlemen who are now agonizing over the amendment that I offered, putting the colored man of the South upon the same footing——

Mr. BARTLETT. Why confine it to the South?

Mr. BROMWELL (continuing). Were among the members who voted against the proposition that I submitted in the last Congress. I have no sympathy, Mr. Chairman, with this proposition, that because a man's skin is dark colored he shall not stand upon the same footing as the other people in this country.

Mr. BARTLETT. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. BROMWELL. I have no sympathy with the idea that in the South the negro shall not only be debarred of his political rights, but that he shall not be permitted to earn an honest livelihood in the Government service, and, therefore, when I heard the gentleman on the other side propose to put the ex-Confederate soldiers upon the same footing with the ex-Union soldier, I felt that justice demanded that the colored man of the South should have his show as well as the ex-Confederate soldier.

Mr. BARTLETT. Did you confine it to the colored man of the South? Did you not say "colored men?"

Mr. BROMWELL. The colored man of the North has no trouble. He gets his rights. [Applause on the Republican side and derisive laughter on the Democratic side.]

Mr. FOX. You shot them in Illinois when they wanted to get work. Instead of giving them employment you shot them.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. And you hung them in Indiana the other day after the jury had acquitted them.

Mr. BROMWELL. I want to say to the gentleman from Tennessee that they do not hang them in that State and they do not shoot them.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. They did hang the defendant negro the other day in Indiana, after the jury had acquitted him.

Mr. BROMWELL. They have a punishment for them worse than hanging or shooting in Tennessee. They compel them to listen to the gentleman from Tennessee, and if that is not worse than hanging I do not know what is. [Laughter.]

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. They would not listen to the gentleman from Ohio anywhere, and you could not force the members of this House to do so if we could help ourselves. [Laughter.]

Mr. BARTLETT. I wish to ask the gentleman a respectful question.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. BARTLETT. I want to ask the gentleman from Ohio a respectful question.

Mr. BROMWELL. I yield to the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] is recognized.

Mr. BARTLETT. Will the gentleman from Mississippi yield to me?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Yes.

Mr. BARTLETT. The gentleman from Ohio said something about hanging negroes in the South. I want to ask the gentleman from Ohio if about two years ago the people of Urbana, Ohio, did not hang a negro who had been tried and convicted of an assault upon a white woman after he had been tried and convicted?

Mr. BROMWELL. Yes; and they hang white men all over the North for the same kind of an offense. They make no discrimination in the North; but they do in the South.

Several MEMBERS. Oh, no.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. HILL having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the President of the United States was communicated to the House of Representatives by Mr. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announcing that the President had approved and signed bills of the following titles:

On March 6, 1902:

H. R. 10308. An act to provide for a permanent Census Office.

On March 8, 1902:

H. R. 5833. An act temporarily to provide revenue for the Philippine Islands, and for other purposes.

On March 10, 1902:

H. R. 3740. An act to confirm title to lot 1, square 1113, in Washington, D. C.;

H. R. 61. An act to authorize the establishment of a life-saving station at Bogue Inlet, North Carolina;

H. R. 10070. An act establishing a United States court at Catlettsburg, in the eastern district of Kentucky;

H. R. 8180. An act granting an increase of pension to William S. Derby; and

H. R. 5801. An act to authorize the St. Clair Terminal Railroad Company to construct and maintain a bridge across the Monongahela River.

RURAL FREE-DELIVERY SERVICE.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I am afraid that my friend the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BROMWELL] is in the condition of the average fellow who finds himself in a hole and attempts to break up the convention in a row. I notice that whenever a man finds himself in a very bad place, if he comes from about the isothermal line of my friend from Ohio, he immediately says something about the way in which the South has treated the darky.

Mr. Chairman, I do not want to go into this subject at this time, except to say that we have been accused down South of hanging them and doing all sorts of things with them for all sorts of causes, except for one. Our people, or rather some of our people, have lynched them for rape. So have yours. We never were accused of hanging or shooting them because the poor darkies wanted to make an honest living in the sweat of their brows. We have never shot any of them because they wanted to work, and it seems to me that I have heard of some instances in some Northern States where that was the case. at Pana, Ill., for example, and yet I would by no means indict the people of a great and good and glorious Commonwealth, like Illinois, for example, because some people in it saw fit to shoot darkies because they wanted to work.

Nor would I indict the people of Indiana because I read this in a morning's paper:

BOYCOTT OF INOFFENSIVE NEGROES IN INDIANA.

VINCENNES, IND., February 16.

At Wheatland, this county, there is a negro settlement. The negroes work for white farmers. All are quiet and inoffensive, but there is a prejudice against them.

The following notices, signed "Firebugs," were to-day found and have produced a sensation:

"Notice is hereby given that any man who employs negro labor after the 1st of March, or harbors, leases, or rents lands to any negro, their houses will be burned after the 1st day of April."

I do not know whether the extract cited sets forth the truth of an actual happening or not. I hope not. I do know that legislatures confer the privilege of suffrage. I do know that God gives the right to work. Indeed, it is more than a right; it is a duty—obedience to a divine command: "In the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread."

But the point I intended to get at here—I do not want to enter into the race question further—is this: A motion was made to give ex-Union soldiers a preference in employment. It was moved that ex-Confederate soldiers have the same preference, and the gentleman from Ohio said that he wanted to put the colored man on an "equality," and offered an amendment to the effect that they be put on the same plane as ex-soldiers. I want to demonstrate that whether he intended it or not his proposed amendment was not a motion for equality but for superiority. He put him upon a superior plane, and gave him the preference. The motion was made to give a preference in these appointments to ex-Union soldiers. An amendment was offered to include ex-Confederate soldiers with the ex-Union soldiers.

Mr. BROMWELL. May I correct the gentleman? The law now gives a preference to ex-Union soldiers, and the motion was to extend it to the ex-Confederate soldiers.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Yes; that is true. I ought so to have expressed myself. The law now provides that ex-Union soldiers shall have a preference. The motion was then made that ex-Confederate soldiers should share that preference; whereupon the gentleman from Ohio offered an amendment to the amendment to the effect that the colored people should also share it. Share what? Equality? No, preference. In other words, it means that simply because his skin is black a man shall have preference in these appointments to everybody with a white skin except ex-Union and ex-Confederate soldiers.

Fifty-nine Republicans voted for it. Now, Mr. Chairman, this is not the time to discuss the race question. I take it that there is one main difference between the South and the North in regard to the race question. You say we do not let him vote down South, and I say that you do not let him do much of anything else except vote up North. [General laughter and applause.] You say we have sometimes denied him the statutory privilege of suffrage. You have frequently denied him that which is a natural, inalienable, and God-given right, the right to work at any vocation or any honest pursuit. [Loud applause.] [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Chairman, I hope it will not be out of the way to speak in relation to this bill. [Cries of "Vote!"] Gentlemen say "Vote!" I am endeavoring to talk about this bill. [Cries of "Vote!"] You will not vote until I get through; but that will not be long.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will suspend, and the Committee will please be in order.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Chairman, here is a simple proposition made by the gentleman from New Jersey to allow the parties applying for rural routes to ask that that route be let by contract, and when they do so I think it ought to be allowed. I want to call attention to the fact that the State of Colorado could have no rural route at all if we pass this bill saying that the salary shall not go over $600, for no one could carry the mail for $600 a year in the mountains of that State.

Were the gentleman from Colorado to send in a petition asking for a route and asking that it be let by contract at a thousand or twelve hundred dollars, it could be established. When I propose to discuss the proposition gentlemen cry "Vote! Vote! Vote!" Now, I ask you to vote, and vote so that Colorado can have a rural route as well as the State of Virginia and other States where the limit of $600 will not be entirely too low. I am ready for a vote now.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this paragraph and amendments be closed.

The motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment proposed.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I ask that the amendment be read.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection the amendment will be again reported.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, the amendment of the gentleman from New Jersey is a very long one.

Mr. SWANSON. It was read about ten minutes ago.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Alabama object?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I object.

Mr. SALMON. It is only necessary to read the first few lines.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is made. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. SALMON. Mr. Chairman, I ask, for the information of the House, that the first few lines be read, so that the House may know what it is. [Cries of "Vote!"]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will wait until the House comes to order. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. GRIGGS. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Alabama withdraws his objection to the reading of the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Jersey requests that the first few lines of his amendment be read. Is there objection?

A MEMBER. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is made.

The question was taken on the adoption of the amendment, and the Chairman announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. SALMON. I ask for a division.

The committee divided, and there were—ayes 65; noes 98.

So the amendment was rejected.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. HILL having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. PARKINSON, one of its reading clerks, announced that the Senate had passed bill without amendment of the following title:

H. R. 4381. An act to authorize the Central Railway of West Virginia to build a bridge across the Monongahela River at or near Morgantown, in the State of West Virginia.

The message also announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 11471) making appropriations for the diplomatic and consular service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1903, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. HALE, Mr. CULLOM, and Mr. TELLER as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

RURAL FREE-DELIVERY SERVICE.

The committee resumed its session.

The Clerk read as follows:

Fourth. That rural free-delivery carriers heretofore appointed and now in the service may be continued as carriers, at a rate of compensation not exceeding $600 per annum, until such time as the Postmaster-General shall advertise for proposals and make awards for the several routes on which such carriers are now employed.

Mr. BROMWELL. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment to this paragraph, which I would like to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That the rural free-delivery carriers provided for in this bill shall not, by any provision or construction of the civil-service law, be included in the classified civil service, any Executive order to the contrary notwithstanding.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the amendment is not germane to the paragraph.

Mr. BROMWELL. Mr. Chairman, upon that point of order there is a provision here that relates to the rural free-delivery carriers heretofore appointed and now in the service, providing that they may be continued in the service at the rate and compensation, etc. This amendment provides that none of these rural free-delivery carriers, whether already appointed or hereafter to be appointed, shall by any construction of the civil-service law be included in the classified service, any Executive order to the contrary notwithstanding.

Now, this gives the gentlemen who are opposed to the civil-service extension over the rural free-delivery service an opportunity to show where they stand.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me it is unnecessary to argue to the chairman of the Civil Service Reform Committee that this amendment to the civil-service law is not germane to this section.

Mr. BROMWELL. It is not an amendment to the civil-service law.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of the opinion that this provision is germane to the bill. The only question in the mind of the Chair is whether it is appropriate to this section, inasmuch as this section applies exclusively to a certain class of carriers, but the Chair is inclined to rule, upon the whole, that it is germane and admissible at this point.

Mr. BROMWELL. Now, Mr. Chairman, I do not desire to make any extended remarks on this subject. Gentlemen can see what the object of the amendment is, and I am perfectly willing that debate should be closed upon the paragraph and amendment.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I desire to know whether a substitute would be in order now to the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio?

The CHAIRMAN. Certainly.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Then I desire to offer a substitute for the proposed amendment of the gentleman from Ohio.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the substitute.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert as a substitute the following:

"The laws, rules, and regulations now in force regulating the civil-service status of employees of the city mail-carrier service shall be employed to the employees of the rural free-delivery service, so far as applicable: Provided, however, That the carriers shall be selected from applicants living on the mail routes they are to serve, if possible."

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Now, Mr. Chairman, I have only a very few words to say. We have heard from the beginning of this debate that the country was in danger by reason of this service; that as matter of fact a great many gentlemen almost admitted that it would be better to abolish the rural free-delivery service for fear that these men would raid the Treasury. They had almost reached the point that they were willing to abolish it in order to protect the Treasury. There has been complaint on both sides of this House that this can be used as a partisan service.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I say that the Post-Office Department is the great business system of the Government. I do not pretend to be any great civil-service man in many respects, but I do say that when you come to run a business department that right here is where civil-service laws, rules, and regulations of this country should apply, if they are going to be applied at all. Here is a proposition that goes into the business of every man in the country—goes into the home of every man in the country—and the great question to be considered is whether you are going to have a good service or a bad one.

If these men who hold positions are going to be appointed from a partisan standpoint, if they are going to hold the positions for political purposes, they necessarily can not give the service and the people along their routes as good service as they can if they are entirely free from any partisanship or from partisan politics. Now, if we want to perfect this system, make it a good system, make it serviceable to the people, and at the same time prevent these men from coming here and demanding an increase of salary by reason of their political services, and not for services they have rendered in the legitimate line of their employment on the part of the Government, we should adopt an amendment putting them under strict civil service or the merit system.

Mr. SWANSON. I simply want to state that the amendment of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] proposes that the civil-service rules applied to city carriers shall be applied to rural carriers——

A MEMBER. So far as applicable.

Mr. SWANSON. We do not know how that term "so far as applicable" may be construed. Are these carriers to be put under civil-service rules and regulations as now promulgated? The city carrier is not required to live on his route; the city carrier does not cancel stamps; the city carrier does not sell stamps. It would seem to me that the proposed amendment is very unwise, as the two classes of employees are on so different a footing. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. Chairman, after having made a speech myself, I do not like to make a motion for closing debate, and I will not do so; but before taking my seat I wish to move that this section be struck out. I desire that motion to be pending.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I shall address the House but briefly in favor of the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD]. All gentlemen on the floor have favored the strength and efficiency of this branch of the Post-Office Department. The hope is not extravagant that we may all have it over our districts, so that all our constituents may share in its benefits and its blessings, within a few years.

It will not be as strong as it should be, nor as pure as a government utility, until it is protected by the rules of the merit system, as are the other branches of the civil service.

This amendment secures that result. To you members from Southern districts, to you on the other side who have so eloquently spoken and who look only to the public good, I appeal to you to free forever this branch of the public service from the danger that might come from dragging it into the mire of political use. The South is equally interested. It may be used, and indeed it has been used, by candidates for nominations as the post-office appointments have been used by politicians. It is under a form of civil service rather strict, but this amendment makes it stronger. Let us see the necessity for this provision. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. WILLIAMS] referred to a press article of this morning that comes to us from Tennessee, and which not only shows the abuse that officers may make of their station, but likewise gives us some notion of the penalty that should be visited on violaters of the rules of the merit system. It reads:

[Special to the Washington Post.]

KNOXVILLE, TENN., March 9.

Charges have been preferred against United States Attorney W. D. Wight, Marshal R. W. Austin, of the Second district; Eli C. Skaggs, assistant postmaster at Nashville; John J. Graham, rural route inspector of Campbell County; Rufus Rutherford, postmaster at Clinton, and Caram Acuff, postmaster at Maynardsville, by Hon. Horace A. Mann, of this city, for violating rule 2 of the Civil Service Commission and the personal injunction of President Roosevelt that Federal office-holders refrain from engaging prominently in political contests.

The charges were forwarded to Washington Saturday evening, and are expected to reach the capital and be in the hands of the Civil Service Commission, the President, the Attorney-General, and the Postmaster-General Monday morning. Personal appeal also was made to President Roosevelt, and he was urged to send an inspector to Knoxville at once, that the investigations into the charges might immediately be commenced.

The charges are the outcome of a contest in the Second Congressional district for the nomination for Congress.

Let us do our duty. Though we may doubt the expediency of the rules of the merit system, yet we know the value of this service, its great good, the difficulty we have in securing all we want of it for our people, and let us strengthen this arm of the public service by elevating it to the standard at least of the other branches of the Government. Let me appeal to all you Southern members to aid us, by applying the rules of the civil service to it, in all their potency and strength.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I ask that it be read again.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to reading the amendment again?

Objection was made.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the substitute.

The question being taken, the amendment of Mr. UNDERWOOD was rejected, there being—ayes 58, noes 104.

Mr. FLEMING. Will the Chair be kind enough to state what is the next proposition upon which we are to vote?

The CHAIRMAN. The next question is upon the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. FLEMING. Upon that I wish to say a word.

Mr. GROSVENOR rose.

Mr. FLEMING. I will yield to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] if he wishes——

Mr. GROSVENOR. I simply wanted to ask to have the proposition read again. I did not hear it.

Mr. FLEMING. I will wait for that.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection the amendment will be again read.

Objection was made.

Mr. FLEMING. Mr. Chairman, if the amendment had been read by the Clerk it would have shown to the House that the purpose of the gentleman from Ohio in offering it is to take the entire rural delivery service out of what is known as the civil service or merit system and place it absolutely at the mercy of what we usually call "the spoils system."

Mr. BROMWELL. Just as it has been up to the 1st of February of this year.

Mr. FLEMING. I so understand. The Civil Service Commission, acting under the Executive order, have placed the rural carriers under the protection of the civil-service law. The object of the gentleman from Ohio is to take them out of that law. Now, the gentleman's record as a spoilsman in this House is perhaps sufficient to relieve him from any suspicion of having another motive; yet I can not keep out of my mind the idea that the main object he has in offering this amendment is not to take the rural carriers out of the civil service or merit system so much as it is to load this bill down with an amendment which he knows will compel the President of the United States to veto the bill rather than have it enacted into law.

President Roosevelt, with a courage that does him honor, stood out before the country as an opponent of the infamous "spoils" system when to do so called for backbone in a man; and since he has been placed in the Presidential chair he has still shown that independence and that manhood. It was all that political pressure could do to keep him from vetoing the permanent Census Bureau bill the other day, by reason of an invasion of the rights of the Civil Service Commission, and the custom and practice under that law.

And if this Congress should send to the President this bill with that provision attached to it I have not the shadow of a doubt that he would promptly put his veto upon it; and I charge that that must be one motive of the gentleman from Ohio in offering that amendment.

Mr. BROMWELL. May I answer the gentleman?

Mr. FLEMING. I will be glad to have an answer.

Mr. BROMWELL. First let the gentleman conclude, and then I will ask five minutes.

Mr. FLEMING. Now, Mr. Chairman, I would not misinterpret any man's motive, and therefore I do not charge it as a fact, but I say that the gentleman's amendment is plainly subject to that construction, and unless he disclaims the purpose I have a right to make that inference; but whether it be his purpose or not, I say if this House accepts that amendment, such will be the effect of it, and I am not concerned so much with his motives as I am with the effect of the amendment. No friend of this bill, no friend of rural free-delivery service will vote for that amendment with the knowledge before him that its purpose or its effect will be to compel a veto by the Executive.

Mr. BROMWELL. Mr. Chairman, first of all I want to deny the statement of the gentleman that I had any such motive as he attributes in offering this amendment. I recognize when I am whipped on the floor of this House as well as anybody. I have advocated earnestly the contract system in this bill. The majority of the House has decided that they do not want the contract system. As a member of the Post-Office Committee, as a member of this House, I feel it my duty to make, as far as possible, this appointive system as nearly perfect as it can be, and I believe it will add to the strength of this system if those carriers are taken out from the classified service in which they have been placed by the Executive order.

Mr. FLEMING. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. BROMWELL. Now, then, I want to call the attention of the House to the fact that my amendment only reaches to the carrier. It has nothing to do with this Executive Department in Washington. The clerks, the agents, the inspectors, or the heads of the Departments can have the civil-service blanket placed over them by the President, but it is to the carrier service that my amendment reaches.

In the arguments before this House by the members of the committee and others upon this floor they called attention to the dangers of this present appointive system, so far as their getting in the classified service. There is no reason why these men should be in the classified service, and therefore I have offered this amendment in good faith, for the purpose of perfecting this bill, and if we are to have a system of appointment for the rural free-delivery service, then, I say, it ought to be such a system as we had prior to the issuing of the President's Executive order.

That is all there is in this. Those of you who believe as I do, that you will load down the classified service, if you are friends of it, must know that you are making this rural service inoperative and unsatisfactory, and will have an opportunity of voting for my amendment to save the service; and the friends of civil service, knowing all the circumstances, knowing all the conditions, will have an opportunity of voting against it.

Mr. FLEMING. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. BROMWELL. Certainly.

Mr. FLEMING. Has not the President by Executive order already placed these carriers under the civil service, and——

Mr. BROMWELL. My amendment is to take them out.

Mr. FLEMING. And do you not believe that if your amendment is adopted the President would veto this bill?

Mr. BROMWELL. Whether he would or not is a consideration that does not appeal to me at all. I take notice that when the majority of the members of this House passed what they thought was a satisfactory census bill and it went to the White House the President had no scruples against stating his wishes and views in the face of the majority of this House. It seems to me that as a coordinate, independent branch of the Government we ought not to confine ourselves or our action here to what we believe will happen when it gets to the other end of the Avenue. [Applause.]

Mr. SLAYDEN. What do the members of the House now think about the census bill?

Mr. BROMWELL. I know what they are saying in undertones. What they think I do not know. I can give it, but it would be too strong for me to put it in the RECORD.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I suppose, Mr. Chairman, that I need not confine my remarks to the subject of the civil-service system as it is now organized. I have spoken on the subject of the merit system, a word we used to hear occasionally; but since the passage of the census bill I will not stultify the records of my country by again talking about the merit system, because in that case the great roll of honor that has been created in the Census Bureau has received a black eye from somebody, I do not know exactly who it is. The present attempt to place the civil service over the rural free-delivery system was happily and eloquently illustrated by myself on this floor on a former occasion, at which time I referred to the scientific examination of the horse, the wagon, and the carriage. Nobody has ever answered that speech and nobody ever can. [Laughter.]

But I will not vote for this amendment, Mr. Chairman, and I will not do it for this reason: I do not care whether the Civil Service Commission goes on further to illustrate its absurdities by procuring an Executive order to take possession of the rural free delivery or not. The more that organization grasps, the more tyrannical it becomes, the more all-pervading and absorbing it becomes, the sooner the people of the country will destroy it. The more it undertakes to purvey all the political patronage of the United States the more surely will the public in the long run condemn it; but I will not vote for an amendment that says that Congress shall decree that an Executive order, even when made under a misapprehension of the law, shall be disobeyed by anybody. The language of this amendment is—

Provided, That the rural free-delivery carriers—

And now I omit a few words that are not necessary to the sense—shall not be included in the classified service, any Executive order to the contrary notwithstanding.

I am not willing to vote for that sort of a defiance of the Administration. I was present as a member of Congress when, after the Executive Departments of this Government had been substantially cleaned out of Republicans and unexamined and in many cases unqualified Democrats had been crowded in, the President issued an order covering them all with a blanket.

Mr. BROMWELL. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. GROSVENOR. Yes.

Mr. BROMWELL. I should like to ask my colleague from Ohio whether if, by unanimous consent, those last three or four words, to which he objects, are stricken out, he would then vote for the amendment?

Mr. GROSVENOR. I would, most undoubtedly.

Mr. BROMWELL. Then, Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for the erasure or omission from the amendment of the words referred to by the gentleman, "any Executive order to the contrary notwithstanding."

Mr. SWANSON. I object.

Mr. FLEMING. I object, too, because the President has already issued the order.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I believe I have the floor. I was present when that order was issued, which first opened my eyes to the wrong and outrage of the organization of the Civil Service Commission in this town, when the present head of it, who had come to this town, as I believe, for the sole purpose of producing the result that he certainly did produce, procured that order to be issued, resulting in a condition of the clerical force in this country that has cost this Government more than $100,000,000 to pay incompetent and worthless clerks.

Mr. HAY. I move to amend the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio by striking out the words "any Executive order to the contrary notwithstanding."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman moves to strike out the words which he indicates, which will be noted by the Clerk.

Mr. SWANSON. I move that all debate on the paragraph and pending amendments be closed.

The motion of Mr. SWANSON was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is first on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY], which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the words, "any Executive order to the contrary notwithstanding."

The question being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr. BROMWELL), there were—ayes 49, noes 77.

Accordingly the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BROMWELL].

The amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the motion of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] to strike out the paragraph.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment as a separate paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by inserting:

That any free public library located where the United States Post-Office Department operates a free rural-delivery system shall be, and hereby is, authorized and permitted to send through the United States mails its books, pamphlets, newspapers, and magazines free of postage when addressed to persons who receive mail on any free rural-delivery routes starting from the post-office in the place where the public library is located, and to be delivered by the carriers in precisely the same manner that other second-class mail matter is now delivered. The United States Government shall assume only the same responsibility with reference to the safe delivery of the same as that assumed in the delivery of other second-class matter, and if returned through the mail to be subject to the same postage as second-class matter.

Mr. LOUD. I raise the point of order that it is not germane to the bill before the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California raises the point of order that it is not germane. The Chair's first inclination is to rule that way, but will hear the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Chairman, I do not care to take the time of the House in discussing the point of order. If the Chair is of that judgment I am willing to submit to the ruling of the Chair, but I desire to say that I differ with the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has not suggested any argument which changes the opinion of the Chair. The Chair rules it out of order.

The Clerk resumed and concluded the reading of the bill.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment as an additional section.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Any carrier in the rural free-delivery service who shall use his official position to promote the interest of any political party or candidate for office shall, upon proof of such fact, be dismissed from the service.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, this simply provides that any carrier who uses his official position to advance the interest of any political party or any candidate shall, upon proof of such act, be dismissed from the service. If it is adopted, you will not have to go and hunt up the civil-service rules and regulations to see what it means, and you will have the same civil service apply to these carriers whether you have a Democratic or Republican administration. It makes no distinction between Democrats and Republicans or white men and colored men. It treats them all alike. From the statements made by gentlemen on the other side, I am satisfied that the most of them are anxious to vote for it in order to prevent any suspicion whatever attaching to their votes on this question, and I trust gentlemen on this side will give it their support. I am satisfied it is in the interest of good service, and without it you may expect that this branch of the public service in many instances will be used for partisan purposes. [Cries of "Vote!"]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is upon the paragraph offered as an amendment.

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. Division, Mr. Chairman.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 81, noes 115.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. WILLIAMS] and the gentleman from California [Mr. LOUD] will act as tellers.

The committee again divided: and tellers reported—ayes 87, noes 115.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. Mr. Chairman, I want to offer the amendment that I have already discussed, and I ask the Chair to get order when the amendment is read.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Amend by adding the following new paragraph:

"No person shall be designated as carrier until he files with the Postmaster-General a certificate, signed by a majority of the bona fide patrons of the route, stating that his designation as carrier will not be objectionable to them."

[Cries of "Vote!"]

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Chairman, that completes the reading of the bill; and I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill with amendments to the House.

Mr. SWANSON. Pending that, if the gentleman will yield for it, I simply want to ask unanimous consent to correct the verbiage of the bill.

Mr. LOUD. I do not yield to any motion or amendment. I will listen to what the gentleman has to state.

Mr. SWANSON. I will state that this is an amendment on page 3 to section 3, which was adopted. The words "Third and that" ought to be left out, so as to make the language exactly correct, to come after the amendment which was on page 2.

Mr. LOUD. I will ask that the Clerk at the desk be instructed to make such verbal correction as may be necessary.

Mr. SWANSON. It is to strike out "Third and that" in the section which was adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent that the Clerk be allowed to make such verbal correction as is necessary. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from California that the committee rise.

Mr. JOHNSON. I desire to offer an amendment of which I had given notice.

The CHAIRMAN. It is too late. The gentleman from California moves that the committee do now rise and report the bill to the House with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. SWANSON. With the amendments as passed in the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. With the amendments as passed in the committee.

The question was taken; and the motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 11728, and had directed him to report the same back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to, and the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and amendments to its passage.

The question was taken; and the previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any of the amendments?

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. SWANSON. To submit a motion generally that the bill be recommitted.

The SPEAKER. That is not in order at this time. Is a separate vote demanded on any of the amendments? If not, they will be submitted to the House in gross.

No separate vote was demanded.

The question was taken; and the amendments were agreed to in gross.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I move to recommit the bill with the instructions to bring in the bill with the following as an additional section.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois moves to recommit the bill with the instructions which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Any carrier in the rural free-delivery service who shall use his official position to promote the interests of any political party or candidate for office shall, upon proof of such fact, be dismissed from the service.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the gentleman from Illinois to recommit the bill with the instructions which have just been reported to the House.

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. I call for the yeas and nays, Mr. Speaker.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 96, nays 140, answered "present" 2, not voting 118, as follows:

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I came into the House before the first roll call was finished, but went to my room and finished some work, and when I came back I was told that we were still on the same call. I stepped out again and when I came back I found that my name had been passed. It appears that I was misinformed and that it was the second call and not the first.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that the gentleman was absent when his name was called, and therefore he can not vote.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. Speaker, I was present during the roll call, but just about the time my name was reached a gentleman spoke to me and I did not hear it called.

The SPEAKER. From the gentleman's own statement he can not vote.

Mr. BRUNDIDGE. Mr. Speaker, I did not vote, for I was under the impression that I was paired with Mr. KNOX. I find that Mr. LLOYD, of Missouri, is paired with that gentleman and therefore I desire to vote.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the gentleman's name.

The Clerk called Mr. BRUNDIDGE'S name, and he voted "aye," as above recorded.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. Speaker, I intended to state to the Chair that I did not hear my name called.

The SPEAKER. Was the gentleman listening for his name when it should have been called?

Mr. JOHNSON. I was paying the ordinary attention, but just then a gentleman spoke to me and called my attention away.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman was listening to the gentleman who spoke to him and not to the Clerk, and the Chair thinks he can not be allowed to vote on the question.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken, and the bill was passed.

On motion of Mr. LOUD, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

SECOND-CLASS MAIL MATTER.

Mr. HOAR. I introduce a resolution, for which I ask immediate consideration.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads be directed to inquire and report to the Senate whether the existing rules of the Post-Office Department concerning second-class mail matter, especially so much as excludes from the second-class matter papers published by religious or educational societies or institutions, be in accordance with law, and if found to be so in accordance, whether there should be further legislation on the subject.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution? The Chair hears none.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I do not propose to ask the Senate to adopt the resolution at this time, because I do not want to have anything appear that might even be taken to be a criticism on the Post-Office Department. I have no doubt that the Post-Office Department has dealt and is dealing with this very difficult question in regard to second-class mail matter with great wisdom and prudence, and in general is right in its dealing. It has seemed to me, however, that the Department has erred possibly when it holds that periodicals, weekly or monthly, published by churches and other religious or educational associations, which are full of news, which have advertisements in them, but also contain a little of their own particular information (which they would have to print in the daily papers if they did not have this means of printing it), are not to be treated as ordinary newspapers. I should like to have that matter considered by the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads. However, I will not ask the Senate to pass this resolution directing the committee to consider it, but only ask that the resolution itself be referred to that committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

SPANISH TREATY CLAIMS COMMISSION.

Mr. CULLOM submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8586) amending the act of March 2, 1901, entitled "An act to carry into effect the stipulations of Article VII of the treaty between the United States and Spain, concluded on the 10th day of December, 1898," having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

The Senate recedes from its amendment to the House bill, and agrees to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

"That section 4 of the act entitled 'An act to carry into effect the stipulations of Article VII of the treaty between the United States and Spain, concluded on the 10th day of December, 1898,' approved March 2, 1901, is hereby amended by adding thereto the following provisions:

"'Such rules and mode of procedure shall conform, so far as practicable, to the mode of procedure and practice of the circuit courts of the United States. The said Commission created by this act is vested with the same powers now possessed by the circuit and district courts of the United States to compel the attendance and testimony of parties, claimants, and witnesses, to preserve order, and to punish for contempt, and to compel the production of any books or papers deemed material to the consideration of any claim or matter pending before said Commission.

"'That the said Commission is also vested with all the powers now possessed by the circuit and district courts of the United States to take or procure testimony in foreign countries. Such testimony may be taken, pursuant to the provisions of existing laws and the rules and practice of the district and circuit courts of the United States, so far as applicable, before the Commission or any commissioner or commissioners appointed under the provisions of this act.

"'That the marshal of the United States for the District of Columbia or his deputies shall serve all processes issued by said Commission, preserve order in the place of sitting, and execute the orders of said Commission; and outside of the District of Columbia the writs of said Commission shall be executed by United States marshals or their deputies in their respective districts.

"'That said Commission or any commissioner appointed by it to take testimony in foreign countries is hereby authorized to appoint an officer to serve any subpœna or process issued by said Commission or commissioner.

"'When testimony is to be taken before any commissioner appointed by said Commission within any district or Territory, the clerk of any court of the United States for such district or Territory shall, on application of either party or of his agent, issue a subpœna for such witness, commanding him to appear and testify before the commissioner at a time and place stated in the subpœna; and if any witness, after being duly served with such subpœna, refuses or neglects to appear, or after appearing refuses to testify, not being privileged from giving testimony, and such refusal or neglect is proven to the satisfaction of any judge of the court whose clerk issues the subpœna, such judge may proceed to enforce obedience to the process or punish the disobedience, as any court of the United States may proceed in case of disobedience to process of subpœna to testify issued by such court; and the production before such commissioner of any paper or writing, written instrument, book, or other document may also be required in the manner prescribed in section 869 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.'"

The House recedes from its nonconcurrence with the Senate amendments, and agrees to the same with amendments as above set forth and stated.

S. M. CULLOM,
H. C. LODGE,
JNO. T. MORGAN,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

GEO. W. RAY,
JOHN J. JENKINS,
S. W. T. LANHAM,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. CULLOM. The conference report has been agreed upon by the House, but on further investigation it is believed that the Senate ought not to agree to the report which the conferees of the Senate agreed to. I therefore ask that the report be disagreed to.

The report was rejected.

Mr. CULLOM. I move that the Senate further insist on its amendments and ask for a further conference with the House of Representatives on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Commerce:

A bill (H. R. 9332) to authorize the Dothan, Hartford and Florida Railway Company to construct a bridge across the East St. Andrews Bay, navigable water, at a point about 1 mile east of Farmdale, in the State of Florida; and

A bill (H. R. 10305) to amend section 14 of the act approved June 29, 1898, entitled "An act to provide for the construction of a bridge across the Niagara River."

The bill (H. R. 11728) to classify the rural free-delivery service and fix the compensation to employees thereof was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

The joint resolution (H. J. Res. 61) granting permission for the erection of a monument or statue in Washington City, D. C., in honor of the late Benjamin F. Stephenson, founder of the Grand Army of the Republic, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Library.

ELECTION OF SENATORS BY DIRECT VOTE.

Mr. BERRY. Mr. President, I should like to make a statement in reference to a measure pending before the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

On the second day of the present session of Congress I introduced a joint resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution providing for the election of United States Senators by a direct vote of the people. The Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL], I think, also on the same day, perhaps, introduced a similar joint resolution, and probably there were others introduced. Since that time the House of Representatives, by a unanimous vote, as I understand it, passed a joint resolution of that character. I think that this is the fourth time the House of Representatives has passed such a joint resolution, and there has been no vote upon it in the Senate.

I am constantly in receipt of letters from all parts of the country urging me to press the joint resolution and to know why a vote can not be had on it. I do not wish to make a motion to discharge the committee from the further consideration of it, but I should like to ask the chairman of that committee if it will be reported probably soon. I want to have the joint resolution reported at such a time as will certainly secure a vote during the present session of Congress. I want the Senate to vote upon the question. If there are not two-thirds in favor of it, of course it will be defeated, but I wish to urge upon the committee that they bring in the joint resolution and let us have a vote upon it.

The question has been pending almost since the formation of the Government, and it has been argued and debated in one way and the other. I imagine that each member of the committee knows at this time how he will vote on it, and I should like to urge the committee to report the joint resolution at the earliest date possible.

Mr. BURROWS. Mr. President, I desire simply to say, as chairman of the committee, that what the Senator from Arkansas has stated is true; that several propositions have been introduced by Senators looking to an amendment of the Constitution so as to provide for the election of Senators by the people, and a measure of that character has already passed the House of Representatives and been referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

I will say to the Senator that there is no disposition, so far as I know, on the part of the committee to shirk any responsibility in that matter, and the measure will be considered by the committee and action taken and a report made to the Senate.

Mr. BERRY. In time to secure a vote during the present session of Congress?

Mr. BURROWS. I have no doubt about it.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, as the Senator from Arkansas has said, the House of Representatives has heretofore passed this proposed amendment several times, and at the present session by a unanimous vote, as I understand it. I desire to supplement the Senator's statement by the additional fact that in April, 1896, the Committee on Privileges and Elections of the Senate as then organized reported favorably by a good majority a similar measure, but too late to receive action at that session.

I am receiving letters daily by the score urging me to do all I can toward securing early and favorable action on this proposed amendment to the Constitution of the United States. I sincerely hope that the Committee on Privileges and Elections will see their way clear at an early date to take action of some kind on this important matter and bring it before the Senate, so that the Senate can have an opportunity to discuss and vote upon it.

Mr. HOAR and others addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there further morning business?

Mr. HOAR. I rose to ask leave to say something in addition to what the other Senators have said.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The debate of course is proceeding by unanimous consent. Is there objection? The Chair hears no objection, and the Senator from Massachusetts will proceed.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I think the statement of the two Senators from Arkansas and Oregon ought not to pass without a word or two in addition.

This is one of the most important questions which has come up for consideration in the Congress of the United States since the adoption of the Constitution. It is the first serious proposition to destroy the principle upon which the Constitution is founded or to depart from it. Other amendments have either been amendments to secure human rights, in the nature of a bill of rights, or in one instance to change the mechanism for the election of a President. But this is a proposition to change the principle upon which the Constitution is founded, a principle without the adoption of which it is notorious as a matter of history the Constitution never would have been agreed to.

The States agreed with great difficulty, and after there was great danger that the convention would break up without accomplishing anything, that there should be a union of the federative and the representative principle; that the States should remain as they then were, equal, with national power and authority in part, and in part should be merged into a nation, voting as nearly as conveniently might be by a majority of the people, and the solemn pledge was given to every State, small and great, that the equality of the States in a Senate should never be destroyed without the consent of every one. It was not merely that they should have some other form of legislative chamber. It was to be a Senate whose members were to be chosen by one remove from a direct popular vote—by State legislatures. That was the Chamber which every State pledged should be preserved, and which no majority was ever to be at liberty to abolish.

Now it is sought to substitute for that arrangement two Houses of Representatives, chosen in a different fashion, but still chosen by a direct popular vote in the method in which officials are chosen by a direct popular vote. For one I do not believe that can be accomplished without a breach of a national pledge which lies at the very foundation of our Government and the adoption of which was essential to its formation.

Further, when you get two Houses of Representatives, only differing in that one has a larger constituency than the other, I do not believe that the great States, like New York, Pennsylvania, Illinois, Ohio, Massachusetts, and Indiana, will submit for a great while to an equality which makes two Senators from Rhode Island or from Nevada, admirably as both those States are represented here, in two Chambers elected in precisely the same fashion, able to hold in check and to vote down the fifteen millions of New York or Pennsylvania; and when this change is accomplished I believe that what is left of that whole promise will be swept away like a leaf before the wind.

Mr. President, this is a question upon which the American people may dwell for months and years, at least, if not for a generation. It is one of the greatest questions ever brought into legislative consideration and for legislative action on the face of the earth anywhere. If the Senate is not to defend itself against popular movements, sometimes hastily and lightly made, it is not to be defended at all.

It is true the House of Representatives have passed this proposition. It has been passed every time without debate there, I think as half a joke. The question is, Which speaks to us with most authority—the House of Representatives of to-day, without deliberation or discussion, or the Constitutional Convention of 1787, after long debate and anxious deliberation?

The Senator says he gets letters; and so do I. The letters show that they are all the product of one man's brain. We understand perfectly well the difference between a genuine popular feeling and one of these expressions that is worked up by some one man or some few men somewhere. I have had, I suppose, hundreds of letters from my State, where I have no doubt the sentiment is overwhelmingly opposed to this thing, although we are a large State, nearly every one of which ends with this phrase, "I hope to hear from you," or, "If you do not agree, please state your reasons." I wonder if there are any other Senators here who recognize that phrase in their correspondence.

Mr. BURTON and others. Yes; I do.

Mr. HOAR. If it is a real genuine popular movement, how does it happen that it comes in the correspondence on this subject as in no other, that every man ends his letter by saying, "I hope to hear from you," or "I hope you will state your reasons?"

Mr. President, I am willing to go to any representative assembly of intelligent American people and meet this proposition to strike at the very heart of our Constitution, and to strike at the constitution of the greatest legislative assembly on the face of the earth, and to meet any champion, however he may be my intellectual superior, secure of success in the goodness of the cause. But I do not mean without a struggle to consent to overthrow this body until the American people have thoroughly and fully understood and considered what they are about.

When the Constitution of the United States was adopted, and ever since, as the great thinkers on jurisprudence and constitutional law have declared their opinion, the homage of mankind has been paid to the men who sat in that great assembly and the generation who adopted their work for two reasons. The first is that they established that great tribunal—the Supreme Court of the United States—which, by its simple authority, sitting in that quiet and silent chamber, keeps State and nation, popular movements and popular excitements, great imperial interests of business or of party, each in its appointed orbit as the stars are kept in their courses. The other is this great assembly, never greater in its capacity to do the will of a free people, to carry out the deliberate and sober second thought of a free people, than it is at this moment.

It is worth waiting six weeks to see whether we are going to strike down one of the two great glories of our Republic and let it perish from the face of the earth. I for one mean to do my duty on that committee, but I will not be hurried, and the Senate shall not be hurried if I can help it.

Mr. BERRY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to further debate? The Chair hears none, and the Senator from Arkansas will proceed.

Mr. BERRY. I will occupy only a very few moments, if the Senate will permit me.

Mr. President, this is not the time nor the place to discuss the merits of the joint resolution. If the Senator from Massachusetts will urge his committee to bring the joint resolution before the Senate, where it can be debated in a proper way and at a proper time, then we will take up the question and answer his arguments.

I simply wish to say now, as the Senator says he will not be hurried, that the Senate has a right to insist that a report of one kind or the other shall be made from that committee. With all his opposition to this joint resolution, I do not think that he will stand here and say that a committee has the power to deprive the Senate of the right to vote one way or the other upon this great proposition. We want to have the joint resolution reported. We want to debate it in the Senate and to take a vote upon it.

I say again, the Senate has the right to insist that the committee shall report the joint resolution either favorably or adversely. I am certain so far as the chairman of that committee is concerned he intends to report it and wants to report it, and I trust the Senator from Massachusetts alone can not prevent a report of one kind or the other from being made.

Now, one word in regard to the popular sentiment. The Senator from Massachusetts says that it all originates from one man.

Mr. HOAR. No.

Mr. BERRY. I understood the Senator to say that it had been worked up by one man.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me?

Mr. BERRY. Certainly.

Mr. HOAR. I said that the hundreds of letters which I got manifested that they, the letters, were all the product of one brain; that they ended with the phrase, "I hope to hear from you," or "I hope that you will state your reasons;" and there are twenty Senators about me who showed either by some expression or by their assent that they get the same kind of letters

Mr. BERRY. I am certain the Senator from Massachusetts left the idea that there was no general sentiment throughout the country in favor of this proposition. Mr. President, is it to be supposed that the man to whom the Senator alludes had the influence to create such a great sentiment in favor of any proposition as that which exists to-day throughout the United States in regard to this measure?

The Senator says he can go before any intelligent assembly and defeat this proposition in debate. It is remarkable, if that is true, that in a body as intelligent as the House of Representatives of the United States of America there was in that great body not one man who recorded his vote during the present session of Congress against the joint resolution. It seems that there is a sentiment over and beyond what has been created by the letters to which the Senator refers.

Mr. DUBOIS. Mr. President, I desire the indulgence of the Senate for only a moment in continuation of the remarks that have been made.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the Senator from Idaho will proceed.

Mr. DUBOIS. Mr. President, I am very loath, being a layman, to differ with my distinguished friend from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] in regard to the Constitution; but the impression I have from my reading of the Constitution and the debates on it is that the fight revolved around the question as to whether each State should have two Senators, and not at all as to the manner in which they should be elected. The great contention was that the smaller States should be equally represented in this great body, and, while it might have been spoken of that the legislature should elect, the impression on my mind made by my reading is that the main contention was that each State should have two Senators.

I would call the attention of the Senator from Massachusetts to the fact—I think it is a fact—that 29 States, through their legislatures, have from time to time demanded that Congress shall allow the States an opportunity to vote as to whether they would amend the Constitution so that the people may elect their Senators.

There is a provision of the Constitution which says in case Congress fails to act upon the demand of the people, if two-thirds of the States through their legislatures shall pass a resolution, the question shall be taken out of the hands of Congress, and must be submitted to the legislatures of the States. Five States have recently done that, and I think that unless the Senate is allowed to debate this question enough States will act to take it out of our hands. Now, it is a simple proposition. I come from a State which has petitioned and enacted, so that it is one of the five States demanding that the people shall be allowed in that State to elect their Senators.

I submit to the Senator from Massachusetts and to those who are opposed to this measure that it would be much better to allow a debate in the Senate on the proposition. I was very much gratified at what the chairman of the committee, of which I have the honor to be a member, said—that he would allow the Senate to discuss this proposition. I object very much to the intimation conveyed by the Senator from Massachusetts, that Senators would pursue the tactics which they have pursued for the last eight or ten years and not allow this question to come before this body.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, may I have a moment by unanimous consent?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, after the Senator from Nevada has been heard, I shall insist upon the regular order.

Mr. STEWART. I thank you.

Mr. President, I do not wish to prolong this debate, but I wish to indorse the argument of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR]. I believe that it would be a fatal movement to the equality of the States. When Senators are elected by popular vote of States and not by the legislatures thereof it will be forcibly argued that the constituents of Senators should be equal. The most difficult problem which the framers of the Constitution were called upon to solve was the preservation of the equality of the States and at the same time giving to the people of the United States at large their full share in the Government.

After a long controversy it was finally decided to have a Senate, representing the equality of the States, and a House of Representatives, representing the people of the United States at large. The States in their corporate capacity elect Senators, the people in their primary capacity elect members of Congress. This framework has produced a Senate the equal, if not the superior, of any legislative body which has ever existed. It is dangerous to tamper with the fundamental principles upon which our Government is founded.

There is another consideration which will appeal to the good sense of the people against electing Senators by popular vote. The dominant party would, of course, elect the Senator. The election of a Senator would be inaugurated in the primaries where political bosses, abundantly armed with ready money, are powerful factors. The suggestion has been made that the election of Senators by popular vote would avoid the scandal which sometimes attaches to their election by the legislature, and also secure full representation at all times for each State.

Would not the scandal of the primaries where millionaires would be contending for the prize eclipse all irregularities of State legislatures? Besides, Congress has it in its power to secure full representation from all the States. I was a member of the Committee on the Judiciary at the time the present law regulating election of Senators was passed. It was passed to avoid a method of preventing the election of Senators by the legislature, which had become quite prevalent. It was necessary for a joint meeting of the two houses to elect the Senator, and by the refusal of one house to meet the other a tie up was secured.

The election law removed that difficulty, but another method has since been adopted to prevent the election of Senators. The law requires a majority vote of all the members of both houses. The method now in vogue to prevent an election is the failure of any candidate to secure a majority. That difficulty is easily remedied by legislation. Let Congress provide that if after a reasonable time no one has secured a majority of all the members of the two houses, that a plurality may elect.

Thus that difficulty might be easily overcome by legislation of Congress. But the demoralization of State politics which would result from electing Senators by popular vote would sap the foundation of the Government. The governors and State officers of the various States are nominated in political conventions. Ordinarily good men are selected and good government is secured in every State. The State offices are not a sufficient prize to tempt millionaires, and consequently the will of the people is fairly represented in the political conventions of the two parties. But a seat in the Senate of the United States might be a sufficient prize to induce millionaires to arm the local bosses with sufficient funds to pack conventions.

Does anybody doubt that it would be much easier to pack conventions by the use of money than it would be to corrupt a legislative body chosen by the people? I do not believe that there is any general corruption in the election of United States Senators. I am aware of charges of corruption against legislatures, Congress, and even the President of the United States, but the people at large have faith in their legislatures, in their State officers, in Congress, and in the Executive. The Constitution is admirably framed to guard against usurpation and corruption.

The States in their corporate capacity have a Senate. The people at large have a House of Representatives, and the Executive is elected by a college of delegates chosen by the people of the various districts. I hope my friend from Massachusetts will press his bill to allow a plurality of the legislature to elect a Senator after a failure of any candidate to secure a majority. Such legislation would secure full representation of the States and remove the only reasonable excuse for election of Senators by the people.

I am surprised that any Senator from a small State should advocate the election of Senators by popular vote. When the constituents of Senators are the people and not the States, why should not each Senator have an equal constituency to every other? If it is the people and not the States, why should the people of Nevada have as many Senators as the people of the State of New York?

If the original compact by which it was agreed that each State should have an equal representation in a Senate is brushed aside and the people of the State are represented in the Senate and not the State in its sovereign capacity, upon what ground can the people of small States claim an equal vote in the Senate with the people of the large States?

I am glad the Senator from Massachusetts has called attention to the magnitude of this question. It is revolutionary. It is the most important question discussed since the adoption of the Constitution. It may be right to destroy the original compact and deny the States representation in the Senate, but before the revolution is effected the people ought to understand what the proposed amendment means. It means the destruction of this body on the principle upon which it was originally organized.

The pretext that the failure of certain States to elect Senators is a sufficient excuse for this revolutionary movement is idle. Legislation, as I have already shown, can remedy that difficulty by providing that in case of failure to secure a majority of the legislature that a plurality may elect, as in other elections. A plurality elects members of Congress, governors, State officers, and the President of the United States. The person receiving the greatest number of votes in the electoral college is declared President. Why should not, with equal propriety, the person receiving the greatest number of votes in a State legislature be declared elected Senator? This would remove the deadlocks that have deprived States of their representation in this body.

The pretense is that this revolution would prevent corruption, when everybody who is familiar with political conventions will understand at once that if there are millionaires in the country who would obtain a seat in this body by the use of money, the opportunity to accomplish such a result afforded by primary elections would be vastly superior to the opportunities now existing to corrupt State legislatures. Besides, the bosses who would control primaries to secure the election of United States Senators would have control of the State conventions to nominate other officers.

The good government which the States have uniformly enjoyed would be in danger. It is well that this question should be discussed. It is well that the people should consider whether they will break down the equality of the States and furnish a motive for the use of money in corrupting State conventions and thereby deprive themselves of the orderly government that they now enjoy, or whether they will stand by the compact of the Constitution and adhere to a Senate representing sovereign States, a body of men the equal of any other legislative body on earth and as competent now as it ever was to perform all the duties imposed by the Constitution.

Whatever may be said of the past, there can be no doubt that the Senate of the United States to-day is as competent to meet the increasing obligations which the growth of the United States imposes as the Senate one hundred years ago was to meet the exigencies which then existed.

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator allow me to make one suggestion right there?

Mr. STEWART. Certainly.

Mr. HOAR. The question to my mind is not what the House of Representatives does without debate or without consideration, but what our fathers, who framed the Constitution, did after very long debate.

Mr. STEWART. The great question and the one which was considered most difficult to solve was finally solved in a satisfactory manner, which has produced the results which we all know. It produced a body, I repeat, equal to any legislative body on earth, capable of conducting the affairs of the Government, capable of satisfying the whole country.

The clamor to destroy the Senate of the United States as ordained by the fathers of the Constitution ought not to prevail. Those who do not know that the Constitution could not have been formed if the equality of the States had not been recognized in the Senate, those who do not realize that the proposed movement is revolutionary, those who do not realize that the election of Senators by State legislatures is a safeguard against the corruption of primaries by the rich would do well to inform themselves before they take part in undermining the foundation of the Government of the United States ordained by the Constitution. No amendment heretofore made has changed the original framework of the Constitution. But the one now offered, if successful, I fear, would be the beginning of the end of our magnificent representative system.

JOHN Y. COREY.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The morning business is closed, and the Secretary will report the first bill on the Calendar.

Mr. GALLINGER. I desire to make a report from the Committee on Pensions. I am instructed by the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 4366) granting a pension to John Y. Corey, to report it with an amendment.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask, now, to have read a part of the report of the Committee on Pensions. I will not ask that the whole of the report be read, but I ask the Secretary to read the part of the report commencing on page 2 with the words "Major Foster's wound is in the abdomen," and then the affidavit of Dr. McNutt. It will only take a moment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read from the report submitted by Mr. BURTON, from the Committee on Pensions, on the 3d instant, as follows:

Major Foster's wound is located in the abdomen. When wounded, he was left upon the field of battle in a supposed dying condition, but was afterwards taken from the field and for months lay in a hospital lingering between life and death. His partial recovery was a marvel to the surgeons and those who were familiar with the nature of his wound. In the spring or early summer of 1863 he rejoined his regiment, but in a very feeble condition. Nothing but his indomitable will and unconquerable spirit enabled him to continue with his regiment to the end of the war. He has suffered from his wound and its effects all these years while struggling to make a living for himself and dependent family. His vitality has been wonderful, but it has about given way under the continuing effect of his wound, until now he is disabled from further work and is in a very dependent condition.

There is ample evidence on file as to Major Foster's bravery and loyalty as a soldier and of his years of suffering from his terrible wound. His present condition and the serious nature of his disability are clearly shown by the following evidence of Dr. I. N. McNutt, of Pevely, Mo.:

STATE OF MISSOURI, County of Jefferson:

Personally came before me, a notary public in and for the aforesaid county and State, I. N. McNutt, a citizen of Pevely, county of Jefferson, State of Missouri, well known to me as responsible and entitled to credit, and who, being duly sworn, declares in relation to the case of Maj. Emory S. Foster, of St. Louis, State of Missouri, that he has this day examined said Maj. Emory S. Foster and finds his condition as follows: Bowels constipated; kidneys acting well; action of heart irregularly intermittent, varying during the four hours under observation from 40 beats regularly intermittent to 65 irregularly intermittent, and 80 and regular; pulse sometimes strong and full, then weak and small; again full and strong. This has been the character of his pulse for the last thirty-four years to affiant's certain knowledge, and in his opinion is due to some injury of the sympathetic nerves received at the time of the gunshot wound described in a former affidavit. While these symptoms are of the same character as they were more than thirty years ago, they have become intensified with increasing age.

The affiant further declares that the dragging sensation at the old site of the bullet in the front abdominal wall, which in his opinion is caused by adhesions between the abdominal wall and some part of the intestines, gives Major Foster more pain than it did at the time of former affidavit, especially when sitting erect or leaning a little back. The affiant further declares that a halt or inability to control the action of the left leg, with loss of sensation in the leg, a prominent symptom thirty years ago, and which had to some extent disappeared, though the anesthesia remained, has returned to the extent that unless he or his attendant is constantly on the watch the leg is liable to give way—that is, fails to perform its function—and the result is a fall, of which the abrasions and black spots on his knees testify he has had many since last affidavit.

Affiant further declares this trouble, in his opinion, is due to injury of the spinal nerves, received at the time of the gunshot wound.

Affiant further declares that there seems to be mental as well as physical exhaustion, as evidenced by loss of memory as to dates and words, and in a disposition to repeat incidents of early life, and an indisposition to mental effort, all of which were absent in former years.

Affiant further declares that said Maj. Emory S. Foster's mental and physical condition totally incapacitates him for any manual labor, and that he is entirely dependent on his ever-faithful wife, who devotes her whole time to him.

Affiant further declares that he has no interest, either direct or indirect, in the prosecution of this claim.

I. N. McNUTT, M. D.

Sworn to and subscribed before me this 15th day of November, A. D. 1901; and I hereby certify that the affiant is a practicing physician of good standing, and that all the words added and all the words erased were done before the execution of this paper; and that I have no interest, either direct or indirect, in the prosecution of this claim.

[SEAL.] CLARA E. ZOLLMANN,
Notary Public.

(My term expires January 19, 1905.)

Mr. COCKRELL. Mr. President, it is a very rare thing that I differ with the Committee on Pensions or undertake to change any report they have made, for I believe they aim to do exactly right. This report changing the proposed amount of the pension from $100 per month to $50 is in accordance with their rule; but I submit that what has already been read from the report proves beyond the shadow of a doubt the total physical disability for which, under the pension laws, the claimant is entitled to $72 per month. Therefore I move to amend the amendment of the committee by making the amount $72 per month. I hope there will be no opposition to it.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will not resist the motion; but I will venture to suggest, and I think the Senator will agree with me, that this is one of the cases which shows that the soldier has not received what is due him at the Bureau of Pensions.

Mr. COCKRELL. I think so myself.

Mr. GALLINGER. He got only $25 a month there, and we proposed to increase the pension to $50 per month, but I think, as the Senator suggests, this man is entitled to the full rating for disability requiring the constant aid and attendance of another person.

Mr. COCKRELL. I happen to know this gentleman from boyhood. He was wounded at Lone Jack in one of the most desperate battles ever fought between two volunteer commands, one of them under Major Foster and the other under my brother.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. MARTIN. I did not know that there had been an agreement merely for the consideration of pension cases; I thought we were going on with the Calendar regularly.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the report in the case be read.

The Secretary read the report submitted by Mr. FOSTER of Washington on the 7th instant, as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 2609) granting a pension to Lizzie C. Young, have examined the same and report:

The report of the Committee on Invalid Pensions of the House of Representatives, hereto appended, is adopted and the passage of the bill is recommended.

The House report is as follows:

"This bill proposes to pension the beneficiary named in the bill at $12 per month.

"The records of the War Department show that Richard J. Young, the soldier named in this bill, was enrolled on October 17, 1864, at Rock Island, Ill., in Company G, Third Regiment United States (rebel) Volunteers, and that he was mustered out with his company November 29, 1865; that at the time of his enlistment he was a rebel prisoner of war in the hands of the United States military authorities, and that from April 12 to April 25, 1865, he was under treatment for intermittent fever.

"The records of the War Department also show that this soldier enlisted July 16, 1861, at Arkadelphia, Ark., in Company E, Thirty-third Arkansas Volunteers, C. S. A.; that he was originally a member of Company A, Twelfth Arkansas, C. S. A.; that the rolls for August and October, 1862, and February and April, 1863, show him present for duty, and the roll of June and August, 1863, as left sick at Monroe, Ga., August, 1863.

"He was pensioned in 1881 under the general law at $8 per month from the date of his discharge, on account of an injury to the left leg, with resulting disease to bone and ulceration, which injury was received by him on the march from Fort Riley, Kans., to Fort Kearney, about April, 1865. He died February 5, 1897, of pneumonia.

"The claims of the beneficiary as the widow of the soldier, filed under the provisions of the act of June 27, 1890, was rejected March 30, 1897, upon the ground that title to such pension could not obtain, for the reason that the records of the War Department show that the soldier engaged in the late rebellion against the United States, and her claim under the general law was also rejected, in 1898, upon the ground of claimant's declared inability to furnish the necessary evidence to connect her husband's death, in 1897, from pneumonia, with the military service. The beneficiary was married to the soldier on June 26, 1888, and the soldier left surviving him three minor children, all of whom are still under 16 years of age.

"The claimant alleged that her husband had been unable most of the time since the war to perform manual labor; that he had been under medical treatment, but that she was unable to obtain the affidavit of the physicians who had treated him.

"Pension Office papers also show that the beneficiary is in destitute circumstances.

"Your committee is of the opinion that section 4716, Revised Statutes, as to disloyalty should not be a bar to pension under the act of June 27, 1890, and that, following precedents, the beneficiary named in the bill should be entitled to the rate provided by the act of June 27, 1890, to widows whose husbands served ninety days or more in the military service of the United States and were honorably discharged, etc.; hence report the bill back with the recommendation that it pass."

Mr. COCKRELL. Mr. President, I wish now to read Senate joint resolution No. 8, introduced by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. PRITCHARD] on the 4th of December, 1901, and reported by him on February 10, 1902:

A joint resolution construing the act approved June 27, 1890, entitled "An act granting pensions to soldiers and sailors who are incapacitated for the performance of manual labor, and providing for pensions to widows, minor children, and dependent parents."

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the act approved June 27, 1890, entitled "An act granting pensions to soldiers and sailors who are incapacitated for the performance of manual labor, and providing for pensions to widows, minor children, and dependent parents," is construed and held to include all persons who served for ninety days in the military or naval service of the United States during the late war of the rebellion, and who have been honorably discharged therefrom: Provided, however, That the foregoing shall not apply to those who served in the First, Second, Third, Fourth, Fifth, and Sixth Regiments United States Volunteer Infantry, who had a prior service in the Confederate army or navy, nor to those who, having had such prior service, enlisted in the military or naval service of the United States after the 1st day of January, 1865.

I wish to know if the Committee on Pensions have reversed their decision in this case. In this joint resolution they expressly exclude from the benefits of the pension law all the members of the First, Second, Third, Fourth, Fifth, and Sixth Regiments, most of whom were in prison at the time those regiments were organized.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will ask the Senator from Missouri if this soldier was in one of those regiments? If so, it has escaped my attention. He was a member of Company G, Third Regiment United States Volunteer Infantry.

Mr. COCKRELL. Certainly. The joint resolution says the First, Second, Third, Fourth, Fifth, and Sixth regiments.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will say that the committee have not reversed the opinion they expressed in reporting the joint resolution, and for that reason I would ask that the pending bill be passed over.

Mr. COCKRELL. I wish to say just a few words more. As I understand from a report made at the last session of Congress, those six regiments were made up of Confederate prisoners——

Mr. GALLINGER. That is right.

Mr. COCKRELL. Who were in prison there, and I infer from that report that it was distinctly understood at the time when they were mustered into the service that they were not to be made to fight against their former comrades.

Mr. GALLINGER. That was the agreement.

Mr. COCKRELL. And they were therefore sent out to the West, and for that very reason they were excluded in the last bill from the operations of the pension law of June 27, 1890.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator states it with precise accuracy. That was the reason.

Mr. COCKRELL. Now, then, there is another point. There were a considerable number of men both in Arkansas and Missouri who in the beginning of the war were either in the Missouri State Guard or in some Arkansas organization. They afterwards went into the Union Army and served. A great many of them were pensioned, and their names have all been stricken from the pension rolls on the ground that under the law of June 27, 1890, no one could be pensioned who had seen voluntary service in the Confederate army.

Now, I want all those men treated alike. Not a week passes that I do not get a letter from some of them, wanting his pension restored. I have answered them all alike—that it all depends upon the passage of joint resolution No. 8, and therefore I do not want any special favoritism shown. Let them all stand alike or fall alike, and it is for the Senate to determine what action shall be taken.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator is undoubtedly right in that contention. I will state to the Senator that during the Fifty-sixth Congress the Senate passed a joint resolution similar to the one now on the Calendar, or substantially the same.

Mr. COCKRELL. Exactly. It was passed here and reported favorably in the House, but not acted upon in the House.

Mr. GALLINGER. It was reported there with amendments. That is right.

Mr. BATE. Mr. President, in addition to that, it is a part of the history of these matters that there were some Federals who enlisted in the Confederate service and did service in camp and battle. I know whereof I speak, as some of them were assigned to my own command. Some of them came from Andersonville prison. These men, some of then, have occasionally made application for restoration to the rolls with a view of getting pensions, and the Military Committee, of which I am a member, has invariably set them aside on the same principle. While this party here may not belong to one of those regiments designated in the order just read by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL], yet the principle should hold good in this and all other such cases, and this application should be denied.

Mr. GALLINGER. This bill coming from the House evidently failed to get that careful scrutiny which the committee always gives to every bill, and I will now move that it be recommitted to the Committee on Pensions.

The motion was agreed to.

Smith, late musician, band, Fifteenth Regiment Massachusetts Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The thirty minutes have expired.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HALE. Now, I hope we will proceed with the Calendar under the five-minute rule, and we can easily dispose of all cases in perhaps an hour——

Mr. BERRY. I hope the Senator from Maine will not insist upon that. The Senator from Alabama [Mr. PETTUS] has a bill which is very important to my State, and it will take but a little while to pass it.

Mr. HALE. Is it not on the Calendar?

Mr. BERRY. He has not yet reported it. He is ready to report it from the Judiciary Committee, and I should like to have it passed now, if possible. I hope the Senator from Maine will permit it to be passed.

Mr. PETTUS. I ask leave to make a report from the Committee on the Judiciary.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GALLINGER in the chair). Does the Senator from Maine yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. HALE. Before I yield I wish to make an appeal to the Senate. The Calendar has never been reduced to so small a number and in so small a space as it is to-day, and the reason is that, contrary to the usage which we have had for years of taking up particular bills on the Calendar and passing them at the request of Senators, we have for several days gone to the Calendar and taken them up in order, and bills in which Senators are interested have been passed, and we have almost cleared the Calendar. By doing that every Senator is put on the same basis. We reach his bill in order. He is not obliged to ask the unanimous consent of the Senate.

Now, I do not propose, if that course has not vindicated itself to the Senate, and if it is better to fall back on the old way, when every Senator scrambles for his own bill and gets it through and other Senators who have bills upon the Calendar do not get theirs in, I am not going to stand alone. The interest I have taken in the Calendar is in the interest of all the members of the Senate who have bills in which they or their constituents are interested.

I will not resist the appeal now of the Senator from Alabama, but I give notice that to-morrow morning after the routine business I shall object to the consideration of any particular bill and I shall ask the Senate, as it has done for several days heretofore, to go to the Calendar and take up bills in their order.

COURTS IN ARKANSAS.

Mr. PETTUS. Mr. President, by instruction of the Committee on the Judiciary, I report back without amendment the bill (H. R. 7458) to re-form the western judicial district of the State of Arkansas. It is simply to establish another court in the western district of Arkansas, which is very much needed there, and I have also been instructed by the committee to ask that the bill be now put on its passage.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alabama asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

THE MILITARY ESTABLISHMENT.

Mr. PROCTOR. I ask that the bill (S. 3327) in amendment of sections 22 and 26 of an act approved February 2, 1901, entitled "An act to increase the efficiency of the permanent military establishment of the United States," be taken up.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Vermont asks for the present consideration of a bill which will be read for the information of the Senate.

The Secretary read the bill, and, by unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment, in section 2, page 4, after line 12, to add the following:

Vacancies which shall occur in the position of Chief of the Corps of Engineers, the Medical Department, or the Judge-Advocate-General's Department shall be filled by detail from the corps where the vacancy occurs for the term of four years, and at the expiration of such detail or of a redetail such chief shall be returned to his proper grade in his corps in the manner provided in this section for the return of the chiefs of other corps to their proper grade.

Mr. PROCTOR. From the committee, in lieu of the amendment at the close of the bill, I submit an amendment which is the same in substance, but expressed in another form.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The proposed amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add at the end of the bill, in lieu of the committee amendment, the following:

The provisions of this section relative to the appointment, duration of service, and return to proper grades of the chiefs of the staff, corps, and departments hereinbefore named shall also apply in the case of any officer who shall hereafter be appointed to the Chief of the Corps of Engineers, of the Medical Department, or of the Judge-Advocate-General's Department, except that the chief of the corps or of either of the departments last named above shall be selected from the corps or department in which the vacancy as chief shall occur.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PROCTOR. I propose a further amendment. On page 3, line 23, I move to strike out the word "redetailed" and to insert the word "reappointed."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PROCTOR. In line 25, just below, I move to strike out the word "detailed" and to insert the word "appointed."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, it is difficult to see from the reading of these meager amendments, which carry nothing of intelligence in them, but which may be all right, what is their effect. Now, I want the Senator to tell me and to tell the Senate, after this bill passes as amended here to-day, how it leaves the appointments of the heads of these corps in the War Department as to their time of service. Are they all hereafter to be appointed or detailed—whichever phrase may be used—for four years?

Mr. PROCTOR. Mr. President, they are to be. That is the purpose of the single amendment of section 22. By a slip in the purpose of the committee in the act called the reorganization bill of February 2 of last year, in reference to the Engineer Corps, the line was inserted, "Provided, That the Chief of Engineers shall be selected as now provided by law." As then provided by law, the Chief of Engineers was selected for the term of his active service.

Mr. HALE. And he remained until he retired?

Mr. PROCTOR. He remained until he retired. A few months since, when Colonel Gillespie was made general and Chief of Engineers, the nomination was first sent in as a detail for four years. Then attention was drawn to this line, and the nomination was withdrawn, and he was nominated during his active service. It makes no practical difference in that case, because his active service only continues about five months beyond the four years' detail, but of course we wish to have it conform to the principle we adopted of a four years' detail.

Mr. HALE. I am very much in favor of the scheme that has been adopted by the committee of selecting these heads of corps with the limitation of time that has always applied in the Navy Department. It works well in the Navy Department, and there has never grown up in the Navy Department the feeling that there has been with reference to the long duration of terms in the corps of the Army. There is less jealousy on the part of the line and staff of the Navy of the heads of these bureaus than has heretofore been seen and known by us all in the Army. I believe that the new scheme will work well, I only rose for the purpose of seeing whether that is to be applied hereafter in all these cases.

Mr. PROCTOR. The question was a pertinent one. I will say that this measure has been gone over very carefully by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] and myself as a subcommittee, and the purpose of it was to correct some slight errors (and we were surprised there were not more) in the large bill that was passed last winter, so as to make the whole thing symmetrical and harmonious, in accordance with the general plan that was then fixed upon.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Mr. President, I think I am in favor of this measure, but I had the impression that when we passed the Army reorganization bill at the last session we deliberately excepted the Engineer Corps, the Judge-Advocate's Corps, and perhaps one other from the application of this principle of a four-years' detail. I wish to inquire whether that was the case, and if we are now changing the Army reorganization bill in that respect?

Mr. PROCTOR. Those corps—the Engineer Corps, the Judge Advocate's, and the Medical Corps—were excepted from the general detail system. The engineers are not obliged to go to the line, but the chief of those three corps. It was the purpose of the bill last winter to make the chief, and the chief only, subject to the four-years' detail.

Mr. COCKRELL. But only detailable from the corps.

Mr. HALE. These corps do not interchange?

Mr. PROCTOR. No; they do not interchange. We provide in this bill a clause which was not fully expressed, but it was our purpose that the selection of chiefs of those three corps shall be made from the corps.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. You do not change the existing law in that respect in this bill?

Mr. PROCTOR. No.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PROMOTION OF COMMERCE.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, it is the duty of the Chair to lay before the Senate the unfinished business, which is Senate bill 1348.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 1348) to provide for ocean mail service between the United States and foreign ports, and the common defense; to promote commerce, and to encourage the deep-sea fisheries.

Mr. MALLORY rose.

Mr. ALLISON. Before the Senator from Florida proceeds I ask that the pending amendment, if there is any pending amendment, may be read. I wish to know the state of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is informed that no amendment is now pending.

Mr. ALLISON. No amendment is pending?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. No amendment is pending.

Mr. MALLORY. Mr. President, this bill is an expression of the sentiment of the dominant party of the country to-day and is in keeping with the policy which, since that party first came into power, has animated it. It is in keeping with that system of legislation which for many years has proceeded on the theory that it is proper and just for the Government to lend its aid to individuals for the purpose of building up industries in which such individuals may be engaged on the plea and theory that by so doing they are contributing to the public weal.

This bill is divided into three separate and distinct parts, each part relating to an apparently different subject, but all three bearing directly in their ultimate analysis on the result sought to be attained by the Republican party in its policies in the past, namely, building up of private enterprises at the expense of the taxpayers.

The bill is divided into three titles. Title 1 proposes to provide a system of increasing the mail communications of this country with foreign countries. Title 2 proposes to add to the merchant marine of the United States engaged in foreign commerce by giving a subsidy or bounty to those who own ships engaged in foreign commerce, and title 3 is devoted to the purpose of conferring bounties upon persons engaged in what is known as the deep-sea fisheries of this country.

The reasons alleged in the bill for the provisions relating to title 1, whereby it is sought to promote the means of postal intercourse between the United States and foreign countries, are that it is necessary in order to advance our trade; that we must take advantage of the opportunities which are presented to us by the fact that our products can be placed in foreign markets at rates that will compete with the products of foreign countries and thereby secure the exchange of our products with foreign products and at the same time open a new commercial evangel between the United States and the nations of the world.

The argument of the eloquent Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE], who is the father of this bill, and who was a very able exponent of a measure not entirely dissimilar from this which occupied the attention of the Senate something like a year ago, is that our postal communications are so inefficient at present that it is absolutely necessary in order to carry on business with foreign countries that the facilities for communication should be increased at any cost. For the purpose of doing that, and to facilitate the passage of a large postal subsidy through Congress, it is contended that we can at the same time provide a number of vessels of such size and of such character as will, in the event of a maritime war, become very useful to the United States as an adjunct to its naval power.

The bill contains a provision to that effect, that such vessels as shall have the benefit of the contracts provided for in the bill for the transmission of the mails shall undergo inspection while under construction, and shall be favorably reported on by naval inspectors as to their capacity and qualifications for auxiliary cruisers.

Under title 1—the postal-subsidy title—provision is made whereby the vessels which receive the benefit of the immense subsidy provided in the bill may in the case of necessity, in the event of war between this nation and any great maritime nation, be utilized as auxiliary cruisers; and much stress is laid upon the advantage which would accrue to the Government from having at its command a number of swift ocean-going vessels that may be used for the purpose of scouting or preying upon the enemy's commerce.

Now, Mr. President, to one who examines closely that argument it would seem that it is hardly a justification for the extraordinary expenditure which is proposed under this bill. The Senator from Maine estimates that up to five years from now the expenditure authorized under this title, or under the entire bill, will not exceed the sum of $6,000,000. That is purely a guess. It is impossible to say what will happen within the next five years. Very probably the Senator from Maine has figured it out very carefully, taking into view all the possible contingencies that occur to his mind, but, Mr. President, it strikes me as being rather a wild conjecture to say that within that time any particular number of vessels will or will not be built in the event this bill becomes a law.

The question of encouraging the building of swift trans-Atlantic steamers for the purpose of furnishing auxiliary cruisers in case of war with foreign nations is one which has not been examined very closely, as far as I have been able to observe, either in this body or in the other. We did have some little experience, in our recent war with Spain, with what are called auxiliary cruisers, inasmuch as two vessels of the American Line were employed as aids or scouts to our fleet down in the West Indian waters, and I believe they rendered some good service. But I hardly think that our experience in the Spanish war will furnish a just and proper criterion for our guidance when we come to legislate with reference to a war with a great maritime nation.

Spain had no fleet except the unfortunate fleet that came across the ocean and, like a flock of partridges, sought shelter in the nearest cover they could find and were finally destroyed. In the event of war with a maritime nation such as Great Britain or Germany, Russia, or France, these auxiliary cruisers would not be left alone to scour the seas and to scout from port to port.

The policy of the maritime nations of the world to-day is to build vessels, armored cruisers, protected cruisers, and even battle ships of such speed as to be able to overtake on the high seas any of those fleet greyhounds of the ocean that are referred to as such desirable material for auxiliary cruisers; and it is a fact that we have now in the course of construction 10 cruisers of 22 knots capacity, any one of which would be able in a four or five hours' chase to run down any one of the vessels which are contemplated by this bill. Besides a large fleet of 22-knot cruisers, we are also constructing and have constructed a large number of torpedo-boat destroyers, vessels of small tonnage, averaging probably about 400 tons, but seagoing vessels of great power and speed, well armed, and with great steaming capacity and ability to carry coal.

Some of those torpedo-boat destroyers are of a speed of 30 knots an hour; others are of a speed of 29 knots an hour, and a number of a speed of 26 knots an hour. All of them could run down at sea any merchant vessel that now flies the flag of any nation in the world. There would be no earthly chance for one of those auxiliary cruisers to escape from one of those torpedo-boat destroyers or from one of the armored cruisers of the 22 or 23 knot capacity; and I take it that if we were to add a large number of such auxiliary cruisers to our Navy we would be simply weakening our offensive strength and adding nothing whatever to our defensive power. Therefore I hold that there is but little in the suggestion contained in this bill and given forth in the arguments of those gentlemen who have undertaken to sustain it, that the auxiliary-cruiser feature of the measure is one of very great importance and worthy of much consideration.

It will be observed on a close examination of the measure that the compensation under title 1 is based principally upon tonnage. It is true that it requires also certain speed rates, which are fixed in the measure. I will state the provision which is made for compensation for the different classes of vessels which are provided for in the measure.

There are seven distinct classes. Under the act of 1891, of which this particular chapter of the bill is an amendment, there were only four classes of ships. It has been thought proper—and I think perhaps the distinction is well founded—that there should be a larger division of classes, so that vessels of varying speed should be paid according to the differences in their speed ability.

The maximum size of vessels provided for in this bill is 10,000 tons and over, and under that head of 10,000 tons, which constitutes one class, there are included two classes of speed, namely: Vessels of 20 knots or over, and vessels of 19 knots and less than 20 knots. The 19-knot vessels are of 10,000 tons, but are put down as of the second class. Then the bill provides that there shall be vessels of 5,000 tons, and under that description there are four distinct classes, namely: The third class, which is to be 18 knots or over; the fourth class, 17 knots and less than 18 knots; the fifth class, 16 knots and less than 17 knots, and the sixth class, 15 and less than 16 knots. These vessels all must be over 5,000 tons. Then the last division, based upon tonnage, is for vessels of over 2,000 tons, which of themselves constitute the last and seventh class, which are required to have a speed of 14 knots or over.

The chairman of the Committee on Commerce, in his speech on this bill the other day, stated very frankly what his purpose was in making this classification and in providing the payments which are provided in the measure upon the different classes of ships here provided for. He stated that he desired to encourage the building of ships of great tonnage in order that freights might be cheapened, because freights by vessels carrying very large cargoes can be reduced to lower rates than are the freights of vessels carrying small cargoes. Therefore he takes the first class of vessels of 10,000 tons and 20 knots or over and provides that they shall receive 2.7 cents per ton for every hundred miles traveled.

Steamships of the second class, that is, of 10,000 tons, of 19 knots speed and less than 20 knots, shall receive 2.5 cents per ton for every 100 miles traveled. Vessels of the third class, that is, vessels over 5,000 tons and of 18 knots or over, are to receive 2.3 cents per ton for every 100 miles traveled. Of the fourth class, namely, vessels of 5,000 tons or over and 17 knots or over in speed, shall receive 2.1 cents per ton. Vessels of the fifth class, of 5,000 tons or over and 16 knots or over, are to receive 1.9 cents per ton; and vessels of the sixth class, of 5,000 tons or over and 15 knots and less than 16 knots, are to receive 1.7 cents per 100 miles per ton. Finally, the last, steamships of the seventh class, that is, of 2,000 tons or over and which have a speed of 14 knots or over, shall receive 1.5 cents per ton.

The Senator from Maine contends that this will contribute to the construction of a fleet of very large-sized vessels, and his argument is very powerful in leading to the conclusion that it will greatly facilitate the transportation of the products of this country to foreign nations; but, Mr. President, it seems to have been forgotten that there must be a limitation upon the size of ships. It is a fact, which statistics demonstrate, that the great bulk of the carrying trade of the world on the ocean is done by vessels of less than 6,000 tons; in fact, it is done by vessels of very much less than 6,000 tons.

The reason for that is very obvious, if one undertakes to give the matter consideration, because, as you increase the size of the ship, you increase its draft, and a vessel of 10,000 tons must necessarily draw more water than a vessel of 5,000 tons, build them as you may, and it has been a problem, which shipbuilders have been striving with for a number of years, to put the largest carrying capacity, together with a safe character of ship, on the least possible draft. It is a fact that south of Newport News or the Chesapeake Capes there is but one port in the United States into which a vessel drawing over 27 feet of water can enter, and that is a port on the Gulf. There is said to be 27 feet of water between the jetties at New Orleans, but if there are 27 feet of water there, a vessel drawing 26 or 26½ feet sometimes runs aground in going out of the Passes.

The shipbuilders of the world and the shipowners of the world are aware of the fact that the deep-water ports of the world are very limited in number, and that, if they want to do the commerce of the world successfully, they must accommodate themselves to the conditions which qualify that commerce; and with the exception of the relatively very few ports in the United States, and a very few ports in South America, it is an absolute necessity that vessels of smaller tonnage than 6,000 tons must be employed in that trade. Because of their great draft vessels drawing more than 22 or 23 feet when loaded will not be able to enter such ports. Therefore I do not think there is any occasion for us to proceed hastily with the idea that it is essential that all the merchant ships of the United States should be great carriers.

The tramp steamers of Great Britain, the ships that constitute the great majority of the mercantile fleet of Great Britain, are vessels under 4,000 tons. They pass into every port of the world; they visit our ports, the ports of Africa, the ports of Europe, and the ports of Asia; and they transport the products of the Tropics and of the Temperate zones from one part of the world to another, and really control the carrying trade of the world. We have none. I think there are no such vessels in the United States merchant marine.

Take our own seagoing fleet. On page 14 of the last report of the Commissioner of Navigation I find a list of vessels, with their tonnage and their speed, belonging to the United States, in which are set forth our ocean-going steamships. We have 113 steam vessels, ranging from 1,000 tons to 10,000 tons. Of that number 106 are vessels of less than 6,000 tons. The rest run up to 10,000 tons. We have four vessels of 10,000 tons or over. We have no vessels of 9,000 tons, none of 8,000 tons, and none of 7,000 tons. All the balance of our vessels are from 6,000 tons down to 1,000 tons.

So far as speed is concerned, we have four vessels of 20 knots or over; we have no vessel of 19 knots; one vessel of 18 knots; five of 17 knots; four of 16 knots; eleven of 15 knots; sixteen of 14 knots; six of 13 knots; nine of 12 knots, and fifty-seven under 12 knots, making a total of 113, of which number 99 are less than 16-knot vessels. I have compared the tables of the world's commercial marine with ours and I find about the same ratio exists in all sea-going ocean vessels of the world—the same ratio of small vessels—that is, vessels under 6,000 tons to vessels over that tonnage.

The Senator from Maine proposes to upset, by this bill, this natural arrangement of proportion of ships of fairly ordinary size and to substitute ships of large and exceedingly great size. The commerce of the world has so adjusted itself that it has been found necessary for the great majority of the steam tramps to be vessels of less than 6,000 tons; and I take it, notwithstanding the very excessive aid which is proposed to be given by this bill to the building of ships, that the construction of vessels of over 6,000 tons will not be advanced in any special degree. Certainly this bill will not increase the number of vessels of the class of the St. Louis, the St. Paul, the New York, and the Philadelphia, which constitute, I believe, the four fast ships of the American merchant marine.

The Senator from Ohio [Mr. HANNA], in his very able speech delivered in this Chamber about a year ago upon the subsidy bill which was then pending, gave it as his opinion that that bill would not contribute one ship of that class to the merchant marine of the United States. He used this language:

> As to this bill offering any further inducement, even at the advanced compensation, for the people in this country engaged in that trade to continue the construction of fast liners as a matter of business investment, I doubt if anyone would venture any further in that direction. We all know that in the competition in trans-Atlantic lines to-day England and Germany and France are all competing to have and to operate the ship which will cross the Atlantic Ocean between Sandy Hook and the ports on the other side in the shortest time.
> We also know that that spirit of competition is in the way of advertising for the passenger traffic. Therefore I say that it is only a question, as far as American interests are concerned, how much loss they are prepared to meet in order to advertise their ships as the swiftest ships crossing the Atlantic Ocean. There is no profit in the business; there never has been to that line, and there never will be under these conditions. And I say that in my own judgment and from my own standpoint there will not be another dollar, for years to come, of American capital invested in 21 or 22 knot ships.

Therefore it may be contended, I think very properly, if we accept the authority of the Senator from Ohio, who, I believe, is an authority upon this subject, that, unless the subsidy which is provided for in this bill is larger than that which was provided for in the bill which was before the Senate last year, there will be no addition of the 21-knot or 22-knot class of vessels to our merchant marine.

This bill, Mr. President, does not propose to make as large an appropriation as the bill which we had last year. I did have a comparison of the rates—I can not lay my hand on it now—but it is a fact that the provisions in regard to pay in this bill are considerably less than they were in the bill which was considered at the last session; and if the Senator from Ohio is correct in his judgment that that bill would not add one ship to the swift greyhound class of vessels that we then had, certainly we are justified in concluding that it is his opinion to-day that this measure will not add anything to that class of ships.

I find that the figures furnished by the bill that was under consideration last year, when worked out on the lines of this bill, give us the following: Vessels over 10,000 tons of 20 knots were to receive 1½ cents up to 1,500 miles, and 1 cent thereafter per gross ton for every 100 miles sailed. The general subsidy, 2 cents in addition, would make 3½ cents per gross ton up to 1,500 miles, and 3 cents per gross ton thereafter. Vessels of 21 knots were to get the same general subsidy, and $2\frac{3}{10}$ cents per gross ton per 100 miles up to 1,500 miles each way, making 3⅘ cents per ton for 3,000 miles and $3\frac{3}{10}$ cents per ton for distances over 3,000 miles. The figures of the present bill, as I read them a while ago, indicate very plainly that the amount of money which will be realized by vessels on their trips under this measure is considerably smaller than it would have been under the other measure.

The Senator from Ohio has given us to understand that nothing is to be expected from this measure in the way of an addition of 21 or 22 knot vessels to our fleet. The Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE], in his speech the other day, gave us to understand, unless I have misinterpreted his language, that this bill adds nothing whatever to the inducement for the construction of vessels of less than 6,000 tons. Not to misstate the language of the Senator, I will read what he said:

> Below 16 knots there could not be any increase over the present law. Indeed, the price would be lower than the present law. The lower-powered vessels received more than it was necessary to pay. Higher-powered vessels did not receive so much as was necessary. Quite a number of contracts made with the low-powered classes have been made for considerable less than the maximum amount named in the existing law.

Therefore I take it that vessels under 16 knots will receive no additional benefit from this bill over what they have been receiving under the act of 1891. Further on, in explanation of his view upon this subject, the Senator from Maine said:

> Broadly speaking, all the mail steamers, 14 knots or over, of 7,000 tons or over, may be paid at higher rates than under the present law, except 20-knot steamers under 10,000 tons. Steamers of 4,000, 5,000, and 6,000 tons are to be paid at rates not differing greatly from those payable under the present law.

Therefore, Mr. President, so far as this bill is concerned, vessels of 6,000 tons and less and vessels of 16 knots speed and less are not to be advantaged to any great extent over the position which they hold under the act of 1891, of which this title is in amendment, and then the only advantage which is proposed to be conferred upon the merchant marine of this country is upon vessels between 7,000 and 10,000 tons, or, say, 7,000 tons and over, and vessels of over 16 knots.

Mr. FRYE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Maine?

Mr. MALLORY. Certainly.

Mr. FRYE. The Senator will please read that inclusive of the 16-knot ships—16 knots and upward. I said below 16.

Mr. MALLORY. Below 16?

Mr. FRYE. Below 16.

Mr. MALLORY. He included the 16-knot ship in the upper class. I do not remember exactly how I spoke of it, but the language of the Senator is below 16 knots.

Mr. FRYE. Below 16 knots.

Mr. MALLORY. Including 16-knot vessels, which would be benefited; but in the other statement of 4,000, 5,000, and 6,000 ton vessels, he includes the 6,000-ton vessels among the vessels which would not be benefited by this alleged improvement.

To pass on from this explanation of the first title, we go on to the second title, which passes from the matter of ocean mail steamships and takes up what is designated as general subsidy. Under this provision all vessels, with the exceptions hereafter to be named, owned and duly registered by a citizen or citizens of the United States shall have the benefit of the subsidy provided for in this bill. The Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay to the owners of those vessels the subsidy which is provided for in the second and third clauses of that title. Clause (a) provides:

> (a) On each entry, not exceeding 16 entries in any one fiscal year, of a sail or steam vessel, 1 cent per gross registered ton for each 100 nautical miles sailed.

And the third clause, known as clause (b), provides:

> (b) On each entry, not exceeding 16 entries in any one fiscal year, and for a period of five years from the date of registration of a vessel of over 1,000 gross registered tons, which shall be completed and registered after the passage of this act, one-fourth of 1 cent per gross registered ton for each 100 nautical miles sailed, in addition to the compensation provided in paragraph (a)

In other words, a vessel up to the time she is five years old shall receive 1¼ cents per gross ton for every hundred knots sailed, provided she does not make more than 16 entries in a year.

Mr. President, that is a very long and bold step; but it is sought to qualify this donation by excepting certain descriptions of vessels from its application. Excepted from its application are the following:

> (a) A vessel on a voyage extending only to a foreign port less than 150 nautical miles from her last port of departure in the United States or from a foreign port less than 150 nautical miles from her first port of arrival in the United States.
> (b) A vessel on a voyage less than one-half of the whole length of which, on her outward and homeward voyages, respectively, shall have been on the sea between a port of the United States and a foreign port.
> (c) A vessel which shall not be at least of the Class A1, as classified either by the Record of American and Foreign Shipping or the United States Standard Owners, Builders, and Underwriters' Association, or equivalent classification in any other register of shipping of at least equal merit.
> (d) A vessel of which less than one-fourth of the crew shall be citizens of the United States or such persons as shall be within the provisions of section 2174 of the Revised Statutes.

Which, as I understand it, are individuals who have declared their intention to become citizens.

> (e) A vessel without motive power of its own, or a tugboat, or a vessel engaged in wrecking.
> (f) A foreign-built vessel, hereafter admitted to American registry pursuant to the provisions of section 4136 of the Revised Statutes.

Which means that a vessel that has been wrecked in American waters, and which has been admitted to carry the American flag and to registry, shall not, however, get the advantage of that provision. And lastly:

> (g) A vessel while employed in the coasting trade,

All other vessels engaged in our foreign commerce, except those just specified, are to receive the benefit of this 1½ cents up to and including the fifth year and 1 cent thereafter, whether they carry any cargo or not and irrespective of what business they may be engaged in.

There are qualifications attached to this donation, and I invite the attention of the Senate to those qualifications, because it is upon them I think there is based the claim that the donation may be justified.

Section 10 provides:

That any vessel, before receiving compensation—

Mark the word "compensation," and that word is used throughout this title—

That any vessel, before receiving compensation under this title, shall, when required so to do by the Secretary of the Treasury, carry on each foreign voyage, as a member of the ship's company, one American boy, under 21 years of age and suitable for such employment, and one such boy in addition for each 1,000 gross registered tons, who shall be taught in the duties of seamanship or engineering, or other maritime knowledge, as the case may be, respectively, and receive such pay as shall be reasonable.

The vessel has to carry them if the Secretary of the Treasury says so. If the Secretary of the Treasury does not say so, it is not essential. It is not a prerequisite that it shall be complied with, but if the Secretary says so a vessel shall carry one American boy under 21 years of age, and one such boy in addition for each 1,000 gross registered tons. In other words, a registered vessel of 10,000 tons could be required to carry 11 young men or boys, ostensibly for the purpose of preparing them to take part, after they reached manhood, in the carrying trade of the United States upon the ocean.

Section 11 provides—

That the owner of any vessel, before receiving compensation pursuant to this title, shall agree in writing—

And it is well to notice the solemnity that marks this proceeding. He shall agree—in writing that said vessel may be taken or employed and used by the United States for the national defense or for any public purpose at any time; and in every such case the owner of any such vessel so taken or employed shall be paid the fair value thereof, if taken, at the time of the taking; and if employed, shall be paid the fair value of such use. And if there shall be a disagreement as to such fair value the question of the valuation shall be submitted to and determined by three impartial appraisers.

These constitute the provisions of title 2. Title 1, as I have undertaken to show, professes to be a postal subsidy measure, simply an amendment to the act of 1891, which has been in force ever since the date of its passage and under which now fast mail is transported across the Atlantic and the Pacific. But title 2 comes in under an entirely different heading and under different auspices.

Title 1 professes at least to be for the benefit of the postal service, and as we have a right to establish post-offices and post-roads there is probably no reason why we could not go on and establish post-offices and post-roads all over the world. Certainly there is no question about our right to do so in our possessions, and I am not disposed to take any issue with the advocates of this measure on that point.

Title 1 also proposes to justify itself by a provision which is therein made for auxiliary cruisers for the United States, however inadequate and however incapable of being carried out such a provision may be. But there is a pretext, at least, Mr. President, of a public purpose. It is for the purpose of public defense, and is a justification undoubtedly in the minds of gentlemen who advocate this extraordinary measure for the provisions set forth in title 1.

But under title 2 the only pretense that even squints at a public purpose is that the vessel shall carry a certain number of young men, subject to the control of the Secretary of the Treasury, who may or may not require it, as suits his pleasure, and that the owners of the ships receiving this bounty shall pledge themselves in writing that when the Government needs the services of such vessels it can require their services, and will pay whatever is a fair and reasonable compensation therefor. In the event of war I take it there would be no difficulty on the part of the United States, if we had a merchant marine, in getting, so far as concerns the purposes for which such vessels are included in this provision, all the vessels that might be desired.

But it is to this title particularly that I should like the attention of the Senate to be directed. Heretofore I do not think we have ever passed a measure of this character. Congress has enacted many laws whereby individuals received great benefit under the profession or pretense that it was a public purpose, but I do not think Congress has ever in the history of the country gone to the extent of passing a measure so absolutely bold and bald in its character as a donation from the public Treasury for private purposes.

Mr. FRYE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Maine?

Mr. MALLORY. Certainly.

Mr. FRYE. Congress has not, but the Senate, in 1891, passed a bill precisely like title 2, only the subsidy allowed in it was 3 cents a mile for the outward voyage, which would be a cent and a half for the round voyage, which is half a cent more than this bill provides for.

Mr. MALLORY. Yes, sir; I understand that. I understood that the Senate had done so, but I was speaking of the enactment into law by the legislative power of this Government; and I think I am correct in saying that never before in the history of this country has any such measure been put into the shape of legislation. In its protean forms the idea has come before Congress time and time again. We had it here last year in a different shape, but it was the same old purpose of bestowing benefits from the public Treasury upon individuals. But it never yet has succeeded in getting the support of a majority of both Houses of Congress, although I am free to admit that I think it very possible this year the thing will be accomplished.

Upon this point I desire to call attention to the utterances of one or two gentlemen, whose opinions in the past have held some position of respect in this country, upon questions akin to this that I am now presenting to the Senate. It is like repeating a twice-told tale, Mr. President, to read these authorities. They have been read here before and we are all familiar with them; but I take it that the principles which they enunciate are so sound, that they appeal so strongly to the best judgment of the intelligent men and patriotic people of this country, that even at the risk of wearying my hearers and overloading the RECORD I am justified in calling the attention of the Senate and the country to them.

Judge Cooley, who as an authority on constitutional law stands among the highest in this country, speaking on the subject of special privileges conferred upon individuals in the shape of donations from the Treasury, says:

However important it may be to the community that individual citizens should prosper in their industrial enterprises, it is not the business of government to aid them with its means. Enlightened States leave every man to depend for his success and prosperity in business on his own exertions, in the belief that by doing so his own industry will be more certainly enlisted and his prosperity and happiness more likely to be secured. It may therefore be safely asserted that taxation for the purpose of raising money from the public to be given or even loaned to private parties, in order that they may use it in their individual business enterprises, is not recognized as a public use. In contemplation of law it would be taking the common property of the whole community and handing it over to private parties for their private gain, and consequently unlawful. Any incidental benefits to the public that might flow from it could not support it as legitimate taxation.

One would be justified in thinking Judge Cooley, in giving utterance to this expression, had this particular provision of the pending measure in view.

Another eminent jurist of this country, whose weight as an authority in matters of this kind is unquestioned, in a very prominent case before the Supreme Court, namely, the case of the Loan Association against Topeka, to be found in 20 Wallace, page 655, gave utterance to the expression which I will read. Justice Miller said:

The power to tax is, therefore, the strongest, the most pervading of all the powers of government, reaching directly or indirectly to all classes of the people. * * * This power can as readily be employed against one class of individuals and in favor of another, so as to ruin the one class and give unlimited wealth and prosperity to the other, if there is no implied limitation of the uses for which the power may be exercised. To lay with one hand the power of the Government on the property of the citizen, and with the other to bestow it on favored individuals to aid private enterprises and build up private fortunes, is none the less a robbery because it is done under the forms of law, and is called taxation. This is not legislation. It is a decree under legislative forms.

Justice Sharswood, of Pennsylvania, a name eminent in the judicial history of this country, speaking in a case that was before him, namely, Durach's Appeal, 62 Pennsylvania Reports, used this language:

No doubt all taxation should be general, and, as far as practicable, equal. Legislation either to benefit or burden particular classes under the idea that it is for the good of the State at large infringes upon the natural and guaranteed right of acquiring, possessing, and protecting property, subject to fair and equal contributions to the just and necessary expenses of government in the exercise of its proper and legitimate functions. A government which assumes the office of controlling and directing the lawful industry of the citizens into the channels which it may choose to deem best assumes what does not legitimately belong to it. Some States in modern times, in undertaking to find work for the people, have discovered that it was a sure way to make work for themselves.

I take it that no one will dispute the wisdom or the patriotism embodied in these expressions from the eminent jurists from whom I have just quoted. I do not think anyone will question the application of their ideas to this particular piece of legislation. To say that money taken from the pocket of the citizen by the strong hand of taxation and deposited in the Treasury for a public purpose, and only for a public purpose, can be taken therefrom and delivered gratuitously to individuals for their private gain is to utter a statement which certainly can not be justified as correct under any system of government. Certainly it could not be sustained as right and proper under our system of constitutional government.

Now, Mr. President, let us see how the practical working of title 2 will affect vessels engaged in navigation. I find that we have probably several hundred vessels which would be affected by this provision of 1 cent and 1½ cents, the quarter of a cent depending upon the age of the vessel. Among them are all classes of vessels—vessels engaged in commerce for the benefit of the general trade of the country and vessels engaged in commerce for the benefit of certain particular lines of transportation of the country.

I find that there are building to-day among the numerous vessels under construction in this country ships that are intended for certain specific lines of transportation. At New London there are two vessels now under construction, probably the largest vessels in the world—vessels of 21,000 tons, of 14 knots. Their slow speed will probably not permit them to have the advantage of the postal subsidy, if they desire it. They are being built for the Great Northern Railroad Company, to run in connection with the western terminus of the Great Northern Railroad and connect with the Asiatic countries. Those vessels would come in for benefit under this subsidy if they chose to avail themselves of it, and it is not unreasonable to suppose they would. I have figured out what those two vessels will realize from this title.

Under the table furnished by the Commissioner of Navigation, on page 25 of his report of this year, we have the speed of various vessels put down, and in an opposite column the number of miles per annum which vessels of that rate of speed will probably make.

I find that each one of these vessels of 14 knots will make 58,000 miles per annum. These two ships, of 21,000 tons, traveling 58,000 miles per annum, with a bonus or a subsidy of one and a quarter cents per ton per hundred miles, will realize $152,250 per annum for attending to the business of one great railroad system; not for the general public, but simply in the interest of a particular railroad. This is on condition that they will carry a certain number of apprentice boys, if required, and will charter to the United States in time of war, if the United States needs them, for which they are to receive fair and reasonable compensation.

I find further on that the Arthur Sewell Company, of Bath, Me., is building some large sailing vessels. They are the Acme, already launched, the William P. Frye, which has already been launched, and the Atlas, which was to have been launched in December, 1901, and I suppose has been launched. These are very large sailing vessels, 3,300 tons. The Acme and the Atlas belong to the Standard Oil Company. The Standard Oil Company, I suppose, in constructing those vessels has done so for the purpose of transporting its own products. Its business requirements make it necessary that it should own its own peculiar vessels—peculiar, because many of them carry oil in bulk, and in order to economically carry on that business the interior of those ships is constructed in a way to adapt them to this purpose.

But here is an illustration to which I should like the attention of the Senate to be especially directed. One of the most powerful and richest corporations in the world, which certainly needs no governmental aid or assistance, builds two ships in this country for the purpose of transporting its own products, and because it puts those vessels on the ocean and transports its own product it is to receive a subsidy, on the basis of the payment provided for in the second title of this bill, of $11,312.50, on the theory that those vessels will travel 25,000 miles per annum, which is a reasonable assumption.

Now, the sum is small. It is a bagatelle as compared with donations which go to other vessels, particularly steam vessels. But, Mr. President, it is money which has been wrung from the taxpaying public of this country. I do not know that I should use the word "wrung." However, it has been exacted from the taxpaying people of this country only for governmental purposes. I take it all patriotic men are perfectly willing to donate their due proportion to the expense which the Government has to bear, but the patriotic people of this country are unwilling to pay a single, solitary cent to the Government for the purpose of having it transferred to the coffers of any individual or corporation.

I do not know that there could be a better illustration of the wrong and the injustice which are sought to be perpetrated by this particular title of the bill than is furnished by the instance I have just given. No one for an instant will question the right of the Government to exact the last dollar from the citizen if necessary, to meet the emergencies of the Government, for the just dues of the Government, to meet the necessities of the public defense or the general welfare; but when it comes to exacting one cent from one individual for the purpose of conferring it upon another, with no public purpose in view, as Judge Miller has said, it is robbery and is not legislation.

Why is this? What is the pretext that is alleged by the advocates of this measure both for the postal subsidy and for this very astounding provision? It is that the merchant marine of the United States has fallen into the sere, the yellow leaf; that the effects of the war between the States upon it have never been overcome; that Great Britain and the other nations of the world have resorted to subsidies and aids for the purpose of building up their mercantile marine, and that there is nothing else for us to do if we wish to hold up our heads in the face of the world and to carry our flag proudly to the ports of the great nations of the earth.

The eloquent Senator from Ohio [Mr. HANNA] delivered a most stirring oration the other day upon this subject, in which he thought that it ought to appeal to the patriotism and the sense of right of every citizen to do away with the existing condition of things and to build up the merchant marine, so that the American flag could be flaunted in the face of all the nations of the world at all times.

Mr. President, I come from a seacoast State, a State that has more seacoast than any other in the United States. It has more ports and bays and harbors than any other State in the United States, and I am deeply interested in the rehabilitation of the mercantile marine of the United States. My home is an important port, and I experience humiliation almost every time I visit the water front of my city. The fact is, that with the exception of schooners and coasting vessels, the American flag is never seen upon a mast in that harbor, and I will go as far as any Senator, I will do anything that I believe we conscientiously and consistently can do to once more put the American mercantile marine upon a footing of equality with that of other nations. But, sir, notwithstanding my full appreciation of the importance and the necessity of taking some step to advance progress in that direction, I can not indorse a measure that is so absolutely at variance with every principle of right and justice as is this particular provision of the bill.

It is not a fact, Mr. President, as has been asserted here, that our merchant marine is in a condition of stagnation. It is a fact which we gather from the official reports that it is, so far as last year and this year are concerned, in a most promising condition. It is small it is true, but the increase in shipbuilding and ship owning in this country within the last twenty-four months has been absolutely phenomenal. I am inclined to think that the advantages we possess in having all the materials necessary for shipbuilding in abundance and cheaply at hand will in the natural course of events give us an immense advantage over the other nations of the world in shipbuilding; but if it is necessary, and it may be so, to resort to some legislative measure to advance the interests of shipping, I am perfectly willing to do anything that we can consistently do in accordance with the provisions of the Constitution to that end. Upon this question of the upbuilding of the United States merchant marine I read from page 18 of the Report of the Commissioner of Navigation for 1901. He says:

> Construction during the current fiscal year promises nearly, if not quite, to equal the greatest in our history. In 1855 we built 583,000 tons. The strike in the shipbuilding trade about the end of the past fiscal year delayed work on some vessels nearing completion which under ordinary conditions would have been included in last year's figures. Four large steamers for the Pacific, aggregating over 60,000 tons, will have been under contract for two years and should be completed before next July. Two of these, Korea and Siberia, the finest vessels yet designed by any nation for trade with Asia, have been launched. In the winter and early spring, when the passage of shipping legislation seemed probable, contracts were made for eight large steamers, and part of this tonnage will be completed before the close of the current fiscal year.

The Senate will note the expression used by the Commissioner in the last sentence, "when the passage of shipping legislation seemed probable." The Commissioner evidently in preparing this report had in mind the fact that such a measure as this would be before the Senate and the other body of Congress this winter, and there will be found throughout this report such expressions as that, implying that proposed legislation of this character has given this remarkable impetus to shipbuilding and shipowning in this country, and is the cause and only cause thereof.

He further on gives a table in which it appears briefly that in 1901 there were constructed 25 ocean-going steamships, of a gross tonnage of 95,242 tons, while in the year 1902 it is estimated that there will be constructed 33 ocean-going trans-Atlantic, trans-Pacific, and foreign-going steamships, of a total tonnage of 255,325 tons, the greatest amount of tonnage built in this country since the year 1855. Commenting on that the Commissioner says:

> The table appears to promise that 33 steel screw ocean steamers of 255,325 gross tons will be built in the United States this year, compared with 25 of 95,242 gross tons for the past year. This promise will not be made wholly good, but, barring strikes or other unforeseen causes, it is reasonably certain that nearly 200,000 gross tons will be added to our ocean steel steam fleet before July 1, 1902—a tonnage equal to 70 per cent of the recent Leyland purchase by Americans.
> The possible addition of 10 steamers of 110,800 tons to our trans-Atlantic fleet within twelve months presumably rests on anticipated legislation by Congress.

There we are again. The Commissioner of Navigation can not forbear giving us his belief. He says it "presumably rests on anticipated legislation." He recognizes the fact that there has been within the past three years a wonderful increase and impetus in the shipbuilding of this country, and he does not assert but suggests that presumably it was the anticipated legislation by Congress which gave occasion to this wonderful increase in shipbuilding.

I think, Mr. President, that that is rather a wild and a violent presumption. When vessels cost from one to two million dollars, it is not likely that the individuals who are to pay for them will be willing to invest that amount of money dependent upon the possible passage of a particular measure, and that a very extraordinarily exceptional measure, through Congress.

There are some other reasons, Mr. President, why the shipbuilding interest in this country has begun to look up, and I certainly believe that with ordinary care and attention on the part of Congress to that interest there will be no difficulty whatever as to its continuing to improve.

It is necessary, say the advocates of this measure, that this wonderful subsidy should be given because foreign countries are obliged to give it to their merchant marine. It has been said upon this floor from time to time that Great Britain, which owns something more than one-half of the merchant steamships of the world, gives an immense subsidy to her ships. It is a fact that Great Britain pays a higher rate of wages to her masters and crews engaged in her merchant fleets than any other nation in the world, unless we except the United States, and I believe that she pays fully as high a rate of wages as the shipowners of the United States, notwithstanding the figures that have been presented here to the contrary.

But though she does pay a great deal more to her seamen, her firemen, her mates, her masters, her engineers, her assistant engineers, than do France, Germany, Italy, Norway, or Sweden, it is a fact that Great Britain to-day controls more than one-half of the merchant tonnage of the world. She has controlled it for years. She controls it to-day, and notwithstanding the frantic efforts on the part of France to build herself up by means of general subsidy, or of Italy by the same means and in other shapes, Great Britain to-day stands the leading shipowning nation in the world.

We are told that this is due to the fact that Great Britain subsidizes very extensively. That, Mr. President, is not sustained by the facts. Great Britain does not pay a larger subsidy for her postal service than is proposed in this bill. She does not pay a larger subsidy combined for all her service than is proposed, or at least is sought to be proposed, by the gentlemen who advocate this measure.

Great Britain never has given one single dollar of general subsidy to any of her fleets. Of the immense number of ships which fly her flag in all the ports of the world only 5 per cent receive any aid whatever from the Government of Great Britain. She does pay postal subsidies, but she bases her payments upon weight of mails and not, as is proposed in this bill, upon the tonnage of the vessel. She has what is called an admiralty subvention, whereby vessels, as is proposed under title one of this bill, which can be utilized as auxiliary cruisers in the event of war, are provided for, but she makes no provision whatever for any subsidy or any aid to her ocean commerce that is not given for a good and valid consideration.

Notwithstanding that, Mr. President, Great Britain to-day leads all the nations in her commercial power and her ability to take charge of the ocean transportation of the world. Yet we are told again and again that it is essential that we should go into the business of donating to private individuals large sums of money for the purpose of carrying on their business because Great Britain has been doing so in the past. That, Mr. President, is not so. Other nations have done it, it is true, and in every instance where they have resorted to that means for the purpose of bolstering up their decaying fleets their decaying fleets have continued to retrograde.

But, say the advocates of this measure, it is necessary that the American ship should be sustained because of the increased expense that the American owner has to go to in building his ship, and we have been furnished here with some evidence, or something that purports to be evidence, in the shape of letters whereby it is professed to be shown that as much as a difference of 25 per cent exists between the cost of building certain classes of American ships and the same classes of British ships. That has been harped on, Mr. President, and was advanced here last year in the face of the fact that twelve years ago we had the testimony of expert shipbuilders in this country to the effect that even such vessels as the New York and the Paris could be built in this country at an expense over what it costs in England not exceeding 8 per cent.

Whether that is true or not, it is a fact that all the shipyards of this country are busy. They are all engaged in doing most of the work that is within their capacity, and the report of the Commissioner of Navigation, if I read it aright, bears me out in the statement that most of the shipyards of this country to-day are engaged on the maximum amount of work that they have the capacity for doing.

I have here an editorial from the Scientific American of January 25, this year, in which some reference is made to the work that is being done on the Pacific coast. I will read a short extract from it:

> The increasing trade of the Territory of Alaska, sure to be increasingly permanent, employs at least 400 vessels, sail and steam, where less than 40 were required four years ago. In the Hawaiian and Philippine Islands commerce is increasing by leaps and bounds, and will before long require hundreds of vessels to accommodate it, while trade with all the ports of all the countries bordering on the Pacific is growing rapidly. All the indications point to an immense augmentation of the national marine. Every shipyard on the coast, from Puget Sound south to San Diego, for three years past has been working at full capacity to execute orders for new ships, and many shipyards of the Atlantic coast have been kept busy in the attempt to supply the Western demand. Though Pacific shipyards have turned out hundreds of vessels, there is apparently no let-up in the demand.

Mr. President, that is a reputable journal, a paper which is esteemed as an authority in matters of that kind generally, and I take it that that statement is correct. I take it that it is not necessary, in view of the very glowing report as to the increase in shipbuilding in this country made by the Commissioner of Navigation, to go beyond or behind this statement. There we have the fact asserted that every shipyard on the Pacific coast from Puget Sound down to San Diego is so busily engaged in the building of ships that it has really not the facilities for building any more and the overplus has been carried over to the Atlantic shipyards. Yet the advocates of this measure would have the country believe that the shipbuilding interest is in such a poverty-stricken condition and so languishing and moribund that it is necessary in order to stimulate it into life to provide a gratuity to the ships of the United States in order that shipbuilding may be stimulated.

In addition to the point that the original and first cost of a ship in this country is 25 per cent greater than it is in Great Britain or any other nation of Europe, it is urged that the operating expenses are greater on American ships than they are on foreign ships; and that has been urged here with as much vehemence and energy and persistency as any other error upon which this measure has been based. It is said that the American sailor receives about 25 per cent higher wages than the sailor of any other nation, and figures have been brought in here to demonstrate that fact.

The Commissioner of Navigation has furnished us detailed statements of the operating or running expenses of American steamships, German steamships, British steamships, and, I believe, also of French steamships in the Atlantic trade between New York and England and the continent of Europe, and he has shown by those figures that the expenses incident to the mates, to the engineers, to the coal passers, and the firemen on the part of American ships, as compared with vessels of corresponding size of other nationalities, and particularly of England, are greater by one-fourth. That, Mr. President, I think, is not sustained either by the experience of those who have traveled, or by the experience of those who have observed the practice with regard to men following the sea in the ports of this country.

It was said the other day by the Senator from Maine that it was absurd to talk about having a portion of the crew composed of American sailors, or American citizens paid at a certain rate, while the other portion, not Americans, were paid at a less rate. Before the session had closed that evening we were furnished with a statement by the master of a vessel engaged in the trade between California and Asiatic ports to the effect that about two-thirds of the employees, the men on the line with which he was connected, were Asiatics, and that they were drawing pay considerably less than that paid to Americans sailing on the same vessels from the same port.

The Commissioner of Navigation has furnished us with page after page of statistical figures showing the rates of wages which prevail in the United States and in Europe, and he would have us draw the inference that because wages in certain ports of the United States are quoted in certain years at an advance over what they were in European ports for the same period necessarily the sailor or the employee on a ship who is an American receives greater wages than the employee on the ship of one of the foreign nations. But anyone who has lived for any length of time in a seaport, or who has had an opportunity of studying this question, knows at once that this is fallacious—knows at once that the wages on the ordinary ship, whether it be a British tramp or a Norwegian sailing ship or an American schooner—the wages of the men employed on those ships are dependent upon the rate of wages which is given at the ports at the time they are employed.

They may be employed for particular voyages, they may be employed by the month for a certain length of time, and the wages change in accordance with that. The wages will also differ according to the port of destination of the vessel. There are certain ports of the world to which sailor men are opposed to going if they can avoid it. The port of Rio de Janerio or any of the South American ports north of Rio, during the yellow-fever season are ports which are avoided by seamen if they can possibly do so, and when solicited to ship aboard a vessel bound for Rio, anticipating that she will strike Rio about the beginning of the yellow-fever season, they will demand a higher rate of wages than they would to go to a port on the North Atlantic. Those differences will be observed in every port, and they will be found by reference to the statistics furnished by the Commissioner of Navigation to differ in the same ports from time to time.

The rate of wages does not depend upon the nationality of the ship; and if it did there would be every reason in the world why the wages on an American ship would be less than they would be on ships of any other nationality, because the provisions and conditions for health, the hygiene of the sailor, provided for by law on American ships, are better than they are on the ships of any other nations of the world. If a man is seeking a comfortable berth, one where he will at least have such comforts as a man pursuing that rugged life can have, he will find that he will have more of them while serving on a ship under the American flag than while serving on a ship under any other flag.

I think, Mr. President, that so far as these two headings or chapters of this bill are concerned, I have adverted to most of the points that I had contemplated criticising.

The last chapter, heading, or title of the measure relates to the deep-sea fisheries, and proposes to give a bounty to vessels engaged for three months during the year in that occupation, and also a bounty to the men themselves engaged in that occupation. The conditions are:

(a) To the owner or owners of a documented vessel of the United States engaged in the deep-sea fisheries for at least three months in any one fiscal year, $2 per gross ton per annum: Provided, That at least one-third of the crew shall be citizens of the United States, or such persons as shall be within the provisions of section 2174 of the Revised Statutes.

(b) To a citizen of the United States serving as a member of a necessary and proper crew of a vessel of the United States documented and engaged in deep-sea fisheries for at least three months during any one fiscal year, $1 per month during the time necessarily employed in the voyages of such vessel.

The vessel must have at least one-third of her crew American citizens, or men who have declared their intention to become American citizens, in order to receive this bonus. That, Mr. President, is an old subsidy that is sought to be revived by this measure. Its object is apparent on its face. Originally, when the sailing ship constituted the battle ship of the Navy, it was essential for the Navy that there should be a reserve of skilled, active, and capable seamen to man the men-of-war of the nation; and for the purpose of providing a training school for them it was thought advisable to give a fishing bounty to the men on the New England coast engaged in the deep-sea fisheries along that coast. As time passed and the character of the naval vessels of the world changed this necessity seemed to pass away and the law was repealed.

I can see, Mr. President, how the deep-sea fisheries may possibly be a useful school for the training of seamen, not only for the Navy, but also for the sailing fleet of the country. The sailing fleet of the country is very large proportionately with our steam tonnage; and I differ with those gentlemen who have expressed the opinion here that in only a very few years the sailing vessels of the world will pass away. Conditions are changing and the sailing vessel is becoming more and more the means for the transportation for long distances of the heavy products of the mine, of the field, and of the manufactory.

Articles of trade and commerce which are so bulky and weighty as to render it impracticable to transport them by rail from the Pacific to the Atlantic across our continent are now transported by sailing vessels to a large extent around Cape Horn, and it is found profitable by the owners of such vessels to engage in that trade. The construction of the Nicaragua Canal will shorten that voyage very materially; and the new device of building 4, 5, and 6 masted schooners of very great tonnage, which is being resorted to now by the shipbuilders of this country, will, I think, make that style of ship part of the commercial marine of the United States for a great many years, and it will be desirable that they should have a sufficiency of men to man them.

Therefore, Mr. President, while I do not think that the original reason for this fishing bounty exists to-day as potently as it did in years gone by, I do not antagonize it with the same feeling with which I antagonize the first and, particularly, the second title of this measure.

There are means by which the object sought to be gained by this bill can be attained. They can be attained without doing violence to the Constitution or straining in any way the sense of right or justice of any man of proper feeling in the land. We have but simply to follow the path marked out in the past by those who were first confronted with the necessity of building up the American merchant marine.

I do not admit, Mr. President, that there has been any evidence here of the necessity for Congress to take any action in that direction, but conceding, for the sake of argument, that there is such necessity, a method is within our grasp that is constitutional, and one which in the past has been resorted to beneficially and appropriately. If the necessity is so great, if it is a fact that, leaving our merchant marine to itself, to build itself up by its own inherent strength and the advantages which our position give us—if that is not sufficient, and it is absolutely essential that we should resort to legislation to build it up, a method has been prescribed. It is true the Senator from Maine said the other day that in order to resort to that method we would have to abrogate a certain number of treaties, I think he said some 31.

Mr. PERKINS. Twenty-one.

Mr. MALLORY. No; he said 31, I think.

Mr. TELLER. Afterwards he said 34.

Mr. MALLORY. Well, 34. I have it here, but I will not stop to look for it. But those treaties, Mr. President, are not absolutely beyond our power of abrogation. If I am not mistaken, every one of those treaties contains a provision whereby, after due notice—a year or two years, as the case may be—they can be abrogated.

There is no question, Mr. President, that we have the absolute right to impose a discriminating tariff for the purpose of building up the merchant marine. It is a right which is given to us by the Constitution, and if we choose to avail ourselves of it no one has any right to object to the exercise of that constitutional power. Even if our treaties did not contain the clause providing for their abrogation I would not hesitate—if the necessity were such as to require it—if I believed, as the Senator from Maine believes, that something in the way of legislation is immediately and absolutely necessary to build up our commercial marine, I would not hesitate I say, to favor their abrogation, without notice, and run the risk of retaliation on the part of the nations with whom those treaties were formed.

Certainly this idea is not a new one with me, and I think that there is high Republican authority for it. Only so late as 1896 the late President McKinley, in a letter accepting the nomination for the Presidency of the United States, referring to this subject, said:

The declaration of the Republican platform in favor of the upbuilding of our merchant marine has my hearty approval. The policy of discriminating duties in favor of our shipping, which prevailed in the early years of our history, should be again promptly adopted by Congress and vigorously supported until our prestige and supremacy on the seas are fully attained.

That, Mr. President, was the expression of view of a gentleman whose opinion in such matters certainly is entitled to great weight on the other side of the Chamber; and while I do not now contend that it is desirable that we should resort to discriminating duties for the purpose of building up the merchant marine, I do say that a resort to that constitutional method, which would not only do no violence to the Constitution, but would do no violence to the sentiment of right and justice of any fair-minded man, is far preferable to the method which is proposed by this bill, a method which certainly can not meet with the approval of a majority of the thoughtful, disinterested people of this country.

We can, Mr. President, if it is necessary, resort to other methods of building up the merchant marine, and I am perfectly willing to give the matter as careful consideration as it is in my power to give it, to consider whether or not it is advisable for us to pass any legislation at this time on this subject. Certainly, by the showing that is made by our Commissioner of Navigation, by the interest which is being demonstrated in the development of shipping, there appears to be no urgent necessity for any hasty action on the part of Congress in this matter.

The first part of this measure, relating to the postal subsidy, is brought in by the Senator from Maine; but the Senator from Maine has not furnished the Senate with anything from the Post-Office Department to indicate that there is in its judgment any urgent necessity for the establishment of the mail routes that have been outlined by the Senator from Maine as desirable. I am free to say, Mr. President, that I think that some of the routes which he proposes to establish, or at least which he thinks will be established, under this measure are desirable and will inure to the benefit of the country. If the measures came before Congress separately and on their own merits and Congress had an opportunity to consider their claims in each individual case, I do not think that such routes as are proposed between San Francisco and the Asiatic ports, touching at Honolulu, and from Puget Sound to Hongkong, via the Japanese ports, and communicating with Manila, would meet with any very serious objection.

But, Mr. President, this measure, acting upon the line indicated by the act of 1891, vests in the Postmaster-General absolute power to establish mail routes anywhere that in his judgment it is proper to do so, without reference to whether they may be absolutely desirable or not. I do not question the ability or the rectitude of motive of the Postmaster-General, and I doubt not that he would be able, probably, to determine those routes which are best to be established for the interests of the country more satisfactorily than I could, or possibly better than a good many others could, but I do not think it is good policy or good principle to delegate to that Cabinet officer a power which ought to be confined in Congress and in Congress alone.

As we have acquired new territory in the Pacific—the Hawaiian Islands, the Samoan Islands, and the Philippines—it is necessary, undoubtedly, that we should establish mail communication, and regular mail communication, with those possessions, and for that reason I agree with the Senator from Maine in thinking it eminently desirable that some such mail routes should be established.

But, in addition to that, we are told there is to be immediately, or there ought to be established right away, another trans-Atlantic mail between New York and Southampton—a semiweekly mail. I am utterly ignorant as to the necessity for it. The Senate has received no information upon the subject. We have the aspiration expressed by the Senator from Maine that it will be done, and I have no doubt after this bill passes it will be done, and I have sufficient confidence in the judgment of the Senator from Maine to believe that if it is done on his advice or suggestion it will be because it is desirable; but, at the same time, that is not the way in which we should legislate. I am expected to vote upon this measure intelligently, and to vote intelligently upon it I should know something about the necessity which has suggested it. The Senate is without any information whatever.

But that, Mr. President, is only a side issue. My main objection to this measure is that it is an illustration of a principle which I regard as extremely vicious, but which is manifesting itself in the legislation of this country from year to year more and more, a principle which turns its back upon the constitutional limitations, which undertakes to treat the Constitution as the Declaration of Independence has been treated, as simply a text for a holiday oration, something that is not really practical or which applies to this great country under the conditions of an expanding trade and an expanding public policy.

We can not afford to give way to that tendency. There are some of us, at least, who believe that the Constitution is big enough and broad enough to meet all the exigencies of any conditions that may arise in the experience of this country; that within that Constitution will be found a reason for everything that may be found necessary to be legitimately done, and when invasions of it are attempted it is the duty of everyone who appreciates the fact that invasion is attempted to resist it. That is my purpose in devoting as much time as I have to the consideration of this measure.

I know the Senator from Maine is exceedingly anxious that this bill shall become a law, because, patriot as he is, he believes it will redound vastly to the welfare of the country in building up our commercial marine. I only wish, Mr. President, that I could agree with the Senator from Maine that that result would be accomplished by this measure; but even if I believed that the measure would accomplish the result for which he has strained for so many years, I could not, in view of what I believe to be my constitutional duty, what I believe to be an obligation which I owe to myself and to the constituency I have the honor to represent, favor a measure so replete with error and disregard of constitutional obligation.

Mr. MCCUMBER. Mr. President, I wish to give notice at this time that after the routine morning business to-morrow I will address the Senate very briefly on the pending measure.

Mr. DEPEW. I wish to give notice that at the conclusion of the remarks of the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER] to-morrow I shall ask the consideration of the Senate for a brief period, in order that I may submit some remarks upon the pending bill.

Mr. TELLER. I wish to ask a question of the Senator who has this bill in charge, with his permission. I have no doubt he can furnish it. I desire to know what amount of tonnage owned by American citizens is now engaged in the foreign trade.

Mr. FRYE. I think it is about 600,000 tons.

Mr. TELLER. About 600,000?

Mr. FRYE. That is my impression.

Mr. TELLER. I desire to ask another question. I wish the Senator would tell us, if he can, what amount of tonnage is now being constructed in our American shipyards with reference to the foreign trade.

Mr. FRYE. There are two being constructed by the International Line—the American Line; there are six being constructed by the American Transport Company, of Baltimore; there are two just about ready to be launched for the Pacific Mail. I know of no others. Nearly all the others are for the coast or the lake trade.

Mr. TELLER. Has the Senator included the ships being built by Mr. Hill?

Mr. FRYE. Mr. Hill is building two at New London.

Mr. TELLER. What is the total tonnage?

Mr. FRYE. My impression is about 600,000 now afloat, engaged in the foreign trade.

Mr. TELLER. What is the total tonnage of those being built?

Mr. FRYE. Mr. Hill's vessels are said to be 40,000 tons—the two—and the six vessels of the American Transport Company, I think, average about 8,000 tons each. The American Line vessels, my impression is, are 16-knot ships, of 10,000 tons. The Pacific Mail vessels, my impression is, are 10,000 tons each—two. I can not be exact about it, but that is my impression.

Mr. TELLER. I did not expect the Senator to be exact as to it. I wish to ask one other question—whether it would not be well to consider in this connection the wisdom of doing, with reference to American-owned tonnage now under some other flag, what we did ten years ago at the suggestion of the Senator with respect to the Paris and the New York; that is, to make some arrangement by which they could come into American registry on condition that their owners complete the same number of tons in American yards, as we did in that case?

Mr. FRYE. We had that provision in the bill under consideration during the last session of the last Congress.

Mr. TELLER. It does not seem to be in this.

Mr. FRYE. And it provoked very great opposition. It was left out by me in drafting this bill on account of the opposition which it provoked. There would be very serious trouble about admitting those ships, because Americans, known in the newspapers as the Morgan syndicate, have recently acquired, I think, about 800,000 tons of foreign-built ships.

Mr. BERRY. In addition to the 600,000 tons already owned? Is it 800,000 tons more?

Mr. FRYE. They have acquired, I understand, by the recent purchase of the Leyland Line and vessels of that sort, about 800,000 tons.

Mr. BERRY. That would made 1,400,000 tons altogether?

Mr. FRYE. The 600,000 are already under our registry.

Mr. BERRY. I understood the Senator to say that American capital was invested in 600,000 tons of foreign ships.

Mr. FRYE. No. There are 600,000 tons of our own ships.

Mr. TELLER. What I inquired, if the Senator will allow me, was how much tonnage under foreign flags is owned by United States citizens.

Mr. FRYE. Oh, I could not tell.

Mr. TELLER. That is what I asked.

Mr. FRYE. If that is the question, it is very much more than that, because the American Line has at least 12 ships under the Belgian flag, and the Morgan syndicate alone is said to have 800,000 tons by their recent purchase.

Mr. TELLER. Is there no way in which we can determine what that amount is?

Mr. FRYE. I think there is, on inquiry at the office of the Commissioner of Navigation. He probably has reports by which he knows how much it is.

I desire to make a little amendment to the pending bill.

The bill, on page 6, section 6, reads as follows:

SEC. 6. That from and after the 1st day of July, 1902, the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to pay, subject to the provisions of this title, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the owner or owners of any vessel of the United States duly registered by a citizen or citizens of the United States.

It is claimed by some, although I do not admit myself that the claim is justified, that that would place under the provisions of this bill all these foreign-built ships if they should be admitted to American registry. It is not the intention of the bill to admit them under the subsidy at all. Therefore I move to amend by striking out, in lines 19 and 20, the words "of the United States" and inserting "hereafter built and registered in the United States or now."

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. TALIAFERRO in the chair). Will the Senator from Maine please restate his amendment?

Mr. ALLISON. Will that cover exactly what the Senator wants?

Mr. FRYE. It will then read:

To the owner or owners of any vessel hereafter built and registered in the United States or now duly registered.

I do not require them to have been built in the United States, because when Hawaii was admitted there were quite a number of fine ships which were admitted with Hawaii itself, and there are two or three other ships. There are four or five transports, bought by the United States, which were admitted to American registry.

Mr. ALLISON. "Duly owned and registered." But they can not be registered without being owned by Americans?

Mr. FRYE. No; they can not be registered without being so owned.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Maine will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In lines 19 and 20, page 6, it is proposed to strike out the words "of the United States" where they occur and insert "hereafter built and registered in the United States or now."

Mr. FRYE. That is the amendment.

Mr. ALLISON. I wish the Senator, if he can, would give us an estimate—he may have done so before, when I had not the opportunity to hear him—of the amount that will be paid annually from the public Treasury under the provisions of the first title.

Mr. FRYE. I gave that in the speech I made the other day. Of course it depends entirely upon whether or not the rules which have been mentioned in the report shall be established by the Postmaster-General. If they are established by the Postmaster-General, within the next five years the amount would be $4,700,000. That amount would be reached in the course of five years. There is not a single vessel of this speed to-day that I know of which could be used by the Postmaster-General. Vessels with a speed of from 16 knots, including 16 knots up to 20 or 21 knots, will necessarily have to be built after the Postmaster-General makes a contract. It takes from a year to a year and a half and two years to build one of those vessels.

Mr. ALLISON. Therefore the Senator is of the opinion that very little will be required during the next five years?

Mr. FRYE. Next year there will be none required, or about——

Mr. BERRY. Will the Senator permit me a moment? I understood the Senator to say in his speech the other day that he very much hoped the Postmaster-General would make a contract with the International Company for a semiweekly service from New York to Southampton. If that is done more will be required, and it will be required at once.

Mr. FRYE. It would not.

Mr. BERRY. Why not?

Mr. FRYE. From the fact that the American Line has but four ships. Nobody would ever dream of establishing a mail line from New York to Southampton short of 10,000-ton 20-knot ships, and there are only four in existence in the United States now. Those four are owned by the American Line. If the service should be doubled, it would not only require four more ships, but it would require two in reserve all the time, which would make six more, and these six would necessarily have to be built in the future, and they could not be built in the next three years.

Mr. DEPEW. Mr. President——

Mr. ALLISON. One moment.

Mr. DEPEW. I merely wish to ask a question.

Mr. ALLISON. I wanted to ask a question for information, but I will yield to the Senator from New York.

Mr. DEPEW. I think the Senator from Maine, in stating at $4,700,000 the aggregate which would be reached if all these routes were furnished with ships, neglected to state what would be the deductions in the earnings of mail service.

Mr. FRYE. That would be at least $3,000,000, because we would receive $3,000,000 annually from the mail itself. So that the balance would be only $1,700,000.

It has been stated here that Great Britain does not pay any subsidies for commercial purposes. That is an entire mistake. That has been discussed in Parliament over and over again. This last year it was discussed in the English Board of Trade. There was not a single member of the English Parliament or of the Board of Trade who did not admit that the postal subsidies were for commercial purposes; and it must be remembered, too, that every year Great Britain falls back over $2,000,000; she does not meet her postal subsidies by $2,000,000 by the pay for her letters and papers, etc.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not wish to discuss the question respecting new lines, but it has seemed to me that the necessity for new lines is so apparent that we ought here to provide for them if we intend to have them. As I read the bill there is no provision whereby the Postmaster-General can compel any vessel to enter upon the carrying of the mail. It is entirely optional with any vessel owner to make such a contract. The Postmaster-General, in his discretion, may not make such contracts as we here believe ought to be made as respects new routes and new lines of commerce. I should be perfectly willing at any time to vote for a liberal subsidy to establish a route between North and South America. I see nothing here that assures that.

Mr. FRYE. The bill directs the Postmaster-General to advertise for bids, and establish routes for the carrying of the United States mail. He is obliged to do so under this measure. Under the old law he was only empowered.

Mr. SPOONER. But nobody is obliged to bid?

Mr. FRYE. Nobody is obliged to bid, but the American citizen is ready to bid almost any time.

Mr. SPOONER. If the Senator from Iowa will pardon me for a moment——

Mr. ALLISON. Certainly.

Mr. SPOONER. Will the subsidy of itself warrant any company in bidding?

Mr. FRYE. My judgment is it will, above 14 knots.

Mr. SPOONER. But not below?

Mr. FRYE. Below the subsidy is ample, because already the contracts made under the old law have been made for less than the amount named in the law as it stands. There is competition always on the sea, and on the short 2,000-mile route there is already competition enough to reduce the price, and they are ready to put on their ships under the old law.

Mr. ALLISON. Can the Senator make an estimate of what is likely to be paid out under title 2?

Mr. FRYE. Under title 2 the Commissioner of Navigation, under my instructions, took all of the United States ships engaged in the foreign trade and duplicated their voyages, and then found what amount of subsidy under this bill they would have received, and he made it about $1,000,000. But those same vessels, where we have no mail lines and will not be likely to have mail lines—a number of short routes—carried $213,000 worth of mail. Under title 2 they are obliged to carry the mail for nothing. So he deducted from the $1,000,000 the $230,000, for it is estimated by the Postmaster-General that it will require $230,000 next year. That deduction left $800,000.

Now, suppose that should be correct, and it is nearly as correct as it can be arrived at, anyway. Go one step further. Suppose under this bill in a year there should be built, under title 2, 40,000 tons of sailing ships. No optimist would think of going any further than that—40,000 tons in a year. That would require under title 2 a subsidy of $100,000, increasing the $800,000 and making it $900,000. Suppose there should be 200,000 tons of steamships built in a year in the United States.

It is well understood how many miles a ship can make in a year. Fifty thousand miles is all she can make. She has to be laid up at dock and at wharves and all that sort of thing. We will take an average of 50,000 miles for any ship. The average of the sailing ship is 20,000 miles. Suppose you built in a single year 200,000 tons of steamships. You can tell exactly what, under this subsidy, it will amount to—$1,300,000; and in building those 200,000 tons of ships you would be building in American shipyards in the neighborhood of fifteen or sixteen million dollars' worth of ships.

Suppose next year you build 200,000 tons more, then it would be increased by $1,300,000 more, making $2,600,000 in the three years, provided you did it. You could not do it unless you nearly doubled the capacity of the present shipyards in the first instance. But suppose you did it. It would be one of the most signal successes of law that ever was attained. There is no doubt about that.

If this bill becomes law and that shall be done under it, it would mean the expenditure of twenty or thirty million dollars immediately, and that alone would put us ahead of Germany.

It was stated by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] the other day that I said that under the postal-subsidy act we would have a larger merchant marine within a certain length of time than Great Britain had. I never said anything of the kind. I would not, on any account, interrupt the Senator from Missouri while he was making his speech, because I have the profoundest possible respect for him, and I did not wish to disturb him. What I said was this: If the mail lines, which I referred to, to be established under this bill were established, then we would have an auxiliary navy on those lines equal to that of Great Britain and superior to that of Germany. That is what I said. And it is true. We should have.

Mr. ALLISON. Now, under title 2, as I understand it, all vessels now in the United States, whether steam or sail, can receive the subsidy.

Mr. FRYE. Above 1,000 tons.

Mr. ALLISON. Above 1,000 tons?

Mr. FRYE. Yes; above 1,000 tons.

Mr. ALLISON. I should like the Senator to point out that provision to me.

Mr. FRYE. It is in the bill.

Mr. ALLISON. I know there is a provision on page 7 which reads as follows:

> On each entry, not exceeding 16 entries in any one fiscal year, and for a period of five years from the date of registration of a vessel of over 1,000 gross registered tons, which shall be completed and registered.

But I can find no limitation as to the value or size of either a sail vessel or a steam vessel that are now owned in the United States.

Mr. FRYE. I will find it for the Senator when I have a few moments. It is there.

Mr. ALLISON. If it is there, then the point of my question is answered.

Mr. FRYE. In 1891 we had a general bounty bill something like this, only providing for 3 cents a mile instead of 1. That passed the Senate, and under that bill all vessels above 500 tons were included. It was increased in this instance to a thousand tons, because it was not regarded as prudent to encourage the building of ships smaller than 1,000 tons under any circumstances on account of the rates of freight.

Mr. ALLISON. I notice another thing. As we are having some explanations, and have a little time, I should be glad to have the Senator answer a suggestion or two. On page 7 there is this language:

(b) On each entry, not exceeding 16 entries in any one fiscal year, and for a period of five years from the date of registration of a vessel of over 1,000 gross registered tons, which shall be completed and registered after the passage of this act, one-fourth of 1 cent per gross registered ton for each 100 nautical miles sailed, in addition to the compensation provided in paragraph (a).

That, of course, is an inducement for new vessels to be constructed.

Mr. FRYE. Yes.

Mr. ALLISON. I observe, in looking over the report of the Commissioner of Navigation, a great many steam vessels and a great many sailing vessels as well which would come under this provision, some of them ten, some of them fifteen years old. They are of various ages.

Mr. FRYE. Yes.

Mr. ALLISON. I suggest whether it would not be wise in some way—I do not know that it would be, but it seems to me it would—to diminish the subsidy to vessels which have been registered, say, for fifteen years or more. I notice also, and I think the Senator made that statement, that 5 per cent of any vessel owned by any company is charged off annually for deterioration. We will assume that a vessel at the end of twenty years is charged to profit and loss. It is not quite the proper thing, it seems to me, to allow a vessel fifteen years old, whether steam or sail, to receive the same bounty that a newer and better vessel would receive. In other words, it seems to me there will not be an incentive to the renewal of vessels.

I observe that the French act, which I had the opportunity of looking at the other day, passed by the French Assembly, provides that no subsidy shall be given to a vessel that has been registered more than seven years. Should there not be some provision here which would make it certain that the ships which we have now and to which we are going to pay this subsidy—and I am glad to know it is no larger than the Senator indicates—shall give place in our commercial marine to other vessels newer, perhaps, and in many respects improved vessels?

Mr. FRYE. My reply to that is that the bill requires that these ships shall be A1 in all of the registers.

Mr. ALLISON. Yes; but——

Mr. FRYE. If the Senator will pardon me, an A1 ship is first class in every single respect, and if she is not an A1 ship she can not receive a dollar.

Mr. ALLISON. I understand it. But I understand that there are many ships that are ten years old which are A1.

Mr. FRYE. Yes; because they keep them in splendid shape. They are at work on them all the while.

Mr. ALLISON. Then, there must have been some other reason why the French Government in making this universal subsidy, which we have followed here, have provided that there should be a diminution of the subsidy dependent upon the age of the ship. I see that we followed a part of their suggestion by increasing it for new ships, but we have made no suggestion that looks to a diminution of the subsidy as the ships grow old and feeble, although they may be in the register A No. 1.

Mr. FRYE. If they are in the register A No. 1 they are in every respect first-class vessels. They can not get in there——

Mr. ALLISON. No vessel can sail on the ocean that is not practically A No. 1?

Mr. FRYE. Oh, yes; lots of them.

Mr. PERKINS. If the Senator will permit me, I will state that one of the safeguards of this bill is the classification. It provides not only for the American bureau class, but for the English Lloyds and other well-known classification bureaus that classify ships.

Mr. ALLISON. I understand the classification.

Mr. PERKINS. They must be placed on the dry dock every year in order to be examined to see if they maintain their class. The life of the boiler in an ordinary steamship is not more than eight years; and frequently, owing to galvanic action or where the water has been full of lime, the life of a boiler may not be longer than five years. The boilers are renewed. A ship may have an ordinary engine and they convert it into a compound engine, a triple-expansion engine, a quadruple engine. The surveyor representing the British Lloyds or whatever classification the ship is in inspects the vessel and she is virtually new, so to speak. Every time when the life of a boiler ends the ship is virtually new.

Mr. ALLISON. I know the bill provides for an inspection and that the vessel shall be A No. 1 when it is entered, but shall it continue A No. 1 during all the period of the subsidy? That is the question.

Mr. PERKINS. If the boiler is made to carry 160 pounds of steam to the square inch it must maintain that pressure while it is in existence, or else the vessel can not maintain her advance and the steam is cut down on the boiler.

Mr. ALLISON. I will yield to my nautical friends here. Of course they understand the subject perfectly well. What I know about the vessels I derive from books chiefly, and from occasionally having an opportunity of getting on board one of these seagoing vessels and listening to the Senator from Maine and the Senator from California.

Mr. FRYE. I am glad the Senator has listened.

Mr. ALLISON. But what I am interested in is to know what are the safeguards thrown around this bill that will enable us to protect the Government in making this expenditure as respects details?

Mr. PERKINS. I can not better illustrate than by an object lesson the criticism of my friend from Arkansas [Mr. BERRY] who is to speak upon the bill and who was here a few moments ago. Take the amount of money expended upon the United States transports, which were foreign vessels purchased for the use of the Government. Since we purchased those vessels in some instances we have expended more money in repairs than the vessels cost, in order to keep them up to their classification, or what not. Engineering men would say that the expenditure was a proper one to be made.

Mr. ALLISION. As some of us know, that not only applies to transports, but it applies to naval vessels.

Mr. FRYE. Does it not apply to the insurance companies? They insist upon it.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to put a question which might possibly, although I know infinitely less than the Senator from Iowa on this subject, be a test question in regard to an estimate of the value of a ship. Would the vessel described by the Senator from California, kept up and inspected in this way, sell for as much in the market or would she recover as much of the insurance if she were lost if she were ten years old as when she was one year old?

Mr. ALLISON. Now, that is a very pertinent and valuable question, and I will leave the Senator from California to answer it.

Mr. PERKINS. I will state that the insurance companies base their insurance risk upon the vessel upon her classification.

Mr. HOAR. Without regard to the question whether the vessel is new or old?

Mr. PERKINS. That is, as to her condition; as to what corrosion may have taken place.

Mr. HOAR. But my question is, whether new or old, independent of examination.

Mr. DEPEW. Age does not govern the insurance.

Mr. PERKINS. Age does not govern the insurance.

Mr. ALLISON. Let me elucidate the valuable suggestion of the Senator from Massachusetts. If he, the Senator from California, was in the market to buy a ship, and saw a new one just off the stocks, would he prefer to buy the new one or to buy one fifteen years old at the same price?

Mr. PERKINS. It would depend on how she was built. If both were built the same, I would certainly prefer the new ship. I wish to say, parenthetically, that I have seen and sailed on board a wooden ship that was only five years old that was condemned on the next voyage, and I have seen a Dutch galliot, a wooden ship, that was one hundred years old and she was as sound as the day she was built. I have seen an iron ship, where I have been in the forepeak with a hammer, and because she had not been properly scaled or kept in condition the hammer striking those scales have scaled them off until if I had continued thirty or fifty strokes more of the hammer it would have gone through the vessel. I have seen other vessels that were twenty years old that were in perfect condition, because their interior had been cemented and properly cared for from time to time.

Mr. ALLISON. I am glad to know that a ship never grows old.

Mr. FRYE. If the Senator will allow me, it does grow old. Let me take an illustration. Take the City of Paris, now the Philadelphia. She ran on the rocks, and has been practically repaired. The Philadelphia is worth more to-day than the Paris was when they bought her.

Mr. ALLISON. Very likely, because the Philadelphia was rebuilt after it went out of the service of the Government.

Mr. FRYE. It was repaired after it went out of the service of the Government. After that it went onto the rocks and has since been repaired, and of course in repairing they have taken advantage of all the modern machinery and of every improvement that has been made, and the Philadelphia is worth more to-day than the Paris was.

Mr. ALLISON. It has been a very well cared for and a very tender child. I have no doubt it is a valuable ship now.

I am asking these questions, of course, for information and for nothing else.

Now, I find some other things here that I want to inquire about, as we seem to have an opportunity and no one desires to take the floor. I notice here on page 8 certain exceptions under title 2 of which one is exception f, "a foreign-built vessel, hereafter admitted to American registry pursuant to the provisions of section 4136 of the Revised Statutes."

Section 4136 of the Revised Statutes simply applies to a vessel wrecked on our coast. I wondered why it was that was inserted. It occurred to me that it might be well to simply say a "foreign-built vessel hereafter admitted to American registry," and leave the question as to whether it should be in f or out of it to be settled when we give an American registry to a foreign ship.

Mr. FRYE. The bill provides now, since the amendment was adopted, and I understand it was adopted as I proposed——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It has been adopted.

Mr. FRYE. That no foreign vessel can be admitted to American registry and receive a subsidy. The reason of that provision is that these wrecks are bought all the way from $1,000 to $1,500 and $2,000, and sometimes $10,000, and they are then repaired in our American shipyards at $20,000, $30,000, $40,000, and $50,000, and when the ship is completed it has not cost more than half that it would cost if built here, and exception f will come in so as not to encourage the placing of a wrecked ship in our merchant marine.

Mr. ALLISON. That is absolutely true; but I understood the general scope of the bill to eliminate foreign-built ships, and therefore I thought, apparently, that it would be sufficient to say "a foreign-built vessel hereafter admitted to American registry." If they are now prohibited, of course——

Mr. FRYE. If the Senator will allow me, the law assumes under that wrecking legislation that they are practically American-built ships, because it requires three-fourths of the value of the ship to be expended in American shipyards; and that is the theory on which they are admitted to American registry at all.

Mr. ALLISON. Now, Mr. President, I wish to make another suggestion, because these suggestions had better be made now; it will save time later. I understand note g to be an exception of "a vessel while employed in the coasting trade." To me that is rather indefinite. I will illustrate the point I have had some doubt about. Suppose one of these foreign ships shall start upon its voyage to any South American port and on its way it stops at Fortress Monroe.

Mr. SPOONER. You mean a ship engaged in the foreign trade?

Mr. ALLISON. Any ship engaged in the foreign trade. It stops at Fortress Monroe, Charleston, Savannah, and so on along the coast, and during that period it is employed in the coasting trade.

Mr. FRYE. Yes.

Mr. ALLISON. Under the clause would it not receive a subsidy?

Mr. FRYE. No.

Mr. ALLISON. Now, what I should like to know is whether that is fair. To give an illustration, this coasting trade of ours is like a special train of cars. Nobody can get on board that train except those having authority. In other words, no foreign ship can engage in our coasting trade. That is an absolute trade of our own and we make it exclusive. But we now go further in this bill, if I am not mistaken, and provide that any vessel in the coasting trade, whether a sailing vessel or a steamship, can step out of that trade and enter the foreign trade.

Mr. FRYE. Oh, no.

Mr. ALLISON. Is not that so?

Mr. FRYE. Oh, no. The language is, "while employed in the coasting trade."

Mr. ALLISON. I understand; but have coastwise vessels no opportunity of registering for the foreign trade under this bill?

Mr. FRYE. Undoubtedly; and the very case which the Senator states will illustrate it. Suppose she takes a cargo from New York to Savannah.

Mr. ALLISON. Being a coastwise vessel?

Mr. FRYE. Well, she could not take it unless she was a coastwise vessel. That is coastwise trade. She takes it from New York to Savannah. At Savannah she loads with coal for Brazil. She gets a registry at Savannah and is no longer engaged in the coastwise trade. She simply is excluded from the benefits of this bill from New York to Savannah because she is perfectly protected. Then she gets her registry and proceeds on her voyage to Brazil and gets the subsidy from Savannah to Brazil instead of from New York to Brazil.

Mr. ALLISON. Very well. Then a coastwise vessel not only has the exclusive benefit of the coastwise trade, but she also has the benefit of the foreign trade with the exception of that portion of her voyage wherein she is on our own coast?

Mr. FRYE. She does.

Mr. ALLISON. Now, there is another point that troubles me about these vessels. The bill provides that—

If during the voyage the vessel shall enter at two or more foreign ports or ports in the Philippine Islands, the distance by the direct customary route between such ports shall also be included in the mileage upon which compensation shall be paid under this title.

Now, can not the vessel, under this provision of two or more ports, make a clearance from New York to Hongkong, if you please, or some very distant port, and stop along the line of her voyage, wherever she chooses to stop, and take on and unload cargo at each stopping place, whether going or returning, and receive this bounty of 1 cent per gross registered ton? I only want to know whether that is the understanding or not.

Mr. FRYE. In the first place, no ship would go rollicking around in that way at sea.

Mr. ALLISON. I am inapt, of course, in my illustration; but can not a ship on any voyage stop at any intervening port under this bill between the outlying port to which she is destined and the port of the United States where she expects to land?

Mr. FRYE. I think she can take a cargo for Manila and sail from Manila with another half of a cargo to Hongkong and receive under the terms of the bill a subsidy.

Mr. ALLISON. Then could she not take a cargo or a part of a cargo at Hongkong and come back to Nagasaki and take another part of a cargo and come along and take other cargoes and still receive the subsidy wherever she goes on either the outgoing or returning voyage?

Mr. FRYE. I do not think myself that that is a practical question.

Mr. ALLISON. It says "two or more foreign ports or ports in the Philippine Islands."

Mr. FRYE. That is true; but where the demurrage is worth anywhere from $300 to $500 a day a ship is not going to be coasting around in a dozen different ports to reach her destination at Shanghai or Nagasaki. She would not do it at all. If she stopped at Hawaii she would not get any subsidy from here to Hawaii.

Mr. ALLISON. That is another point which I wanted to understand.

Mr. FRYE. She would not get any subsidy. She would have to register at Hawaii for foreign trade.

Mr. PERKINS. Hawaii is under the coasting provision.

Mr. ALLISON. So I know. If a ship starts from San Francisco for Manila, if you please, and stops at Hawaii——

Mr. PERKINS. Honolulu is the port.

Mr. ALLISON. She stops at Honolulu. The subsidy begins at Honolulu?

Mr. FRYE. Yes, sir.

Mr. ALLISON. And not before, because she is in the coasting trade?

Mr. FRYE. Yes.

Mr. ALLISON. That comes to another question which I wanted to ask, because I desire to know about these things. We passed a tax bill the other day in which we provided (rather against my judgment, but still I yielded to it, and I do not know but that it was the wisest and best thing to do) that our coasting trade shall be extended to the Philippine Islands on the 1st of July, 1904?

Mr. FRYE. Yes.

Mr. ALLISON. Now, I see here that the Philippine Islands are included. I think it occurs twice. Should we not provide that the Philippine Islands shall be excluded until the 1st of July, 1904?

Mr. FRYE. The Senator from Iowa has gotten something now.

Mr. ALLISON. I think so. I expected to strike it sooner or later. Is it the intention and the purpose that we shall not only have the coasting trade to the Philippine Islands but that we shall also have the foreign provisions as respects subsidy?

Mr. FRYE. I think if the Senator offers an amendment to that section he had better not limit it to 1904, because there is a possibility that that time may be extended. We may not have ships enough then. It is understood that the reason was because we did not have ships to do the business of the coastwise trade and were obliged to employ foreign ships. I think it would be safer to make that amendment up to such time as the Philippine Archipelago becomes coastwise, or something of that kind.

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator will observe that I have not offered any amendment to this bill. I am trying to get an interpretation of the provisions which were a little blind to me. The Senator, I think, will pardon these questions.

Mr. FRYE. Will the Senator pardon me?

Mr. ALLISON. Certainly.

Mr. FRYE. The moment the Philippine Archipelago becomes coastwise that moment, under this bill, no American vessel between the United States and the archipelago will receive any subsidy, because she would be engaged in the coastwise trade with the Philippines. I take it that if a vessel started the next day after July 1, 1904, from New York and sailed for the Philippine Archipelago, and that day the Philippine Archipelago was coastwise, under the decision of the court that vessel could not receive pay, because she would be engaged in the coasting trade of the United States, and she would not be entitled to a subsidy, although it might be just as well to express it in the bill itself. I noticed that myself on looking the bill over this morning. I had not noticed it before.

Mr. ALLISON. My attention was called to it in reading over the bill hastily and hurriedly. There are one or two other points that I had in mind and to which I wanted to call attention, but I will refer to them at another time.

Mr. FRYE. A catechism is an awful thing.

Mr. ALLISON. It is; but here we have a curious way of debating these bills. A Senator rises in his place and debates it two or three hours, and then somebody moves to go into executive session. The next day we have two or three hours or more again, and then the hour of 3 o'clock on Monday next arrives. Those of us who want to get information about the bill seem to have no other opportunity of ascertaining what we want to know about it. So I think I am excusable——

Mr. FRYE. I think you are.

Mr. ALLISON. I think I am excusable in undertaking at this early period to get some information upon points I was in doubt about.

Mr. FRYE. I knew, of course, what the Senator meant.

Mr. DEPEW. Does the Senator mean to say that these four or five hour speeches do not give any information?

Mr. ALLISON. I mean to say that they have given information, but it is information upon a wider range. I have been intensely interested in the address to-day made by the Senator from Florida [Mr. MALLORY], in which he analyzed the whole question of subsidy, the constitutional power, and various other points; but the little points which have been troubling me now and then were not alluded to by the Senator from Florida and perhaps will not be alluded to by other Senators who will speak upon the subject.

Even the chairman of this committee, who elucidated the bill most graphically the other day in his opening observations, I think did not allude to one of the points that I have referred to. They were not regarded as of sufficient importance to elicit the attention of gentlemen who are engaged in debating these great questions. They only come up in the minds of those of us who are in the habit now and then of looking rather carefully at phraseology and language and seeing how far it is that the Congress of the United States abdicates its power. I have satisfied myself that the subsequent proceedings as respects this bill will interest us no more here.

Although I can ask the Senator from Maine what the cost will be this year of these three classes of subsidy, and I can make some estimate of what it will cost next year, that will be of no interest to us except as philosophers or in studying current history after this bill passes, because it goes into the maelstrom of executive power and one department draws a warrant upon another department and until the end of time the process goes on, unless this law is repealed. It is without limitation. It lasts as long as the Republic lasts.

Therefore, I have gone into the subject somewhat with a view of seeing if we shall spend hours and hours in the study of the question whether the head of a department shall have another clerk and whether it shall be a $1,400 clerk or a $1,600 clerk, because we can not trust the Secretary to expend money enough to carry on the necessary clerical operations of the Department, and then we shall come in and open wide this gate of expenditure without having any accurate knowledge of the number of ships that are to be benefited.

I am very glad to have the Senator from Maine say that the Commissioner of Navigation has given him a list of these vessels. I hope that list will be produced by to-morrow morning, and printed in the RECORD if it be not too long.

Mr. TELLER. Why not have it done to-night?

Mr. ALLISON. I hope it contains a statement giving the tonnage of the vessels. I want also to ascertain the number of steam vessels that are in the class known as A1 and the number of sailing vessels that are included; whether they are square-rigged or what may be their particular character, and whether they are of 1,000 tons or 3,000 tons or 200 tons or 500 tons.

This is information to which we are entitled, and the Senate is not in any condition, at least I am not, to have it intimated that it is embarrassing to be asking questions about this bill.

Mr. FRYE. I hope the Senator did not understand me as objecting to being catechised. I was only reflecting upon myself, because I remember when I was a boy it was pretty hard work to be catechised.

Mr. ALLISON. I know the Senator did not mean to object to being catechised.

Mr. FRYE. No; not in the slightest degree.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President, this is a technical subject to me, and I want to address a single inquiry to the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE]. What is the comparison of these subsidies fixed under title 1 as to steamships provided for in this bill with the subsidies provided for vessels of the same description in the bill which we considered at the last session; are they the same, or are they more or less?

Mr. FRYE. They are less than in the bill of last session.

Mr. SPOONER. How much less?

Mr. FRYE. I can not tell you exactly how much, but they are less than those provided in the bill of last session, because under that bill I have no doubt the limitation of $9,000,000 would have been reached in three or four years, but it will not be reached under this bill for a long time. The rates are a little less than they were in the bill which passed the Senate in 1891; on the highest class of vessels a little more than they are in the existing law; on the lower class of vessels less than in the existing law, under the postal subsidy. Under the second title they are less than in the last bill, because that was a cent and a half for the first 1,500 miles and a cent after that. This is 1 cent for the entire voyage.

Mr. SPOONER. Take steamships of the first class, 2.7 cents. Is that less than the same steamship would have received under the bill which we considered at the last session; and if so, how much less?

Mr. FRYE. I can not tell you without looking at the figures.

Mr. MALLORY. The rates under the present bill are decidedly less than in the previous bill for steamships of 20 and 22 knots.

Mr. SPOONER. How much less?

Mr. MALLORY. About 1 cent.

Mr. SPOONER. How about steamships of the second class?

Mr. MALLORY. The rates vary; but this bill is less than the other all the way through.

Mr. SPOONER. The amount received per voyage would be frequently less?

Mr. MALLORY. There is a decided difference so far as the 20-knot and 22-knot steamers are concerned. The bill of last year provided for a larger payment than the pending bill, there being a difference of about 1 cent per ton per 100 miles in the case of the 20 and 22 knot vessels.

Mr. SPOONER. What would it amount to in the aggregate?

Mr. MALLORY. That would have to be figured out carefully.

Mr. FRYE. I can not give the amount, but there is no question that it is less than in the bill of last year.

Mr. SPOONER. Is it 35 per cent less.

Mr. FRYE. I do not dare to say.

Mr. SPOONER. Who can inform us—the Commissioner of Navigation?

Mr. FRYE. Very likely he has the figures. We have had to send to him for figures before.

Mr. SPOONER. I think that is important to know.

Mr. FRYE. I know it is less than in the prior bill, but how much less it is impossible for me now to say.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, we are engaged in rather an informal manner on this bill, and I should like to ask the Senator from Maine, with his permission, a question in reference to one provision in it. I do so for information.

I note on page 6, title 2, this language under the head of "General subsidy:"

That from and after the 1st day of July, 1902, the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to pay, subject to the provisions of this title, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the owner or owners of any vessel of the United States duly registered by a citizen or citizens of the United States (including as such citizens any corporation created under the laws of the United States or any of the States thereof).

Stating first that, according to my reading of it, that would entitle to subsidy any foreign ship which by act of Congress is allowed American registry; in other words, if I am correct in my understanding of that provision, any foreign ship—a ship not built in this country—if it shall come under American registry or secure the right to registry will be entitled to subsidy. I want to ask the Senator from Maine whether or not I am correct in that, or whether the expression "any vessel of the United States" is intended to limit it to ships built in the United States?

Mr. SPOONER. We cured that by an amendment to-day.

Mr. BACON. I beg pardon.

Mr. FRYE. I did not cure it, because I thought it was absolutely unnecessary, for my construction of the law is different from that of the Senator from Georgia. I believe that "duly registered" means American-built ships duly registered; but, in order to save any question regarding it, I offered an amendment to-day, which was adopted, which makes the intent perfectly clear.

Mr. BACON. And confines it to American-built ships?

Mr. FRYE. To American-built ships.

Mr. BACON. I did not know of that amendment. I beg pardon of the Senator for making the inquiry.

IMITATION DAIRY PRODUCTS.

Mr. PROCTOR. Mr. President, I wish to give notice that after the bill (S. 3653) for the protection of the President of the United States, and for other purposes, is disposed of, I shall move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Order of Business 552, being House bill 9206, known as the oleomargarine bill, and will ask that it be made the unfinished business.

JOHN GLASS—VETO MESSAGE.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair lays before the Senate a message from the President of the United States, which will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

To the Senate of the United States:

I return without approval Senate bill No. 1258, entitled "An act to remove the charge of desertion from the naval record of John Glass."

There can be no graver crime than the crime of desertion from the Army or Navy, especially during war; it is then high treason to the nation and is justly punishable by death. No man should be relieved from such a crime, especially when nearly forty years have passed since it occurred, save on the clearest possible proof of his real innocence. In this case the statement made by the affiant before the committee does not in all points agree with his statement made to the Secretary of the Navy. In any event it is incomprehensible to me that he should not have made effective effort to get back into the Navy.

He had served but little more than a month when he deserted, and the war lasted for over a year afterwards, yet he made no effort whatever to get back into the war. Under such circumstances it seems to me that to remove the charge of desertion from the Navy and give him an honorable discharge would be to falsify the records and do an injustice to his gallant and worthy comrades who fought the war to a finish. The names of the veterans who fought in the civil war make the honor list of the Republic, and I am not willing to put upon it the name of a man unworthy of the high position.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

WHITE HOUSE, March 11, 1902.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, as a member of the Committee on Naval Affairs, from which that bill was reported, I desire to put in the RECORD with the veto message the report made by the senior Senator from New York [Mr. PLATT] on this bill. A similar bill was reported during the Fifty-sixth Congress, and the report then made was as follows:

It appears from the papers before your committee that the said John Glass enlisted in the Navy January 25, 1864, as a first-class boy, for one year; served on board the U. S. S. Moose, and is recorded as having deserted from the service March 4, 1864. His age at the time of enlistment was 16 years.

It further appears from the papers before your committee that the said John Glass, having been a witness to circumstances of a compromising nature affecting the second officer of the vessel on which he was serving on March 3, 1864, was taken by the said second officer ashore on the following day, presented with money to purchase a civilian suit, and told not to report back to his ship for duty. The said John Glass, being very young at the time, and supposing it to be his duty to obey the injunctions of his superior officers, failed to report back for duty, in consequence of which he was recorded as a deserter. There is no evidence tending to show intentional desertion, and it is the opinion of your committee that the relief intended to be afforded by the accompanying bill should be granted.

I simply desired that this should go in the RECORD in connection with the veto message.

Mr. SPOONER. The man deserted under orders?

Mr. GALLINGER. Well, you can judge of that for yourself. He was a 16-year-old boy.

I move that the message of the President be referred with the bill to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

RAILROADS IN CUBA.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I want to make an inquiry. On the 13th of February, about a month since, the Senate passed a resolution in these words:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be, and he hereby is, directed to inform the Senate what railroads, if any, are now being built in the island of Cuba, by whom, and under what authority of law.

Also what permission, if any, has been given by the military authorities of the United States in the island of Cuba for the building of any railroad, public or private, and under what provisions of law such permission has been granted.

I rise to inquire whether there has been any answer to that resolution? I suppose the Presiding Officer can inform us.

Mr. FRYE. I think the RECORD will show whether it has been answered or not.

Mr. TELLER. Does the Senator remember?

Mr. FRYE. No, I do not remember, but the RECORD will show.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GALLINGER in the chair). The Chair is informed that a reply has not been received.

Mr. CULLOM. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 20 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, March 12, 1902, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, March 11, 1902.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

EXTRA CLERKS FOR ASSESSOR OF DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. McCLEARY. Mr. Speaker, I am directed by the Committee on Appropriations to ask immediate consideration of a joint resolution which I send to the desk.

The joint resolution (S. R. 65) to provide for the employment of extra clerical force in the office of the assessor of the District of Columbia was read, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives, etc., That the sum of $1,000 is hereby appropriated for the compensation of extra clerical force in the office of the assessor of the District of Columbia to assist in the additional work incident to carrying out the provisions of the act of Congress approved February 15, 1902, permitting the payment of arrears of taxes in the District of Columbia at the rate of 6 per cent per annum; one-half of said sum to be paid out of the revenues of the District of Columbia and the other half out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this joint resolution?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Is this reported from the Committee on Appropriations?

Mr. McCLEARY. It is.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. It has been considered by them?

Mr. McCLEARY. Yes, sir.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Unanimously reported from that committee?

Mr. McCLEARY. Yes, sir.

There being no objection, the House proceeded to the consideration of the joint resolution; which was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. McCLEARY, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. LOUD. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the consideration of House bill 11354—the Post-Office appropriation bill.

DUTIES ON SUGAR.

Mr. THAYER. I rise to a question of privilege.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. THAYER. It is a question of the highest privilege, affecting, it seems to me, the dignity of this House and the safety of every member of it. I can briefly state the substance of this question by reading a resolution which I have prepared. With the permission of the Chair, I would like to state it briefly in this form.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will proceed to state his question of privilege.

Mr. THAYER (reading):

Whereas it has been currently reported in many reputable newspapers, and by many Republican members of this House, that in the event of a reduction of the duty on sugar imported from Cuba the American Sugar Refinery, commonly known as the "sugar trust," will be the chief beneficiary; and

Whereas it has been currently reported from reliable sources that the entire crop of Cuban sugar has already been purchased from the Cubans at ruinously low prices by the said sugar trust, and is only awaiting shipment until a reduction of the duty on the same can be secured through the action of Congress, and that any concessions intended to be for the alleviation of the deplorable condition of the Cubans by admitting their sugar this year at reduced rates of duty will serve only to benefit the sugar trust, and that the Cubans will receive no benefit whatever from it; and

Whereas it has been currently alleged by many reputable newspapers that the American Sugar Refinery Company (commonly known as the "sugar trust") has, by subsidizing the press, establishing literary bureaus, and by spending large sums of money, and in other ways, attempted to create a public sentiment in favor of a radical reduction of the tariff on sugar imported from Cuba; and

Whereas it is due to the dignity of this House that the truth or falsity of these charges should be clearly established before the House proceeds to a consideration of the question of reducing the duty on sugar imported from Cuba, as recommended by the President of the United States in his annual message to Congress: Therefore,

Be it resolved, That a special committee of seven members of this House be appointed by the Speaker to investigate the subject-matter of this resolution——

Mr. LOUD (interrupting). I rise to a point of order—that this is not a question of privilege.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. THAYER] will suspend. The gentleman from California makes the point of order that this is not a question of privilege. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. THAYER. I appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts appeals from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. PAYNE. I move to lay that appeal on the table.

Mr. THAYER. Upon that question I demand the yeas and nays.

The question being taken on ordering the yeas and nays, there were ayes 48.

The SPEAKER. In the opinion of the Chair, there is a sufficient number. The yeas and nays are ordered.

Mr. BARTLETT. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. As I understand, we are called upon to vote to sustain or not to sustain the Speaker's ruling. I can not intelligently vote upon the question without knowing precisely what it is.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state the situation again. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. THAYER] rose to a question of personal privilege, reading a certain document. The gentleman from California [Mr. LOUD] made the point of order that it was not privileged matter. The Chair sustained the point of order. From that ruling the gentleman from Massachusetts takes an appeal to the House. The gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] moves to lay that appeal on the table, and the vote is now about to be taken upon the question, Shall the appeal be laid on the table? The Clerk will call the roll.

Mr. THAYER. Allow me a word. I did not claim that this was a question of personal privilege, as I understood the Chair to state.

The SPEAKER. It is neither a question of personal privilege nor a question of privilege in any form. The Chair sustained the point of order.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 125, nays 87, answered "present" 18, not voting 125; as follows:

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. The question now is upon the motion of the gentleman from California [Mr. LOUD], that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, for the consideration of the Post-Office appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, Mr. LITTLEFIELD of Maine in the chair, for the consideration of the bill H. R. 11354.

The Clerk proceeded to read the bill.

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill may be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California asks that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Chairman, it is my purpose to take but a few moments in a general explanation of the provisions of this bill.

The estimates of the Post-Office Department for the support of the postal service for the fiscal year 1903 are $134,731,576. The bill, as you will observe, recommends an appropriation of $137,916,598.75, or $3,185,022.75 more than the estimates. For a committee to recommend an amount of money in excess of the amount recommended by the Department would under ordinary circumstances seem strange, to say the least. Yet the committee have only recommended such an amount of money as they believe is necessary to support the postal service.

Some portion of the increase over the estimates comes from the fact that the Department for some items does not estimate the amount of money that it absolutely knows will be necessary to continue the service. The policy grew up—I do not know when, but before I became a member of this body—of cutting down certain appropriations that were continuous, where the service had to be performed whether we appropriated the money or not, and to come in later for a deficiency appropriation.

Some four or five years ago the Post-Office Committee inaugurated the policy of endeavoring to report, so far as they could find out, the amount of money that they knew was necessary to support the service. The policy had been to cut off a million and a half from the item of railway-mail pay, because the accounts were not presented until after the end of the fiscal year, and the railroad companies could wait until Congress convened, when the deficiency would be made up. On the item of the pay of postmasters, the postmasters pay themselves, substantially, and whether Congress appropriated the money or not the post-offices went on and they continued to pay themselves just the same, it being a mere matter of bookkeeping; and you will find in looking at this bill that in that one item alone we have appropriated a million dollars more than the estimate of the Post-Office Department, that being for the pay of postmasters, and the Department quite freely acknowledged that they had not estimated the amount of money that was necessary to pay the postmasters for that fiscal year.

The committee have recommended an appropriation of $17,139,800 for clerks in post-offices, this sum being $811,600 more than the amount submitted in the Book of Estimates. I will say that for the larger portion of this money, after the estimates had been submitted, the Post-Office Department found that the business was increasing to such an enormous extent throughout the country that in January they were quite positive it would require a large sum in addition to the amount they had estimated, and there were 600 additional clerks provided on this subsequent estimate, to bring the service down as nearly as possible to the basis of eight hours' work, etc. This increase in clerk hire carried by this bill is $2,776,100, an amount of money that almost staggers the average person when he contemplates the increase.

This is the fourth year—and I think the last year—in which the Post-Office Committee have undertaken in the appropriation bill and within the law, by a segregation that we have, gradually to increase the salaries of the post-office clerks until they were brought to a basis that we thought was just to those clerks. When we undertook this gradual promotion the average salary of the post-office clerk was a little less than $700 a year. When this bill is passed the average salary of the post-office clerk will be as nearly $900 a year as it can be figured—that is, from $890 to $900—so that after this year the committee do not believe it will be necessary to make as large an increase in the clerk-hire account as we have in this bill. Later on, however, I propose to submit to the committee some comparisons that I have made, showing where the enormous increases come from in the postal service, and I think I will be able to show the committee and the country that the large increase that comes in the appropriation bill comes substantially from salaries, while in the other great branch of our service, which involves the expenditure of more than one-half the money, the increase is hardly normal. In that portion of the bill that provides salaries the increase has been abnormal.

Your committee recommend an appropriation of $11,222,540 for pay of railway mail clerks, which is $184,044 more than the estimates, and $907,840 more than the appropriation for the current fiscal year.

I have no criticism to make, generally, of the increase of salaries under the supervision of the Second Assistant Postmaster-General's department. I have been a member of the Post-Office Committee for a great many years, and I can say this of that department, that they seem to estimate with all the care that a man could possibly estimate if he had to pay the money out of his own pocket. The $184,044 above the amount estimated comes from a slight increase of the salaries of the railway mail clerks, which proposition we took up in this House two years ago. Up to two years ago it had been the policy to appropriate a lump sum of money for the pay of railway mail clerks, the law fixing the maximum salary which they might receive.

That is, the maximum class of $1,400; and then there are the classes of $1,200, $1,000, $900, and $800. In 1885 Congress did not appropriate a sufficient amount of money for the maximum classes of $1,400 and $1,200, and the Post-Office Department, instead of creating a deficiency, cut the salaries of the railway mail clerks of the $1,400 class to $1,300 and of the $1,200 class to $1,100. Two years ago we made a segregation in the bill and restored the $1,400 class and the $1,200 class. This year your committee have recommended the establishment of a $1,300 class and a $1,100 class, and $184,000 is provided for these new clerks of these two classes—that is, we have taken in the segregation 491, I believe, of that class out of the $1,200 class and put them into a $1,300 class and some 800 from the $1,000 class and put them into a new class we have created of $1,100.

The committee believed that a $200 advance was a greater advance than should be made. We believe this system of equal advantage to the clerks themselves, in that they will get an advance to $1,300 and $1,100 each one, two, three, or possibly five years before they would get an advance to $1,400 or $1,200, and will just as soon get into the classes of $1,200 and $1,400. In arriving at that we take into consideration the different character of work performed by the clerks. The Second Assistant's department have certain ironclad rules. One of them is that no clerk on an apartment car shall receive more than a thousand dollars.

Well, now, we found the same wide divergence of duty and service of clerks in charge of apartment cars that the committee found in relation to rural-delivery carriers, and we did not believe that an ironclad rule could be laid down that an apartment-car clerk should receive a thousand dollars, traveling a certain number of miles, because as a matter of fact some apartment cars are of equal importance with full cars. You can readily see the absurdity of a clerk having charge of a 30-foot apartment car at a thousand dollars a year, and when perchance the railroad company has provided a full car 40 feet long he can receive under their regulations $1,200, so that, many other inequalities existing, we suggest to the Second Assistant's department that they make a division and submit to us the number of men who should be promoted, taking into consideration the class and character of work they perform rather than the number of feet that the car might be.

The committee have recommended an increase of free-delivery service, $1,349,550. I will make no comment upon it. The increase is large—larger than I believe it should be—and the question can readily be asked, and perhaps will be asked, why we recommend an amount in excess of that our best judgment would dictate. The Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads I think quite understand the sentiment of Congress, after it has been impressed upon them three or four times, at least. They have discovered this about the free-delivery service, that no matter whatever amount of money we may appropriate, that department will use such an amount of money as it sees fit to use. We have but to call to your mind the act of this House within the last five years when a deficiency was created in the free-delivery service.

I will not attempt to say but what there should have been an additional amount of money expended in excess of what we recommended; but I believe that any officer that deliberately creates a deficiency in an item of this character ought to be impeached and punished. But we have got a powerful Department to deal with, and when we deal with the postal employees we are dealing with people that come very close to everybody. I call to mind that occasion. Allow me to say to you that December and January passed with this House in session, and no intimation was made that a deficiency would be needed. They did not come to Congress and suggest that the service would suffer unless they had an additional appropriation; but they created a deficiency, and did not even do Congress the honor to consult it. Now, when the deficiency came in some members of this House called the attention of this body to the danger of the position which confronted us. I was one of those unfortunate individuals.

The press of the country, under the suggestion of the department, immediately began its attack upon this body. Now, what did the Department do on this occasion? They had appointed more carriers than they should have appointed, because their first duty was to keep within the law. They let this matter run until March, when they began to create a deficiency in September, and they replied to Congress: "We will let this service run until about the 15th of June, and unless you appropriate the deficiency we will stop the service." Now, imagine the condition of that Department saying to Congress, "We have created a deficiency; we have hired more help than we should have employed; we will not cut off the additional help that we have hired, but if you do not give us this deficiency we will stop the service."

Mr. BURNETT. What particular service was that?

Mr. LOUD. The free-delivery service.

Mr. McCLEARY. The rural free delivery?

Mr. LOUD. No; that was before we had the rural free delivery. I do not think there is any doubt but what Congress would have appropriated that money if they had come to the Committee on Appropriations in the first instance and suggested that the necessities of the service demanded that they have this deficiency, but they did not do that. Congress, without the censure of more than three members on the floor of the House by voice, bowed their heads in obedience to the Department, and we have now very nearly approached the position where the necessity for appropriation committees has almost ceased. If the Department can create a deficiency on subjects of this character, then why not allow them to simply submit to Congress such an amount of money as they desire, and have them become the law of the land without the scrutiny of a single individual? Because in this instance we substantially said to them, "Hereafter you may use what amount of money you see fit regardless of what Congress may give you."

Now, the Post-Office Committee finds itself in that position. In those days they tried to give to the House their best judgment. Where we thought the appropriations for clerk hire were too large we cut them down.

Mr. BURKETT. May I ask the gentleman how these deficiencies were created—were they carried as due bills against the service? The money was not paid out, was it?

Mr. LOUD. I will say that the actual deficiency had not been created when the matter was presented to Congress. We will say that we appropriated twelve millions for free-delivery service, and that would have employed so many carriers. They had put enough carriers on the roll on the 1st day of December to demand an appropriation of twelve million three or four hundred thousand dollars.

That is, they had a service already in operation which would demand a larger appropriation than Congress had provided for. The service would have run, as they said, until about the 15th of June, and then they said to us, as they said to the country—and the country very quickly responded, because they could not afford to have the delivery service shut off from the 15th of June to the 1st of July—you must give us this deficiency or we will stop the service. Congress quickly responded, without condemnation of those who had created it, and appropriated the money. Since that time deficiencies of that kind have not been infrequent. They will continue to become more frequent until Congress asserts its proper and just authority; and the longer Congress continues to submit its neck the lower it must necessarily become, not alone in the contempt of the country, but in the contempt of ourselves.

I submit these few remarks to show that while I think the Post-Office Committee believes that the increased appropriation for clerk hire and—I refer to carriers, etc.—is too large, yet we dare not make it less. I would much prefer to give them too much than to run the chance of having them more frequently defy the will of Congress and expend such an amount of money as they see fit and then come to Congress.

I will append to my remarks some tables to which I have referred. I want to call the attention of the House to the fact that for clerk hire there was appropriated in 1885 $4,875,000. The appropriation for the fiscal year of 1903 is $17,139,800. You will see that it has increased more than three and one-half times. Take the item of "necessary and miscellaneous items." In 1885 it was $87,000; in 1903, $250,000. These are expenditures over which we have substantially no control under the existing conditions.

The expenditures of the Post-Office Department in 1885 were $50,462,350, and in the fiscal year of 1901, which is the last year that we can get at, they were $115,554,920, a little more than double. That is, the expenditures in the Post-Office Department have a little more than doubled since 1885, and the expenditure for clerk hire is more than three and one-half times as great.

A person might naturally say, "Why is there not a greater deficiency?" Because there is more than $60,000,000 expended in some other way; an amount of money sufficient to keep this end from toppling the whole establishment over. Every portion of the postal business which is done by contract—and that refers to all of its supplies, every character of supplies furnished the Department is furnished under contract, and I do not think that any man would criticise that—the increased expenditure there has been hardly anything by reason of the fact that supplies do not cost as much to-day as they did in 1885.

Take the stationery for the postal service. In 1890 it was $51,000,000; in 1903, $70,000,000. Take the wrapping twine. In 1890 it was $78,033; in 1903 it is $125,000. So you will see that I have not taken all the service, but just enough to illustrate that where there is competition, and where the bidding to the Post-Office Department is done upon a business basis, then the increase hardly meets the increase of the service.

Take the star-route service, which I know our friends are roundly condemning, yet I do not believe there are ten men on the floor of this House that are agonizing to put the star-route system under a salary system. Of course, the argument sounded well to us last week; but yet I do not believe there is a man who is anxious to put the star-route service, with its 37,000 contractors and probably 100,000 employees, on a salary basis.

Let us see about that service. In 1885 the appropriation was $5,403,259; in 1902 it was $5,580,000. So competition—natural competition, too—has kept that character of service substantially the same, notwithstanding the increase in the mileage of the star-route service.

In connection with that I want to say that for the fiscal year 1903 the estimate is $6,715,000. You see there a very marked increase, and that increase has been discussed upon this floor when we were not cool; but now we can look at the situation from a business standpoint, because nothing is depending upon it.

Now, the increase of thirteen or fourteen hundred thousand dollars arises from various causes, all, I think, perfectly legitimate. Three or four hundred thousand dollars of this increase comes from an increaseed service in Alaska—a most expensive service. A part of the increase may arise, and probably does arise, from the new regulations adopted by the Post-Office Department compelling the contractor to personally supervise at least the service and to live within the limits of the route served. How much that may amount to no one can tell; but the greatest amount of increase, in my opinion, arises from the fact that in every new contract let in the first section of the country, which, as gentlemen know, embraces New England, New York, Pennsylvania, Maryland, and the Virginias, and the fourth section, which has just been let, comprising substantially all the States west of the Missouri River—in every new contract the contractor has entered into an agreement to deliver the mail to every resident along his route.

I know some people will say that these contractors do not deliver to everybody along the route; but that being the provision in his contract, the contractor in making his bid naturally makes the bid upon the assumption that he has to deliver the mail to everybody and will be compelled to do so if so desired. Now, from these various causes comes the increase in the appropriation bill this year.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. The gentleman spoke a few minutes ago about the question of competition which possibly reduces the cost of the service. Does that competition come from the new star-route service having to compete with the rural service?

Mr. LOUD. I do not know that I understand the purport of the gentleman's question.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. The gentleman says that we have an old star-route service and a new star-route service and a rural-delivery service. Does the competition which it appears has reduced the cost of transportation arise from the fact that the new star-route service competes with the rural service?

Mr. LOUD. Oh, no. I thought I had dwelt at considerable length upon the condition that confronts us—that the star-route service during the last year has increased, not decreased.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. The new service according to the report of the Postmaster-General has cost more, the increase being, I believe, about 13 per cent.

Mr. LOUD. If the gentleman had only paid attention to me without concentrating his mind upon the question he had to ask, he would have heard as plain an explanation of that as I am able to make to the House. If I have failed to make the gentleman from Tennessee understand——

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. The gentleman from California is always interesting to me, and I try to hear him as well as I can. But the gentleman knows the difficulty we have in hearing every word that a member on the floor utters.

Mr. LOUD. You have been standing right there.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I have heard everything the gentleman said since I have been standing here. I left my seat, 20 feet away, for the purpose of hearing the gentleman.

As I was remarking, the gentleman said a few minutes ago that he did not know how much the increased cost of the new star-route service was.

Mr. LOUD. Oh, I can give the exact figures if he wants them. I said it was about $1,300,000.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. The per cent is about 13 per cent. I did not at first hear those figures, and that is the reason I am trying to get an explanation from the gentleman.

Mr. LOUD. I have given the figures substantially. It is immaterial whether the exact amount was $1,300,000 or $1,400,000 or $1,350,000. I said that the increase in this appropriation bill was much greater than it ever had been before. I stated that the appropriation had been substantially the same from 1885 to the fiscal year 1902; that it then took a sudden jump because of certain new conditions which I sought to explain—the condition in Alaska, the condition imposed upon the contractors to deliver the mail to every resident on the route——

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee rose.

Mr. LOUD. If the gentleman—provided he wants to find out the facts—will just pay attention to what I am saying and will not be too anxious to puncture my remarks with an interjection——

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I am not trying to puncture, but to listen; go ahead.

Mr. LOUD. Much of this increase comes from the service in Alaska. Much of it comes from the provision in the contracts compelling the contractor to deliver the mail to every person who lives along the route.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Has not the mail service in Hawaii and Porto Rico helped to cause the increase?

Mr. LOUD. A very small part of the increase—probably not exceeding $40,000; I do not think so much—has arisen from that cause.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. How much has been paid out during the last two years in those two Territories?

Mr. LOUD. For the star-route service?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. For the mail service.

Mr. LOUD. I should say not exceeding $40,000. My impression is that it does not exceed $20,000.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. In each of those Territories?

Mr. LOUD. No, both. It is a very small sum. I should say that $40,000 is the extreme limit. There is not much star-route service in those islands. Now, you take inland mail transportation by steamboat routes, where we do business on a business basis. You will find that the expenditures in 1896 were $389,854.18. Follow the years up until you get to 1900, and there you have an expenditure of $497,938.04, and in 1901 $508,444.48. There is where we feel the effect of the annexation of Porto Rico and Hawaii, because all of the service between those islands and the mainland is under the head of steamboat service. The line of segregation between steamboat service and ocean mail service is that ocean mail service is a foreign service, but all domestic service upon the water is known and graded under the head of inland mail transportation by steamboat routes.

Take the item of mail-messenger service. The expenditures in 1896 were $1,175,741.11; in 1901, $973,471.98; and if the gentlemen will follow it back through the years it will be found a constantly increasing service in mileage and the number of post-offices, with a very slight increase in the expenditures therefor. I thought it my duty, at least it was a pleasure to me, to submit, not so much to the House but to the country, certain thoughts that are in my mind regarding the increased expenditures of the Post-Office Department, which carry out, to my mind, the thought I have expressed many times before, that if the Post-Office Department was managed upon business principles we would have a very large surplus. That is all I have to suggest.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. LOUD. Certainly.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I have not read the bill, but I would like to know whether there is any provision made for pneumatic-tube service.

Mr. LOUD. I will say to the gentleman there is no such provision in the bill. Such a provision clearly, without proper legislation to guard it, would be subject to a point of order.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman inform the committee whether his committee proposes to consider the question of appropriating by another bill for pneumatic-tube service?

Mr. LOUD. I would say to the gentleman, Mr. Chairman, that the committee have been considering that question, and after this bill is out of the way—you know we have been pretty busy the last week or ten days—we will immediately resume the consideration of that subject, which is before us in the shape of a bill.

Mr. BURKETT. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. LOUD. Certainly.

Mr. BURKETT. I notice on page 15 of the bill and at the top of page 16 there is something about the carriers being hired by contract. Is not that the same matter that we have been discussing for a week?

Mr. LOUD. I would say to the gentleman that was reported in the Post-Office appropriation bill, and if I did not tell the House I think I ought to tell the House now how that was put upon the appropriation. I think I went over this question on another subject some time ago. Early in the session the Post-Office Committee realized, as we realized last winter, that legislation was necessary for the rural free-delivery service. We consulted such members, as the gentleman knows, without referring to them directly, as to what was best to do—to legislate on a bill by itself, that would have to go to the Senate and receive the signature of the President before it became a law, or to put the legislation on the appropriation bill with an appropriation of money.

In view of the fact that we had to legislate, that is, assuming that we had a rural free-delivery service at all—because in the condition it was the objection of one gentleman on the floor could throw it out—we had the assurance and had the right to believe when this bill was reported that this legislation would be considered upon this appropriation bill; but lo and behold, when it was reported some opposition was made to giving a rule to consider it in this way; so you see it is here. It was immaterial whether we considered this on the appropriation bill or whether we considered it in a separate bill. Where it should have been considered was where the money is appropriated for the service. But possibly some acute gentleman thought that if on the reporting of this bill to the House the word would be sent, and permit me to say it was sent, over the country that the Committee on Rules, our leaders—not yours—our leaders, Republicans who mark out the course that we shall pursue in legislation, had turned the committee down and had refused to give us a rule, some benefit might come to the opponents of that measure. If they did not benefit from that, permit me to say they benefited in this, that they gained nearly a month's time until this great machine of the Government got to work.

Mr. BURKETT. What I want to know is what it is doing in here, and if it is the same matter.

Mr. LOUD. Why, it was there and we could not take it out until we got to it. It was there because of promises made and assurances given that a rule would be reported to consider it.

Mr. BURKETT. It is the intention to take it out after the decision on this point that was made yesterday?

Mr. LOUD. I will say, so far as the chairman of the Post-Office Committee is concerned, that he proposes to keep absolute faith with this House, and not to support any provision in this measure here that was not supported by the House yesterday.

Legislation makes very little difference to me personally. I, as chairman of the committee, and the members of the Post-Office Committee, give the House the benefit of our best judgment. It is our business to do that. If you refuse to take our judgment, we are at the service of the House, and we take your judgment when our judgment is turned down. I am speaking now for myself. I can not afford, and neither can any other man afford in any way to attempt to deceive this House. If he ever does it once he does not deserve and can not again command the confidence of the most humble member of this House.

Mr. BELLAMY. I see this bill calls for an appropriation of $138,000,000, in round numbers, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1903.

Mr. LOUD. Yes.

Mr. BELLAMY. What increase is that over the appropriation for 1902? I see for 1901 it was $115,000,000, according to the report, but I do not see the amount for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1902.

Mr. LOUD. The appropriation for the fiscal year ending the 30th of June next, commonly spoken of as the appropriation for the fiscal year 1902, is $123,782,688.75.

Mr. BELLAMY. And the increase for 1903 is about $15,000,000.

Mr. LOUD. Very nearly; $14,133,000 and some odd.

Mr. BELLAMY. What is that increase for? There is only $1,000,000 increase for the rural free-delivery service, is there?

Mr. LOUD. Oh, the appropriation for rural delivery service this year is nearly eight million dollars. For the current year the appropriation was three and a half million dollars, so you will see that there is an increase of nearly four and one-half million dollars for the rural-delivery service. This bill carries $7,000,000 for the pay of rural carriers alone, and for the supervisory force there is an appropriation of about $850,000, $375,000 of which, however, is in the legislative appropriation bill. So, as I say, there is an increase of nearly four and a half million for rural delivery service, an increase of a million dollars for postmasters, an increase of $2,700,000 for post-office clerks, an increase of a million dollars for railway-mail clerks, and those items pretty nearly make up the increase. There are, of course, increases in the item for the payment of railroads, and for other branches of the service.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, just a moment. Will the gentleman explain a paragraph in the bill?

Mr. LOUD. Oh, I desire to yield the floor.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. On page 17, paragraph 4, appears the following:

For pay of letter carriers of rural free-delivery service, $7,000,000. In all, for rural free-delivery service, $7,529,400.

Then this is the language which I desire to have the gentleman explain:

Provided, That hereafter all mail service on rural free-delivery mail routes shall be performed by carriers designated pursuant to an advertisement inviting competitive bidding, except as herein otherwise provided:

First. That before any person shall be designated to carry the mail on any mail rural free-delivery route, the Postmaster-General shall cause an advertisement to be posted for not less than ten days, in a conspicuous place accessible to the public, in the post-office from which the mail is to be carried, inviting proposals, in such form as he may prescribe, for the service to be performed. The service shall be awarded to the lowest bidder.

Is not that practically the same provision that we voted upon and defeated yesterday in the House?

Mr. LOUD. Why, Mr. Chairman, I have just completed as full an explanation of that as it would be possible, I think, for even the gentleman from Tennessee to have given if he had the floor. I do not like to go over it again.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I beg the gentleman's pardon, but I did not hear one word of what he said.

Mr. LOUD. Why did not you come over and hear it?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I do not wish to offend the gentleman.

Mr. LOUD. Let me say to the gentleman that he can not offend me. While lots of people make the statement here that LOUD is cross and is mad, and all that kind of business——

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I think the gentleman might have given me an answer before this if he had undertaken to do so.

Mr. LOUD (continuing). Nobody can offend me; but I have just completed an explanation of that very thing. That paragraph appears in the bill, I will say to the gentleman, because it was there when the bill was reported.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Then it does refer to the contract system?

Mr. LOUD. Why, certainly it does; I have explained that fully already. Substantially the same provision is included in the appropriation bill that was in the bill that we disposed of yesterday. Remember that the appropriation bill was reported before that bill was even introduced, upon the assurance that a rule would be given to consider it.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I thank the gentleman for explaining the paragraph. I did not understand it.

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Chairman, I will insert the following tables for the information of the House, and reserve the balance of my time, if I have any:

Mr. GRIGGS. I yield one hour to my colleague [Mr. BRANTLEY].

Mr. BRANTLEY. Mr. Chairman, there is no phase of the Cuban question but what presents a topic of interest and concern to the American people, but there is one phase of it that to-day overshadows all others in our concern, and that is the one presented by the problem of furnishing relief to that long-time unhappy island from the distressing economic condition in which we are assured it is about to become involved, and will be involved, unless relief is furnished. I do not question the existence of a condition in Cuba that calls for relief, nor do I question the duty of this Congress to furnish the relief needed, but, in what I shall say on this subject, I do not assume to speak for any member of this body other than myself.

I believe that the problems presented by Cuba's pressing need call for a free and honest discussion among us, in order that they may be wisely and justly solved, and so believing I enter upon this discussion to contribute what little, if anything, I can to that much to be desired end.

In my judgment, whatever the American Congress is going to do upon this important subject should be speedily done. If we are going to grant relief, it should be granted now, for it is needed now. If we are not going to grant it, then it is due to Cuba to let her know that fact, so that she may cease feeding upon an unfounded hope. It is also due to our own sugar producers and the commercial interests connected therewith to have the question of relief or no relief to Cuba speedily determined. The atmosphere of doubt and uncertainty, into which the agitation for a reduction plunges the sugar trade, does and will do more harm than can possibly be done by any reduction of the tariff on Cuban sugar that is at all likely to be made.

Let us, therefore, proceed to this discussion, and let us reach a determination of it with all reasonable and proper dispatch. I would venture to suggest, too, that in considering the question we should ever keep in mind the great principles of justice and equity in their comprehensive sense as applied to us as a nation dealing with Cuba, and also as applied to us as a Government dealing with matters affecting its own people, and having regard for the greatest good to the greatest number.

THE RECOMMENDATIONS OF OUR OFFICIALS.

In reaching our conclusions, if we purpose being influenced by the opinions of those officers of our Government charged with the duty and responsibility of studying and knowing, as well as caring for the needs of Cuba, we have ample authority from them for granting the relief that is prayed for.

President McKinley, in his message to us of December 5, 1899, said:

> This nation has assumed before the world a grave responsibility for the future good government of Cuba. We have accepted a trust, the fulfillment of which calls for the sternest integrity of purpose and the exercise of the highest wisdom. The new Cuba yet to arise from the ashes of the past must needs be bound to us by ties of singular intimacy and strength if its enduring welfare is to be assured. Whether those ties shall be organic, or conventional, the destinies of Cuba are in some rightful form and manner irrevocably linked with our own, but how far, is for the future to determine in the ripeness of events.

President Roosevelt, in his annual message to us last December, said:

> Elsewhere I have discussed the question of reciprocity. In the case of Cuba, however, there are weighty reasons of morality and of national interest why the policy should be held to have a peculiar application, and I most earnestly ask your attention to the wisdom, indeed to the vital need, of providing for a substantial reduction in the tariff duties on Cuban imports into the United States. Cuba has in her constitution affirmed what we desired—that she should stand in international matters in closer and more friendly relations with us than with any other power—and we are bound by every consideration of honor and expediency to pass commercial measures in the interest of her material well-being.

The Secretary of War, in his annual report for 1901, said:

> Our present duty to Cuba can be performed by the making of such reciprocal tariff arrangements with her as President McKinley urged in his last words to his countrymen at Buffalo on the 5th of September. A reasonable reduction in our duties upon Cuban sugar and tobacco in exchange for fairly compensatory reductions of Cuban duties upon American products will answer the purpose, and I strongly urge that such an arrangement be promptly made.

And again:

> Aside from the moral obligation to which we committed ourselves when we drove Spain out of Cuba, and aside from the ordinary considerations of commercial advantage involved in a reciprocity treaty, there are the weightiest reasons of American public policy pointing in the same direction; for the peace of Cuba is necessary to the peace of the United States; the health of Cuba is necessary to the health of the United States; the independence of Cuba is necessary to the safety of the United States. The same considerations that led to the war with Spain now require that a commercial arrangement be made under which Cuba can live. The condition of the sugar and tobacco industries in Cuba is already such that the earliest possible action by Congress upon this subject is desirable.

Major-General Wood, military governor of Cuba, in an authorized statement recently published, said:

> On the other hand, unless action is taken, and taken promptly, on the question of tariff reduction, Cuba will be a monument, not to the good effects of our intervention, but to the ruin which has followed the destruction of her great industry.

We may disagree among ourselves or with all these high officials as to the proper measure of relief that the Congress should grant to Cuba, or as to whether Congress should grant any relief whatever, but it does not seem to me that we can disagree, after reading the statements accompanying these recommendations, to the proposition that Cuba needs, and needs urgently and immediately, relief of some kind and from some source, and, so far as I am concerned, I am prepared to say that I do not see how we can disassociate ourselves from an interest in the results to come to Cuba if relief be not granted her.

THE CONDITION AND NEEDS OF CUBA.

What Cuba wants and needs is a market for her products, and her chief want is a market for her sugar. Her sugar crop for 1901–2, it is estimated, will amount to something like 850,000 tons, and practically all of it raw sugar, as she refines but little of it. This crop must soon be put on the market, and it is now worth in New York only about 3½ cents per pound, out of which must come transportation and insurance charges, while the tariff on it is about 1.685 cents per pound, leaving only about 1.46 cents per pound with which to defray the expenses of cultivation, manufacturing, and all the charges incident to the business of making and selling sugar.

The marketing of it at this price means a great loss, the paralyzing effect of which will go into every avenue of life and trade in the island. Cuba, in her present condition, can not stand such a loss. She has neither resources or credit with which to meet it. In our 1899 census report of the island we find given "as an indication of the financial distress prevailing in the island" the figures showing that approximately 58 per cent of the rural real estate of the island is under mortgage and approximately 79 per cent of the city real estate is likewise mortgaged, in addition to an amount equal to 10 to 14 per cent of the entire value of all the real estate due as quitrents (censos).

This same report also says:

> While the ten years' war was not without disastrous effects on the economic development of Cuba, they were trifling as compared with the war of 1895–1898, which resulted in a large decrease of population and of the wealth-producing power of the country. It may be said in general on a conservative estimate that the population of the island decreased 12 per cent and its wealth two-thirds.

Having no means, therefore, with which to meet the great loss that selling her sugar at less than the cost of production would entail upon her, having no way to counteract the fearfully devastating and demoralizing effect of this loss, and having no power to increase the market price of her sugar, she appeals to us to make such reduction of our tariff rate on her sugar as will enable her to avert the loss, and, if possible, give some profit to her people, so long famished and impoverished by her destructive wars.

THE EFFECT OF THE PLATT AMENDMENT.

Among those who oppose making the reduction in the tariff asked for, it is said—and with my knowledge I would say justly so—that the United States has always been Cuba's chief market for her sugar, and that there is now no discrimination in our tariff against her. Upon this statement the argument is made that if before our war with Spain she could pay our tariff, competing with other foreign countries, and live, she can do so now. I join issue on this argument, although I take no issue with the proposition that the United States, when it engaged in the glorious work of freeing Cuba from the oppression of Spain and when it completed that work by hauling down from Morro Castle the Spanish flag, never there to be unfurled again, did not thereby obligate itself to furnish alms to Cuba, to furnish her sustenance, or to furnish bread upon which her people might live.

Whatever obligation arose from the beneficent and humane acts of our Government in driving out of Cuba her Spanish oppressors were not obligations due from the United States. Our Government, however, whether wisely or unwisely, was not content with its great work of dethroning the power of Spain in Cuba. It went further, and as a condition precedent to finally bestowing the freedom and independence upon that unhappy island for which it had so long been struggling, required that there should be incorporated into the organic law of the island certain provisions contained in what is known as the Platt amendment. Those provisions were as follows:

Provided further, That in fulfillment of the declaration contained in the joint resolution approved April 20, 1898, entitled "For the recognition of the independence of the people of Cuba, demanding that the Government of Spain relinquish its authority and government in the island of Cuba, and to withdraw its land and naval forces from Cuba and Cuban waters, and directing the President of the United States to use the land and naval forces of the United States to carry these resolutions into effect," the President is hereby authorized to "leave the government and control of the island of Cuba to its people" so soon as a government shall have been established in said island under a constitution, which, either as a part thereof or in an ordinance appended thereto, shall define the future relations of the United States with Cuba, substantially as follows:

I.

That the government of Cuba shall never enter into any treaty or other compact with any foreign power or powers which will impair or tend to impair the independence of Cuba, nor in any manner authorize or permit any foreign power or powers to obtain by colonization, or for military or naval purposes, or otherwise, lodgment in or control over any portion of said island.

II.

That said government shall not assume or contract any public debt, to pay the interest upon which and to make reasonable sinking-fund provision for the ultimate discharge of which the ordinary revenues of the island, after defraying the current expenses of government, shall be inadequate.

III.

That the government of Cuba consents that the United States may exercise the right to intervene for the preservation of Cuban independence, the maintenance of a government adequate for the protection of life, property, and individual liberty, and for discharging the obligations with respect to Cuba imposed by the treaty of Paris on the United States, now to be assumed and undertaken by the government of Cuba.

IV.

That all acts of the United States in Cuba during its military occupancy thereof are ratified and validated, and all lawful rights acquired thereunder shall be maintained and protected.

V.

That the government of Cuba will execute and, as far as necessary, extend the plans already devised or other plans to be mutually agreed upon for the sanitation of the cities of the island, to the end that a recurrence of epidemic and infectious diseases may be prevented, thereby assuring protection to the people and commerce of Cuba as well as to the Southern ports of the United States and the people residing therein.

VI.

That the Isle of Pines shall be omitted from the proposed constitutional boundaries of Cuba, the title thereto being left to future adjustment by treaty.

VII.

That to enable the United States to maintain the independence of Cuba, and to protect the people thereof, as well as for its own defense, the government of Cuba will sell or lease to the United States lands necessary for coaling or naval stations at certain specified points, to be agreed upon with the President of the United States.

VIII.

That by way of further assurance the government of Cuba will embody the foregoing provisions in a permanent treaty with the United States.

Now, whatever may be said for or against these provisions, they expressed the desire upon the part of our Government, to use the language of President Roosevelt, that Cuba "should stand in international matters in closer and more friendly relations with us than with any other power." She has acceded to our desire and has incorporated these provisions into the constitution that she has framed. No other country in the world has done so, and none other has been asked to do so. We therefore bear a different relation to Cuba from that borne by us to any other country in the world. We bear a different relation for many other reasons. Cuba is at our door. Any internal disturbance there affects us. Should an internecine war among her people occur, there would be the same reason for us to interfere that prompted us to end her war with Spain.

Should pestilence stalk abroad in her cities, there would be every reason for us to want to check and hold it there and keep it from our shores. Should any European power seek to invade her territory, or to wrest from her one single foot of her soil, we could not submit to it. We are interested, too, in having the work of freedom and independence, so well begun by us, carried to its full fruition. Of what avail would be the blood and treasure given with lavish hand by us for Cuba's cause if the end must be a weak and bankrupt government, a poverty-stricken people, and a dismantled, torn, and divided Cuba?

A happy and a prosperous people and a strong and efficient government must exist in Cuba before our war in her behalf will have accomplished the end for which it was waged and before we can expect her to live up to the obligations she assumed to us "to establish a stable government, capable of maintaining order and observing international obligations."

It is idle to say that she can make commercial treaties of mutual concession with other countries and thereby acquire a market or markets for her products. Whatever country might be disposed to treat with her would be confronted with the knowledge that it could not enforce any demand against her without the consent of the United States. It would be confronted with the knowledge of the indissoluble union between her and the United States. It could not treat with her as a full, free, and independent sovereign, for, in the language of the Secretary of War, "Cuba has acquiesced in our right to say that she shall not put herself in the hands of any other power, whatever her necessities." Under the first clause of the Platt amendment, no foreign power can, for any purpose—the collection of a just demand, the enforcement of a treaty obligation, or for any other pretext or cause—obtain lodgment in or control, permanently or temporarily, over any portion of the island.

The limitation that we put upon her power to contract a public indebtedness, the right given us to intervene in her affairs, and the other conditions imposed in the Platt amendment all detract from her sovereignty. I am not discussing the wisdom or unwisdom of these conditions, so far as the ultimate good of Cuba is concerned, but I am discussing them as affecting her efforts now to make treaty regulations with other countries in which she must promise something in order to receive something. I therefore return to my original proposition that it is idle to talk about her going to some other country to obtain the relief that she is now asking from us, even though we could close our eyes to the events of the last four years and feel justified in our own hearts in closing our doors and turning our backs upon her and sending her out in the world to ask and receive alms wherever she might.

THE SUGAR OF THE WORLD.

Eliminating, however, the question as to whether or not, under the Platt amendment, Cuba remains free and untrammeled to negotiate treaties and enter into contractual relations with other countries, and assuming, if you please, that she is free as the air to go where she pleases and contract where she pleases, we find that, with or without the Platt amendment, there is no place in all the wide world, except to us, that she can go to sell her sugar. We are bound to get her sugar. We are bound to use her sugar. She can not refuse it to us, if she would, and the question is, Shall we pay her a price for it at which she can live, or will we take it at a price at which she must starve? She can not compel us. She can not coerce us. The power is in our hands, absolute and complete, to make or destroy her, and the only thing to determine is, How shall we use our power?

When we examine into the present situation, we find that when our present tariff laws were first imposed and before Cuba could pay the rate of duty we exacted from her, but she can not do so now. The trouble is easily stated. There is in the world to-day an immense overproduction of sugar. It is estimated that for this year the overproduction will not be less than 1,500,000 tons. This overproduction has of necessity depressed the price, and to-day the price is abnormally low. The whole sugar world feels the depression, but Cuba feels it more, and the depression is more disastrous to her than to almost any other part of the world. It is patent that she is in a worse condition than are the sugar producers of the United States, for they do not have to pay the 1.685 cents duty which she has to pay and which in itself is more money than Cuba receives net for her sugar.

She must sell in the United States and at the same price as our own producers sell, and out of this price must pay this enormous duty. What is said of our own producers applies also to the producers in the Hawaiian Islands and Porto Rico, whose sugar comes in free of duty. It takes no argument, therefore, to demonstrate that, so far as any of these producers are concerned, in the present low state of the market Cuba is in infinitely worse condition than they are. So far as the rest of the sugar-producing world is concerned her condition is no better, for when she undertakes to compete with the beet-sugar producers of Germany, Austria, France, Russia, and other countries across the water she finds them protected by a system of bounties and cartels under which they are enabled to sell sugar in foreign countries at a price far below the actual cost of making it.

How can Cuba, impoverished by a long war, with a new government just being established, with no funds, protect her producers in any such way? In order to compete with these bounty countries she would have to resort to bounties, and this is of course an impossibility now for her to do, and I for one hope, however able she may become, that she will never resort to them. She can not sell sugar to the beet-sugar producing countries, for, with their bounties and cartels and their tariffs, they have effectively shut her out. They have with equal effectiveness shut her out of the nonsugar-producing countries.

If she goes to England, she finds the Englishman eating German sugar at 2 cents per pound, the same sugar that the German consumer in his own country must pay 8 cents per pound for. This is what the bounty and the cartel has done for the German consumer. It has taxed him with taxes upon taxes, in order that the German producer of sugar and the German refiner might flourish and might carry their goods into all the countries of the world. The end of this unrighteous and unjust system of taxation has not yet come, but already the mutterings of the people against it are being heard, already its destroying effects are being felt, already the trouble and disaster that must result from it are beginning to appear, and some day, soon or late, I know not when, the German people and all other bounty-ridden people are going to revolt. The prospect of their revolt, however, does not help Cuba. Her trouble is now, and the relief she wants is not in the future, but in the present.

It is interesting to note, in connection with bounties, the rapid growth in the production of sugar throughout the world, and the comparison between the growth of cane sugar and beet sugar. Going back to the year 1853-54, we find a total production of 1,277,000 tons of cane sugar and 304,000 tons of beet sugar, or more than four times as much cane sugar as beet sugar. From that date on the total production has increased year by year, but year by year the percentage of increase of beet sugar has been greater than that of cane sugar, until, coming down to the year 1901-2, we find the estimates to be 3,850,000 tons of cane sugar as against 6,860,000 tons of beet sugar, an increase in the production of cane sugar during the forty-eight years of 201 per cent and in beet sugar of 3,263 per cent, and a total increase of all sugar of 637 per cent.

We find, too, that while Cuba in one year, 1894, produced slightly more than 1,000,000 tons of sugar—the highest production in her history—yet that in the depression and disturbances caused by her last war her production decreased, and in one year, 1899, she only produced 308,000 tons. We note, however, that during the period in which her production was less, and the sum total of cane sugar produced was thereby decreased, that the production of beet sugar throughout the world was steadily increasing, so that when Cuba comes this year with a crop of sugar, estimated at about 850,000 tons, she finds no place to market it. She finds enough sugar to feed the world and 650,000 tons to spare. Her sugar is not only not needed for consumption anywhere, but, in addition to her 850,000 tons not needed, she finds 650,000 other tons that the consuming world has no use for, and she also finds that by means of bounties and tariffs the markets of the world, overburdened as they are, are completely closed to her.

CUBA'S FINANCIAL CONDITION AND OUR DUTY TO HER.

This statement, however, does not complete the statement of her deplorable condition. Her total exports for the year 1899 were $49,967,188, and of this amount her sugar exports represented $19,330,847. In 1900, out of total exports amounting to $51,391,095, her sugar furnished $17,528,815 of it, and in 1901 she exported $32,033,830 worth of sugar, while her total exports amounted to only $66,505,491. It will be remembered that these three years represent the period of her lowest sugar production, so that we can well understand how, under conditions approaching the normal, sugar represents half, if not more, of her total exports. With one-half, then, of her total output now to be sold at a loss, her condition could not be anything but deplorable.

The figures speak more eloquently of her needs than words and phrases, however well selected or however skillfully put together, could possibly speak. There are still other figures that appeal for her, for in these same three years she imported and was compelled to import goods in excess of what she exported to an amount in the three years exceeding the sum of $40,000,000. The balance of trade was against her to that extent. She bought and was compelled to buy, in excess of what she sold, more than $40,000,000.

In the face of all these figures, in the face of conditions that I have endeavored to describe, can anyone question the sincerity, the righteousness, or the justice of the recommendations for concessions to Cuba that have come to us from the President and from our officers beneath him who have been charged by us with the duty of safeguarding Cuba? In the face of these facts, can any one doubt the honesty of the Cuban appeal?

With her condition fully pictured to and understood by us, and with the glorious record of the great achievements in her behalf that the American people, in humanity's name, have already performed, can we stop now and turn the other way? Must we not go on until the means to live and the means to work have been placed in her hands? What greater mockery than gaunt and hungry Freedom, than weak and starving Liberty? The crimson is yet upon San Juan Hill, the smoke of battle still lingers over Santiago Bay—the deeds there done live in reality and have not yet reached the age of memory. They command us that the liberty for which they were wrought shall take the form of the goddess we love, and not be left a hideous deformity.

THE OBJECTION TO HELPING CUBA, AND THE TARIFF.

What objection is there to heeding Cuba's appeal? What objection is there to adopting the urgent recommendation of the President? Who, in all this broad, rich land denies the need of Cuba, or our duty to relieve that need? Does the objection come from the body of the great American people? Does it come from the same generous, patriotic hearts that four years ago offered to do and to die that Cuba might be free? Be it said to the everlasting credit of the American heart, No! many times No! I would not assail the patriotism, the generosity, or the American manhood of those who make the objection. I recognize in them a valuable, necessary, and patriotic part of our citizenry. I believe they are prompted to their objection—some of them, at least—by an honest apprehension of serious injury to their business—the making of sugar.

Some of them—I do not know how many—may be prompted by greed alone. This spirit of greed—perhaps self-interest would be a more polite term—is not confined to our sugar producers alone. I do not know of one single tariff-fed, tariff-protected class in all our land—I care not how high the tariff or how rich the protected class—but what would rise in arms—and they would be strong arms, too—to protest against any, even the slightest, reduction of that tariff. I know, too, the potent influence of that protest. I see protected classes to-day using the tariff to sell to American consumers at higher prices than they sell to foreign consumers, using the principle of the German cartel that we condemn; and there are none to say them nay.

I saw them restrain an American Congress from doing that which one high in authority said was its "plain duty" to do. I saw their representatives swarm before our highest judicial tribunal when the "insular cases" were being argued. I noted what was said of their presence by the Chief Justice in his great dissenting opinion. He said: "Briefs have been presented at this bar purporting to be on behalf of certain industries and eloquently setting forth the desirability that our Government should possess the power to impose a tariff on the products of newly acquired territories so as to diminish or remove competition." I noted also the revolutionary opinion of the court in these historic cases, revolutionary certainly in overturning the long-settled policy of our Government, if not, as many of us believe, in changing the plain meaning of the Constitution.

Who can blame the sugar producers from traveling along the path that they and so many others have so successfully trod in the past? I am not here to criticise them, for it is the system and not those who make use of it that merit most our condemnation.

The charm, the fascination, and the profit of protection to those who have it none can gainsay. A taste of it but whets the appetite for more, and the recipient of it, however brief the period, becomes a veteran in its defense. Witness the Hawaiian Islands ever since we gave them free trade, and even little Porto Rico, only recently favored by us, protesting against any concession to Cuban sugar. The leaven of protection has worked speedily and well, and now, with these possessions, the one great duty of the American Government is to feed them out of the protection spoon. Sympathy and tears they may have for Cuba, but Cuban sugar must not compete with their sugar. Their isolation and their suffering are all things of the past. The memory of them has gone. They only know that their market has been found—let other people find one the best they can.

A REDUCTION WILL NOT INJURE OUR SUGAR PRODUCERS.

But the time is not opportune to discuss the doctrine of protection, except as an incident. For the purpose of my contention and my argument to-day I am content that it be admitted that our beet-sugar producers and our cane-sugar producers are entitled to protection, and even to the extent that they now receive it. My position is that the fears of Cuban sugar, by those of them who are honest in that fear, is unfounded, and upon the others I have neither time nor patience to waste. I maintain that a reasonable concession on Cuban sugar, enough to grant the needed relief to Cuba, will not and can not affect them. The situation is simple and easily understood.

The total consumption of sugar in the United States for the year 1901 was 2,372,316 pounds. The average annual increase of consumption for the past twenty years is nearly 7 per cent, so that the consumption for 1902 will be in excess of that for 1901, probably less than 7 per cent, but some considerable increase. Now, the total yield of sugar in the United States for the present year is estimated to be, from cane sugar, about 300,000 tons; from beet sugar, about 150,000 tons; or a total of 450,000 tons. From the Hawaiian Islands it is estimated that we will get about 300,000 and from Porto Rico about 100,000 tons, making all told about 850,000 tons, or only about one-third of our actual consumption; so that if all the Cuban sugar made this year, amounting to about 850,000 tons, comes in, we will still have to buy from other sugar-producing countries 700,000 to 800,000 additional tons.

We have duties against all sugars and duties and countervailing duties against all bounty sugars. Then how are our domestic producers to be hurt by a concession to Cuban sugar? So long as we get no more sugar from Cuba than, added to our domestic production, we can consume, how is anyone to be injuriously affected?

THE FEARS OF OUR SUGAR PRODUCERS.

Our friends, the domestic producers, realize the force of this answer, given from the protectionist standpoint to their objections, and how do they meet it? They procure experts who, upon hypothetical data and assumptions, figure out that an increased price to Cuba for her sugar will so stimulate its production that ten years from now she will produce more than 2,000,000 tons, and twenty years hence a great deal more than that, and it is against this estimated increased production that the domestic producer now asks, ten and twenty years in advance, that he be protected.

I would like to know what we have to do to-day with the production of sugar in Cuba ten or twenty years from now. We are dealing with the Cuba of to-day and the immediate future. We want to help her now. Ten years from now she, in all probability, will not need the help of our tariff. If we reduce our tariff to her to-day, does that mean that it must stay perpetually reduced? No tariff law was ever made for time and eternity. The McKinley tariff, giving free trade and bounties to sugar, came into life in 1890 and died in 1894. The Wilson tariff, with its 40 per cent ad valorem duty on sugar, only lived from 1894 to 1897.

The Dingley tariff, established in 1897, is already showing signs of decay. Only a few days ago we witnessed in this House the spectacle of its autocratic rulers forcing the passage of a bill repealing the war taxes under a rule that prohibited the offering of a single amendment or even a motion to recommit, and all because they feared that under a less strenuous rule the Dingley tariff would be butchered in the house of its friends. The conditions that may exist in Cuba two, four, or ten years from now or that may exist in our country at that time will be taken care of as they arise. We can not evade our duty of to-day through fear of future conditions any more than we can legislate to-day to meet those future conditions.

When we come to consider further the fears of the domestic producer, it will be well to remember that his fear is easily aroused and has become chronic. Away back in 1876, when it was first proposed to admit Hawaiian sugar free of duty, our cane-sugar producers feared that such action by our Government would stamp out their industry and wipe them out of existence, a fear that was as silly as it was unfounded. When the framers of the McKinley tariff proposed to let in free all sugar below a certain grade, and to pay a bounty of 2 cents to our sugar producers, a distinguished gentleman (Governor Warmoth), representing the cane-sugar interests of Louisiana, said this action would destroy the cane-sugar industry.

His fear was that a direct bounty would not be long continued, and that its effect would be to disclose the fact that a protective tariff was but a bounty and the people would protest against that tariff and destroy it. How poorly founded his fear was is shown in the enormous duty that seven years later the Dingley tariff gave him. The fears of the sugar people are close to the surface, and any suggestion of a change in the tariff quickly brings them to view. But as their fears of Hawaiian sugar and their fears of the bounty alike proved groundless, so will their fears of the pending proposition prove equally groundless. They have not only survived their past fears, but they survived the 40 per cent ad valorem duty under the Wilson bill, and yet to-day they seek to excite our interest upon the expressed alarm that any concession to Cuba, even a 10 per cent reduction, would destroy them root and branch.

THE BEET-SUGAR INDUSTRY.

Examination into the status of the beet-sugar industry shows 41 factories in operation in our country and 9 getting ready for next year's crop, according to the report of Mr. Saylor, the special agent of the Department of Agriculture to investigate the beet-sugar industry. He furnishes also a list of 100 additional factories in contemplation, or as reasonable possibilities in the near future, and claims that they represent a proposed investment of capital amounting to $49,000,000.

A further examination shows us that each new factory to be organized always issues a bright and glowing prospectus, showing ample returns assured to investors in the stock. One is privileged to believe, from the capital already invested in beet-sugar manufacturing and from the new capital going into it and the invitation to still more capital to enter, that it has been found to be a profitable industry, and yet if we listen now to the tales of woe and distress as to the condition of that business, when it is proposed to make some concession to Cuba, the marvel is that anyone is engaged in it at all. The fears of the sugar people seem centered in and around and about the tariff, and the higher the tariff the keener and more sensitive the fear at any suggestion of reducing it.

The wonder of the age is that $49,000,000 additional capital is preparing to enter the manufacture of beet sugar if it be true, as claimed by some of those in the business, that any concession to Cuba, even a 10 per cent reduction, would wipe the industry off the face of the earth. I had not been taught to believe that capital was prone to enter upon such an uninviting and uncertain field. The sugar producers also, while telling us that reducing the duty on Cuban sugar will lower the price of sugar in the United States and thereby injure them, tell us at the same time that the price of sugar the world over is made by the price of beet sugar at Hamburg. It seems to me, if this latter statement be true—and I assume that it is—that when the Hamburg market fixes the price it takes into consideration the quantity of Cuban sugar in existence, and whether that sugar comes into the United States at one rate or at another can have but little effect in fixing the price.

THE SUGAR TRUST.

Our sugar producer has not exhausted his arguments when he denies that Cuba needs relief and claims that any proposed relief will ruin him. He goes further and charges that any reduction in the tariff, ostensibly for Cuba, will not benefit Cuba, but will all go to swell the coffers of the American sugar refiners, known as the sugar trust. If this claim be true, then I assume—I trust it is not a violent assumption—that no member of this body would vote for the reduction.

If it be true, then pitiable indeed is our condition and that of the American people. If it be true that the American Congress is so impotent and helpless, is so encompassed and surrounded by the trust, that it has not the power to respond to the generous impulse in humanity's name of the great people whom it represents, then, bad as is the condition of Cuba, infinitely worse is ours. If this be our condition, the quicker we know it the better. If this Congress, acting from high and lofty motives, grants the relief prayed for to Cuba, and that relief is diverted from Cuba into the pockets of the trust and Cuba left to starve, then I believe that deed will mark the beginning of the final overthrow of the trust. There is a limit, beyond which the trust can not go, and that limit will be reached, when, with ghoulish greed, it robs the starving of the sustenance offered by a generous people.

For my part, I am willing to vote a reduction in the tariff to Cuba, in the belief that the benefit will go where it is intended.

I know it is suggested that if the reduction is made on raw sugar—and that is practically the only kind of sugar that Cuba has—that the sugar refiners here composing the trust, and being the only purchasers for it, will get the benefit of the reduction, because they will play the producers of other countries against the Cuban producers and thereby force Cuba, in order to sell at all, to concede the amount of the tariff reduction in the price that she will get.

I have heard it also vaguely suggested that the sugar trust has already bought the present crop of Cuban sugar, and for that reason that any reduction made in the tariff will go entirely to it. It seems to me, however, that in order to believe these things we must charge either gross ignorance or excessive bad faith, not only to the various commercial bodies and leading men in Cuba's official and business life who are daily urging the reduction, but as well to our own trusted officials in the highest stations at home and in Cuba, who urge it and recommend it for and on behalf of the Cubans.

I am not ready to accept the claim of ignorance or the charge of bad faith that is thus implied. In this connection, but a few days ago—on the 1st instant—there appeared in the public press a letter written from Cuba by Bishop Warren A. Candler, of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, one of the ablest men and closest observers and clearest thinkers in or out of his church. He is now in Cuba, and in that letter he said:

> If the well-nigh unanimous judgment of all intelligent observers in the island may be accepted as correct, the situation in Cuba urgently requires immediate relief by the reduction of the duties now imposed upon Cuban products imported into the United States. If there is anybody who dissents from this view, I have not met him since coming here, although I have talked with men of all classes, foreign and native, from Habana to Cienfuegos.

This statement is very far from disclosing that the sugar trust owns all the sugar in Cuba and that the people there have no interest in its price. I beg to quote the bishop further as to only one of the results to follow a failure upon our part to grant relief to Cuba:

> Under the military government over $2,000,000 are annually spent on public education. When Cuba's own government is set up it will be difficult to maintain the schools now in existence, even under the most favorable conditions. But if the present tariff rates are to be maintained by our Government these schools must die outright for lack of funds to sustain them.

As to where the benefit of the reduction will go, I am very much inclined to trust to the faith of those in Cuba who implore us to grant it. If the people in Cuba who have spent their lives making and selling sugar have any knowledge of anything it is a knowledge of tariffs. They have made and sold sugar to us under all our tariffs, and they have been as diligent students of our tariff laws, although from a different standpoint, as have our own producers. They ask for the reduction in the confident belief that they will be benefited by it, and I am willing to be guided by their faith in this regard, until it has been proven to be unfounded.

Mr. HAMILTON. Will the gentleman permit me to interrupt him?

Mr. BRANTLEY. Certainly.

Mr. HAMILTON. As a Democrat, would the gentleman be in favor of removing all duty from raw sugar from Cuba?

Mr. BRANTLEY. I will state to the gentleman that so far as I am concerned, if I had an opportunity to vote a reduction all along the line, so that I could vote to our sugar producer a reduction upon the things he has to buy as well as upon what he has to sell, I would make the reduction much lower than I might make it now.

Mr. HAMILTON. Would the gentleman remove the duty entirely from Cuban raw sugar?

Mr. BRANTLEY. I am not in favor of reducing the duty on raw sugar any further at this time than is necessary to give relief to Cuba.

Mr. HAMILTON. How much would the gentleman estimate would be necessary?

Mr. BRANTLEY. I should say that it ought to be reduced not less than 33⅓ per cent at this time.

Mr. HAMILTON. Are there any other Cuban products from which the gentleman would remove the duty?

Mr. BRANTLEY. I would remove it on all, from 33⅓ to 50 per cent.

Mr. HAMILTON. How about the duty on German sugar?

Mr. BRANTLEY. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will just pause a moment, I was coming to the question of refined sugar; and, if he will pardon me, I will get to that.

Mr. HAMILTON. Then the gentleman does not believe in absolute free trade, but simply to reduce the duty about 33⅓ per cent?

Mr. BRANTLEY. I am not a free trader any more than I am a protectionist. I believe in a duty for revenue; and I believe, Mr. Chairman, that so long as we maintain the high Dingley tariff upon every article that the sugar producer in this country has to buy it would be unjust to him if the duty upon his product is put too low. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. HAMILTON. The gentleman will pardon me the interruption. I simply wanted to get his views.

Mr. BRANTLEY. I was perfectly willing to yield to the gentleman. If he will allow me, I will now state what I was about to say about refined sugar.

It seems to me that the only way by which the refiners could profit by reducing the price of raw sugar purchased from the Cubans, after the reduction in the tariff is made, would be by maintaining the price of refined sugar to their customers. In other words, if simultaneously with the reduction of the price on raw sugar a similar reduction is made in the price of refined sugar, the refiner has not profited at all by the reduction. If, however, the price of the raw sugar is reduced and the price of refined sugar is not, then by whatever the reduction in the price of raw sugar amounts to the refiner has profited.

The question, therefore, as to whether or not the refiners will get the benefit of a reduction to Cuba of the tariff on her raw sugar all hinges upon their ability to maintain the price of refined sugar; and as to whether or not they can maintain the price of refined sugar, I submit, is entirely in the hands of the Congress. It is perfectly clear that the only way for the refiners to maintain the price of refined sugar is through and by the tariff fixed by Congress on refined sugar. Congress, it appears, has always been good to the sugar refiner. In framing the sugar schedules of our tariff laws, care has always been taken to let the raw sugar in and keep the refined sugar out.

The result has been that the American market has been secured to the American refiners to the practical exclusion of the foreign refiners, and this in turn has resulted in the sugar trust. The trust, therefore, is the direct creature of the sugar tariff, and whether this trust shall live or die, or whether it shall rob Cuba of that which we intend to give her, can be determined at any time by the Congress. Should the reduction to Cuba be made, and should it appear that the trust and not Cuba was getting the benefit of it, the remedy is in our hands. We have but to reduce the tariff on refined sugar and open the trust to the competition of the foreign refiners and the deed is done. With such a power in the hands of Congress, why should Congress fear the trust? The beet-sugar producers have not suggested the use of this power in order to help Cuba, and I apprehend that they have not because they happen to be refiners of sugar themselves. The power exists, however, and appears to be ample to prevent any perversion of justice in the matter we are considering.

REDUCTION SHOULD ONLY BE ENOUGH TO RELIEVE CUBA.

I think the reduction of our tariff to Cuba should be made, and from all the evidence accessible to me I do not think we will accomplish what we seek to accomplish by a less reduction than 33⅓ per cent, and I believe that 50 per cent would be better. A reduction of 33⅓ per cent at the present price of sugar would give the Cuban producer net for his sugar about 2.02 cents per pound, barely amounting to, if it really does amount to, the actual cost of production, while a reduction of 50 per cent would cause his sugar to net him about 2.3 cents per pound, giving him probably a small amount of profit. So far as I am concerned, I have no disposition to agitate at this time for any further reduction than is necessary to supply Cuba with the needful funds to enable her to develop her resources and perform her obligations to us and to the world. Beyond this I do not feel any duty at this time compelling me to go.

I have no desire to injure any class of our people, or even to seem to do so, and I believe that before we throw any of our producers into competition, on equal terms, with the producers of Cuba or the world we should first take down the bars of our tariff that operate to increase the price of the material and supplies necessary for them to buy. To-day we have no opportunity to reduce the tariff on anything that our sugar people have to buy, and, therefore, I am content to go no farther in reduction than is necessary to accomplish the stated ends we have in view, and I am firm in the belief that we can go this far with great benefit to all and without injury to anyone, as I purpose hereafter to demonstrate.

NO REASON TO RESTRICT CUBA'S IMMIGRATION.

Nor do I see any reason in making this reduction to require Cuba at this time to adopt our immigration laws. The only reason assigned for requiring her to do so of which I am aware is the fear that in her haste to develop her sugar industry to large proportions she will import an undesirable class of cheap labor, against which the labor of this country ought not to be required to compete. To my mind, so long as Cuba does not send to us enough sugar when added to our own production to supply our own consumption, it is immaterial to us with what kind of labor she makes that which she does send, and when she sends enough sugar that, added to our own production, will more than supply our own consumption, then I apprehend our sugar producers will complain, regardless of the kind of labor with which she produces it; so that at the present time, at least, I fail to see why we should disturb ourselves about her immigration laws.

Indeed, I think that, so far from making new exactions of Cuba, it is time to call a halt in dictating to her the kind of laws that she must enact about anything, and least of all do I think we should dictate to her about her citizenship. The problem of her citizenship is one of great moment to her. Her population is now reduced and she must necessarily devise ways and means to augment it. With a population of only a million and a half, where she can easily maintain a population of ten to twelve millions or more, the time is not opportune to forestall her efforts to rise to the occasion and necessities that confront her by placing a still further limitation upon the power of her government to think and act for the people subject to it.

If Cuba is ever to have the stable and independent government that we planned for her, then at some time something must be left to the wisdom and the patriotism and the statesmanship of the island. In this particular matter the record of Cuba does not show that we have anything to fear, at this time at least, from her citizenship.

Mr. FORDNEY. Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. BRANTLEY. Certainly.

Mr. FORDNEY. The gentleman says he would make a reduction on the imports from Cuba for the relief of Cuba or the people of Cuba.

Mr. BRANTLEY. Yes, sir.

Mr. FORDNEY. Does the gentleman not know from the statements made to the Committee on Ways and Means that labor is scarce in Cuba; that the wages have never been so high before; that there is now a most bountiful crop, and that there is no suffering in existence to-day in Cuba?

Mr. BRANTLEY. I have read all the evidence submitted to the Ways and Means Committee, and if my friend had done the same he would not have asked me that question——

Mr. FORDNEY. I have done the same.

Mr. BRANTLEY (continuing). Because the situation in Cuba that confronts us is not so much what exists to-day, but what must exist when she puts her present crop of 850,000 tons of sugar on the market.

Mr. FORDNEY. Did not the testimony show that the crop will be marketed and out of the way by the 15th of March?

Mr. BRANTLEY. I know that crop is being held back in the hope of getting something for it, so that these people can get some of the money out of it that they have put into it.

Mr. FORDNEY. Does the gentleman know whether that will affect the cane raiser and sugar producer?

Mr. BRANTLEY. I can not tell, Mr. Chairman, how many people it will affect; but I do know, and perhaps know as much about it as my friend does, that these people will be plunged into distress whenever their 850,000 tons of sugar are sold at the enormous loss that they will have to be sold at if sold at the present market price.

Mr. FORDNEY. If the gentleman will permit me, I want to make one correction. I do not pretend to know all about it. I am taking it from the testimony of Mr. Atkins, who claimed to be the owner of a plantation that yielded 12,000 tons, and president of another concern that produced 15,000 tons, and it was stated in his statement that unless the relief was given by the 15th day of March it would not do the producers of the present crop any good.

Mr. BRANTLEY. I will refer my friend to the calendar and let him see whether or not the 15th of March has arrived.

Mr. HAMILTON Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. BRANTLEY. Certainly.

Mr. HAMILTON. By whom is the cane-growing land in Cuba mostly owned, natives or foreigners?

Mr. BRANTLEY. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman wants to discuss that question, I am perfectly willing that he give his understanding of it in his own time.

Mr. HAMILTON. I ask for information.

Mr. BRANTLEY. I have some little knowledge of that, not only from the testimony, but from personal observation on the island, and among other things I know that there are a great many small planters on the islands who raise cane and send their cane to those people who own the mills. I can not give the number. I can not even give an approximate estimate.

Mr. HAMILTON. Can the gentleman give the proportion of acreage owned by native Cubans as compared with foreigners?

Mr. BRANTLEY. I can not give those figures. The Secretary of War was asked some little time ago, by a resolution of this House, to give them, and if he has furnished them I have not seen them.

Mr. HAMILTON. Is it not a fact that five-eighths of the sugar produced is on land owned by American planters, as shown by the testimony?

Mr. BRANTLEY. Not that I know of, sir.

Mr. HAMILTON. The gentleman will pardon the interruption.

Mr. BRANTLEY. I have no objection to the interruption.

Mr. Chairman, I was discussing the question of immigration. The report on her census for 1899, prepared by our War Department, says:

> The native whites constituted 57.8 per cent or considerably more than one-half of the population of Cuba. The foreign whites constituted but 9 per cent; the colored, including the negro and mixed element, amounted only to 32 per cent, or less than one-third, while the proportion of Chinese was trifling, being less than 1 per cent.

The report also says:

> While the statistics of Cuba show a larger proportion of colored than white criminals, the colored population is in some respects superior to the colored population of the Southern States, being more self-reliant, temperate, frugal, and intelligent, and since the abolition of slavery showing a strong desire to own their homes, to educate their children, and to improve their condition.

The history of Cuba also shows that she has in the past experimented with Chinese labor, and presumably without profit, as the quotation made above shows that the Chinese have practically disappeared from the island.

In the face, then, of this record and of existing conditions I see no reason now, even if we were charged with a duty in the premises, to fear that Cuba will fill up with an undesirable citizenship, and nothing to justify us in adding a new limitation to her sovereignty or in expressing a new distrust of the ability and patriotism of her statesmen to legislate wisely for her people.

AMERICANS IN CUBA.

I also fail to see any argument against making the reduction asked for because certain American citizens may have become interested in making sugar in Cuba. The fact of their citizenship here is scarcely a reason for their own Government to refuse to do justice to them, and we must realize that every dollar invested by them in Cuba helps to develop the island. Cuba needs immigrants, but more than immigrants she needs capital, and, in my judgment, we have not only no moral right to interpose a bar to capital going there, but we should take down a few of the bars that already exist, and to that extent help on the day that will see Cuba a prosperous country, regulated and controlled by its own "stable and independent" government.

REBATES.

The most effective way to remove some of the bars and to bring the now needed relief, and, in my judgment, the only way, is by a reduction in our duties. No system of rebates that has so far been suggested can accomplish the desired end. I do not desire to enter upon any discussion of this phase of the matter further than to suggest that our Constitution, in Article I, section 8, limits the power of Congress to lay taxes, duties, and excises to three specific objects—to pay the debts and provide for the common defense and general welfare of the United States, and to call attention to my belief that laying a duty on Cuban sugar, collecting it, and then donating any part of the amount so collected either to the Cuban government or to the Cuban planters would not be the laying of a duty either to pay the debts or to provide for the common defense or for the general welfare of the United States, however much it might be for the welfare of Cuba.

I want to suggest also that no equitable plan could possibly be devised by us by which the money we might so donate would be fairly distributed among the Cuban planters, and, further, that any system of rebates is lacking in the elements of mutual concession that constitute true reciprocity.

RECIPROCAL DUTIES BY CUBA.

The one condition that I think we should add to our reduction of the tariff is the condition requiring a reciprocal reduction by Cuba in her tariff rates to us, so that in exchange for our furnishing a market to her she shall open her market to us. This condition she is not only willing to accede to, but it is her own proposition, and I desire now to speak briefly of this condition.

So far my discussion has been from the standpoint of our duty as a nation, from the standpoint of Cuba, and from the standpoint of our own sugar producers. I have endeavored to demonstrate that from the standpoint of duty—moral duty—our course is plain, and that we ought to make the concession. I have endeavored to demonstrate that such a concession would not for the present, at least, injure our sugar producers. The question, however, is susceptible of a much broader treatment than I have as yet given it. I have so far only considered the rights of our sugar producers and of the Cubans. I have ignored all of our other producers and all of our consumers.

When we consider that less than 1 per cent of the people of the United States are interested in the cultivation of sugar—probably considerably less than one-half of 1 per cent are interested—we not only have the right but it is our duty to inquire into the rights of the remaining more than 99 per cent of our people in any proposition affecting the commercial relations of the United States with a foreign country. When we consider, too, that our entire population are sugar consumers, have not the consumers some rights, even as to sugar, as against the less than 1 per cent of producers? The question grows more interesting when we find that the per capita consumption of sugar in the United States last year was 68.4 pounds, while in Germany it was only 33.9 pounds, in France 36.9 pounds, in Holland 32.4 pounds, and in Russia only 14 pounds.

Mr. HAMILTON. Will the gentleman allow me an interruption?

Mr. BRANTLEY. Certainly.

Mr. HAMILTON. If the gentleman had to decide in a commercial matter affecting his own State of Georgia and affecting Cuba, in favor of which would he decide?

Mr. BRANTLEY. In favor of Georgia. But I will say to the gentleman I am not confronted by any such condition; neither is my friend from Michigan in his own State.

Mr. HAMILTON. I would not interrupt the gentleman except that his position——

Mr. BRANTLEY. I do not object to the interruption. Of course, it is only my opinion that it does not affect the gentleman's State.

Mr. HAMILTON. I am much interested in the gentleman's statement.

Mr. BRANTLEY. We are the greatest sugar consumers in the world and only produce about one-third of what we consume, including that which comes to us from our island possessions, while Germany produces three times as much as she consumes and exports two-thirds of it, and France, Russia, Austria, Belgium, and other countries are all exporters of sugar. This statement, I think, clearly reveals a substantial interest on the part of our sugar consumers in this question.

THE ADVANTAGES OF RECIPROCITY.

Now, Cuba has not come to us seeking alms, she has not come as a supplicant at our door begging bread, she has not come beseeching us to perform a duty to her for which she is to give nothing in return. Upon the contrary, she comes with plentiful acknowledgment of all that she owes us, and while she asks us for a market for her products, she proffers to give us dollar for dollar for all that this market means to her. It is not for alms, but for reciprocity that she pleads. She asks a concession in our tariff to her, and she will give a concession in her tariff to us.

The reciprocity she wants has been a cardinal principle in the Democratic faith from the day of Jefferson, and it was for reciprocity that our late lamented President plead in his last public address. A reciprocity that has its beginning and its ending in the action of the President and the Senate, without reference to the House, is not, in my judgment, in consonance with the true functions of the House or in keeping with the true theory of a representative government; but a reciprocity in which the Congress and the President concur should be the aim of all who seek enlarged markets, increased trade, and the growth and extension of our commerce with the world.

But, returning to reciprocity with Cuba, an extended market for all our producers, an enlarged trade for all our country, is a question of far greater importance than the market and the trade of one small class of our citizens. Let us see, then, what Cuba has to offer us and what she does offer us in the way of trade in exchange for the concessions that she asks. Her total imports for the year ending June 30, 1901, were $65,050,141, and of this the United States furnished $28,078,702, leaving approximately $37,000,000 imported by Cuba from other countries.

All this, or the major part of it, she proposes giving us by a discriminating tariff in our favor, in exchange for a discriminating tariff by us in her favor; and if our own sugar producers are even partially correct as to the strides that Cuban commerce will make under an increased price for its largest commodity, and if the Cubans have not many, many times overstated what their commerce can do under more favorable conditions, then these figures of $37,000,000 of increased commerce to come to us represent but a part of the commerce that is to come in the future.

Mr. FORDNEY. I would like to ask the gentleman a question. His idea is that reciprocity is to find a market for some American products in Cuba. Does he know of an industry in the United States that is suffering for a better trade in Cuba?

Mr. BRANTLEY. If my friend will be patient, I am going to discuss that question.

Mr. FORDNEY. Very well; after answering that, will the gentleman state if it is not true that Cuba is suffering to get into our market one of her products that would come in direct competition with one of our products?

Mr. BRANTLEY. I have endeavored to show that it will not come into injurious competition with our products.

Mr. HAMILTON. I want to ask the gentleman if he is in favor of the Republican policy of reciprocity?

Mr. BRANTLEY. I am in favor of the reciprocity that Thomas Jefferson declared for, which has been the cardinal creed of the Democratic party ever since I belonged to it, which has been all my life.

Mr. HAMILTON. What is it?

Mr. BRANTLEY. It is reciprocity. [Laughter.] I am not in favor of the kind of reciprocity that the Republican party has been practicing by building a high tariff wall around our country.

Mr. HAMILTON. Is the gentleman in favor of the James G. Blaine policy of reciprocity?

Mr. BRANTLEY. I am in favor of that kind that gives us an extended market for our products.

Mr. HAMILTON. Well, that is good. [Laughter.]

Mr. WEEKS. If the gentleman from Georgia will yield to me, I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. BRANTLEY. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. WEEKS. Does the gentleman think that an exchange of the products of sugar manufactured in our own country with the sugar manufactured in Cuba, the same product, comes within the definition of reciprocity? Do you think that is reciprocity?

Mr. BRANTLEY. I will let my friend wrestle with that problem himself. I am not proposing to swap sugar with Cuba. [Laughter.]

Mr. WEEKS. What product are you proposing to swap?

Mr. BRANTLEY. If the gentleman will be patient, I am going to state the products, and I hope I will satisfy my friend before I get through.

Mr. HAMILTON. I dislike to interrupt the gentleman again, but I would like to ask him if he has considered what effect the reduction of duty on Cuban raw sugar will have upon the Louisiana sugar growers, and if he will discuss that somewhat in this connection?

Mr. BRANTLEY. I will state that I have already discussed the question as to the effect of a 33⅓ per cent and a 50 per cent reduction of our duty, and stated in my opinion that such reductions can not affect the sugar producers of Louisiana or the beet-sugar producers, because with us the beet-sugar and the cane-sugar producers are protected by duties and countervailing duties against the rest of the world, and with protection against Cuba amounting to almost a cent a pound, which they would have under a 50 per cent reduction, and with the demand for sugar in this country unsatisfied by one-third when all the Cuban sugar comes in, such a reduction could not affect the Louisiana sugar producer or the beet-sugar producer.

Mr. HAMILTON. Will my friend permit me to read in this connection a telegram from C. A. Farwell, president of the American Cane Growers' Association of the United States?

Mr. BRANTLEY. I would prefer that the gentleman should read that in his own time.

Mr. HAMILTON. Certainly; but it describes——

Mr. BRANTLEY. I am aware that it satisfies my friend that his position is correct; and with that acknowledgment on my part I think he should be satisfied.

Mr. HAMILTON. Certainly; I wish to be entirely courteous.

Mr. BRANTLEY. Cuba last year bought over $6,000,000 worth of cotton goods, of which we supplied less than $500,000; nearly $700,000 worth of woolen goods, of which we supplied less than $22,000; over $2,000,000 worth of vegetables and vegetable fibers, of which we supplied but $171,000; over $2,700,000 worth of wines, of which we supplied but $329,000; nearly $2,598,000 of oils, etc., of which we supplied but $713,000; $1,053,000 worth of chemicals, drugs, etc., of which we supplied but $422,000; $8,000,000 worth of animals and animal products, of which we supplied but $1,994,000; $1,638,000 of manufactures of leather, of which we supplied but $405,000; $3,335,000 worth of rice, of which we supplied but $3,000.

Mr. ROBERTSON of Louisiana. Will the gentleman yield a moment?

Mr. BRANTLEY. Always, to my friend.

Mr. ROBERTSON of Louisiana. I would state to the gentleman that the character of rice imported into Cuba comes in so cheaply that it is impossible for us ever to supply Cuba with rice.

Mr. BRANTLEY. I thank my friend for the statement, although I am not prepared now to accept the accuracy of his information. We sold to Cuba last year goods to a greater amount than we bought sugar from her——

Mr. BROUSSARD. If the Cuban people are under this great obligation to the American people, why have they not bought these goods from American producers instead of getting them from some other countries?

Mr. BRANTLEY. Well, Mr. Chairman, I am a little surprised that my friend particularly should ask the question as to why any country has not sometimes bought from us, when we have had the great high Dingley tariff wall between them and us.

Mr. BROUSSARD. Did the tariff wall prevent their purchasing in this country the goods they wanted?

Mr. BRANTLEY. They were probably able to buy the goods cheaper elsewhere.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Let me make this suggestion to my friend from Louisiana [Mr. BROUSSARD]. When the people of any country ship a cargo out, it is desirable that they should buy from the country to which the ship goes rather than bring home an empty vessel. After carrying out a cargo it is cheaper for the vessel to come back loaded than to come back empty.

Mr. BROUSSARD. The gentleman from Georgia is arguing that there is no market for their sugar in Europe and yet they buy the majority of their goods from the European markets. The argument of the gentleman from Alabama does not hold. Now, I ask the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BRANTLEY] this question: If, as he is arguing here to-day, the Cuban people are under an everlasting obligation to the American people, and the tariff laws of this country do not affect their purchases for their own consumption, why have they not given the preference to the American producer instead of purchasing the goods in other markets, and how will the reduction of the tariff on sugar give the people of this country the market among those people, unless they propose to buy, with or without the reduction, from the American producer?

Mr. BRANTLEY. My friend must know that so far as trade is concerned it is not a matter of sentiment, but a matter of dollars and cents. It is a question of making the best trade that can be made. Commerce is but an interchange of products; and I presume that our people—and in fact our tariff laws show it—have not made the effort to take the trade of the Cuban people. I presume the Cubans have gone where they were accustomed to go when they belonged to Spain because the inducement was not given them to come here. But it is proposed now to gain control of their markets, not alone by giving them a concession upon their sugar and other products, but by their giving us a concession by which they will discriminate in their tariff in our favor against the balance of the world, so that trade would then come to us as a matter of business and not as a matter of sentiment.

Mr. FORDNEY. Will the gentleman kindly state on which side is the balance of trade since the Spanish war as between Cuba and the United States, and how much. Will he state when at any time Spain took 5 per cent of Cuba's sugar, and when at any time the United States took less than 75 per cent of Cuba's sugar.

Mr. BRANTLEY. I have discussed all that question as to why Cuban sugar comes here and has always come here—the most of it. I do not care to go back and repeat that statement. I am sorry I have not the figures with me as to the trade last year; but I have just ceased making the statement that we sold to Cuba last year goods to a greater amount than we bought sugar from her.

Mr. FORDNEY. If you will permit me, I will give them to you. For the past three years the balance of trade between the United States and Cuba is more than $32,000,000 against the United States.

Mr. BRANTLEY. Well, I do not know whether that is correct or not. I presume my friend has looked into the matter.

Mr. FORDNEY. They are the official figures.

Mr. BRANTLEY. They but emphasize the point I am discussing now.

We sold to Cuba last year goods to a greater amount than we bought sugar from her, and now it is proposed by her to more than double her purchases from us if we will but enable her to sell her sugar at a price that will give her the means with which to buy. Surely this is a proposal in which no alms are asked. It is the tender of more than is asked for. It is a business proposition and should be treated as such. Our country is to-day slaughtering the brown man and the white man, and expending millions upon millions of dollars in the far-off Philippine Islands, seeking, among other things, to find there and elsewhere in the Orient a market for our surplus products. Here is a proposition to open up a market for $37,000,000 of this surplus without the sacrifice of a single life, and yet we hesitate and delay about accepting it.

Our people to-day are paying $85,000,000 per year, in our sugar-tariff taxes, as a bounty, in the interest of our sugar producers, and yet when it is suggested to reduce this enormous bounty, not more than $10,000,000, by a 50 per cent concession to Cuba, in order that our other producers might find a market for $37,000,000 of their products and that our Government might perform a national duty, objection is made by our sugar producers.

In the section of the country from which I come, and I can speak more authoritatively for that than for any other, the stimulus that would come from opening the Cuban market to it would be felt in every branch of trade and industry. The velvet bean and cassava, recently introduced there, would multiply many times over, and stock raising would be a large and profitable industry; our immense rice fields would take on new life, and a languishing industry would thrive; our cotton planters and cotton factories would feel the benefit of a new market, and so it would be in all the other lines of our industry. And what is true of one section would be true of other sections of our country; and, whether the benefit to some of them would be large or small, it would be something, and, whatever it would be, they are entitled to it at our hands.

OBJECTION TO DONATING MONEY TO CUBA.

Gentlemen representing our sugar producers say, "Don't help the Cubans at our expense." They say, "If you must do something for them, do it as a nation to a nation. Vote some money to the Cuban Government, and let all our people help pay it." This is a narrow and restricted view to take of this important matter. It does not begin to comprehend the scope or breadth of purpose of what is being proposed to be done.

A sum of money voted to the Cubans would be but a donation of alms, and that they do not ask. And it would be, moreover, of the briefest temporary relief. The Cubans ask not money, but the opportunity, out of their own soil, with their own labor, and under their own bright sunshine, to make money. It is not charity they want, but an opportunity to work. Should we give them money and keep our markets closed to them, and should the present low price of sugar continue, they would soon be in a worse condition than they were before the money was given. Should we pursue such a course we not only would not help the Cubans but would impose a never-ending and ever-increasing burden upon ourselves. Should we pursue such a course we would place Cuba where she could not maintain the "stable" government that we have enjoined upon her, and would, I fear, bring about the same "intolerable" conditions in the island that forced our intervention in 1898.

Again, those who advocate a donation of money to Cuba lose sight of the reciprocal arrangement proposed and of the advantages to come to us. The question involved is but half stated when only help to Cuba is mentioned. Help to all our producers and all our consumers is involved. While helping Cuba, it is our intention, and also the intention of Cuba, that we shall at the same time help ourselves.

THE PROTECTION TO US FROM PESTILENCE.

There is another consideration about this matter and a most important one that is lost sight of by those proposing a money donation. In the Platt amendment that we forced Cuba to adopt, the fifth provision thereof is:

That the government of Cuba will execute and, as far as necessary, extend the plans already devised, or other plans to be mutually agreed upon, for the sanitation of the cities of the island, to the end that a recurrence of epidemic and infectious diseases may be prevented, thereby assuring protection to the people and commerce of Cuba, as well as to the commerce of the Southern ports of the United States and the people residing therein.

This provision, in its letter and spirit, Cuba must live up to. We must and will demand of her that she do it; but before we can demand it we must see to it that she is provided with a government of sufficient means to do it. Laying aside every other condition that we have exacted from her and looking solely to this one, we can not afford in the beginning of her government to paralyze her chief industry and thus strip her of the resources necessary to enable her to comply with this condition.

It means too much to the people it was designed to protect, namely: The people of the Southern ports of the United States. A successful compliance with its conditions by Cuba will be worth to us many times over all that our war to free her people cost. No man familiar with the destruction to life and commerce wrought by yellow fever in some of the Southern States can doubt this statement. The present sanitary condition of Habana is the best in her history, and it must at all hazards be maintained. The work of our medical officers there has been well-nigh phenomenal, and too much praise can not be bestowed upon them for what they have done.

In their work we people of the South see the dawning of the day when the gaunt specter of yellow fever will no more arise to alarm and destroy us, and we wish for that work an ever-increasing and successful progress. Realizing, as I do, the vast importance of this work to the South, I shall cast my vote to give Cuba the means to live up to what she has undertaken in this regard, and if I err in this, I know that I will err on the side of the safety and interest of my people. I feel that I could commit no greater act of recreancy to the trust committed to me by my constituents than to aid by my vote in the destruction of the power of Cuba to protect the lives and commerce of the South from the frightful pestilence of yellow fever. My vote can not be cast that way.

BUT SCANTY JUSTICE TO CUBA.

In my judgment this consideration alone justifies us in yielding to Cuba's appeal. The advantages to us in this one regard will more than compensate us for all that the reduction costs. When we add to it the increased trade to come to our people it will appear that the great preponderance of the benefits to flow from the reduction will come to us. A retrospective view of our tariff laws shows that our average duties against all countries on dutiable articles have been as follows:

	Per cent.
Under the tariff-commission law in 1883	42¼
Under the McKinley law in 1891	46
Under the Wilson law in 1895	41¼
Under the Dingley law in 1899	52¼

An examination of the Dingley law to-day shows that, at the present market prices, it imposes a duty against Cuba amounting to from 100 to 115 per cent. That is to say, as against the world our duties average about 50 per cent, but as against Cuba, the country more closely bound to us than any other, the country to which we have promised the most and from which we have demanded the most, we exact a duty of 100 per cent. Years before the Hawaiian Islands were annexed, and when we owed them nothing, and when they had practically nothing to give us in exchange, we gave them absolute free trade with us. In the face of this precedent, why should we hesitate to make a slight concession to Cuba, to whom we owe a duty, and who offers us a substantial trade in return for the concession?

Surely it is but scanty justice to Cuba, viewing the matter from whatever standpoint we may, to put her in her trade relations with us somewhat nearer on an equality with the other countries of the world than she now is, and that is all that a reduction of the duty to her will do.

We can count ourselves fortunate, too, that we can do this justice, confer the great benefit that goes with it, not only to Cuba, but to ourselves, and at the same time not injure any fractional part of our people. But even should some little injury come to some, can we not afford—nay, ought we not—to reduce a little the protection now given to one bounty-fed class, if thereby we can benefit all classes here and in Cuba and be assured the protection from yellow fever of the lives and commerce of all our South Atlantic and Gulf coast cities?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Will the gentleman yield a moment for a question?

Mr. BRANTLEY. I will.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Was not the trade concession given to the Hawaiian Islands on account of the fact that they gave us the right to Pearl Harbor in the Hawaiian Islands? Was not that the basis of the agreement that was made?

Mr. BRANTLEY. Well, Mr. Chairman, I do not recall for the moment all that took place at that time, but undoubtedly the record shows. My statement here, however, is strictly accurate, that we gave her free trade when we owed her nothing and when she had no trade to give us in exchange.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I will state that Pearl Harbor was considered as the great place for a naval station in the Pacific.

Mr. BRANTLEY. We are taking all the harbors and ports that Cuba has now.

Mr. HAMILTON. Oh, no.

Mr. BRANTLEY. We are taking all we want; there is no limit.

Mr. HAMILTON. What does the gentleman mean by that?

Mr. BRANTLEY. I mean that under the Platt amendment we are entitled to such coaling stations and ports as we select and determine upon by agreement and treaty.

Mr. HAMILTON. Yes; by treaty—by treaty. We do not take all we want, do we?

Mr. BRANTLEY. But we would require the treaty, if my friend will allow me, from Cuba in the same way that we required the Platt amendment to be put into her constitution. She had no voice in the matter.

Mr. HAMILTON. But it must be ratified by treaty.

Mr. BRANTLEY. Yes.

Mr. HAMILTON. Yes.

Mr. BRANTLEY. And our Platt amendment had to be put into her constitution, not because she wanted it, but she put it there because she could not help it.

Mr. HAMILTON. As American citizens, permit me to suggest, we ought to be fair to ourselves. Will the gentleman not concede that we have done all that equity and good conscience could require of us hitherto for Cuba; that we have done as much as any nation has done hitherto for any other nation? Will the gentleman not concede that?

Mr. BRANTLEY. If the gentleman has followed the trend of my remarks——

Mr. HAMILTON. Let us be fair to ourselves as American citizens.

Mr. BRANTLEY. I have stated what we have done, and I have stated the value that Cuba was to us after what we have done. We have done a great work there, but I maintain that we have still a further duty to perform, and I have been endeavoring to demonstrate that. Now, so far as my friend suggests, as to Pearl Harbor, in the Hawaiian Islands——

Mr. MADDOX. Will the gentleman permit me to interrupt with a question?

Mr. BRANTLEY. In a moment, when I have answered the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. SHAFROTH]. We purpose to get from Cuba, not only all the advantages in the way of harbors that we got from the Hawaiian Islands, but, in addition, we purpose getting a trade that we did not get from the Hawaiian Islands.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Did we not, in consideration of these concessions that we expect to get from Cuba, give her millions of dollars with which to gain her freedom, and is not that the compensation as against us? Whereas the contract between the United States and the Hawaiian Islands as to Pearl Harbor was directly to give free sugar to the Hawaiian Islands.

Mr. BRANTLEY. I think my friend knows that we gave millions, not to, but for Cuba, and that the United States has a substantial interest in the welfare of Cuba at all times, and we have done what we thought was our duty to do, not only to Cuba, but to ourselves; but we still have a duty to perform.

Does my colleague from Georgia [Mr. MADDOX] wish to ask a question?

Mr. MADDOX. Is it not true that we somewhat trespassed our original declaration of war when we forced on Cuba this Platt amendment? Did we not agree not to do that very thing?

Mr. BRANTLEY. I will state to my friend that I took that view of it and voted against the Platt amendment, but in my argument to-day I have not discussed that question at all. I have simply discussed the Platt amendment as being an existing fact and as to what it imposed upon and required of Cuba. Now, I hope, Mr. Chairman, in view of the fact that I have already consumed so much time, that I may be allowed to conclude.

Mr. FORDNEY. Will the gentleman permit one question?

Mr. BRANTLEY. If my friend insists upon it, I will.

Mr. FORDNEY. The gentleman will remember that France came to our relief and helped us gain our independence from England. Did we go to her and ask her to insure business prosperity in our country after that?

Mr. BRANTLEY. Well, Mr. Chairman, my friend may not be able to appreciate the difference between the United States and Cuba, but I am——

Mr. FORDNEY. I think I do.

Mr. BRANTLEY. I think a knowledge of the difference answers the gentleman's question.

THE FUTURE OF SUGAR PRODUCTION IN THE UNITED STATES.

It has been suggested and urged that if Congress will but keep up the present high tariff on sugar for a few years longer our sugar development will be so great that we can produce all the sugar that we can consume. Upon what this faith is builded I do not know. If we look to the statistics, we see that Louisiana and other Southern States in the year 1853–54 produced more sugar than they did last year, and yet we find a tariff on sugar since 1792. All the friends of sugar do not agree as to the development of the production of sugar by means of a tariff. In 1890 one of the speakers in this House, Mr. O'Donnell, in urging the sugar-bounty feature of the McKinley bill, said:

> We have essayed for a century to develop our sugar industry in the Southern States. The people reluctantly conclude that sugar is no longer entitled to protection by the system of import duties. The reason is apparent. After all these decades of attempted stimulation, at such a cost, the cane does not give us one-ninth of the needed supply. Under such circumstances the longer continuance of sugar duties is indefensible.

How much more defensible is it to-day, nearly twelve years later, when our cane and beet-sugar production combined, aside from that produced in our island possessions, does not furnish one-fifth of what we consume?

A bounty system of 2 cents per pound was resorted to in the McKinley law for the avowed purpose of stimulating the growth of our beet-sugar production, and yet with four years of bounties and five years of high protection under the Dingley law our output of beet sugar it is hoped this year will reach the magnificent proportions of 150,000 tons! At this rate of increase in the production of beet sugar, with no increase of cane sugar in forty years, who can figure when our combined beet and cane sugar production will reach the 2,300,000 tons that we now consume?

I wish that we could produce all the sugar that we consume, but we can not do it now, we never have done it, and there is no prospect that we can do it in either the early or the remote future, and we should deal with the situation as it actually exists.

If it be important, as has been claimed, that we should provide ourselves with our own sugar, as against the day of war, when we might be cut off from our supply, then is it not the part of wisdom, without detracting from our present efforts to make sugar at home, for us to lay hold of Cuba, taking her into our trade, binding her still closer to us, cementing the union of law with the cement of mutual interest, and thus insure ourselves, now and always, against the machinations and devices of war and trade, a bounteous supply of the sugar we need?

Gentlemen tell us, if Cuba can not make sugar against our tariff, let her make rice, let her raise fruit, let her raise other things, while we make sugar; and yet these same gentlemen tell us that the God of nature has smiled so benignantly on Cuba that all the labor necessary to grow her cane is to stick a hole in the ground, put in a joint of cane, and the work is done, and that from that simple process of labor crops are gathered without more planting from five to twenty years.

The proposition is to take the juicy cane from the sun-kissed isle of Cuba, from the home builded and fashioned for it by the Great Architect of the Universe, from the home so richly and lavishly provided with its every need, and transport it to a less-favored land, to a far inferior home, where the aid of science and of law must be invoked to protect its existence and to do the work of nature and where the difference is all the difference between the real and the artificial. Such a proposition, it seems to me, insults nature, outrages good judgment, and lays the foundation for a wealth of useless extravagance. If American sugar we must have, it would be cheaper for us to make Cuba a part of America.

ONE THING TO REMEMBER.

There is one thing, if we will but remember it, that frees this question of all difficulties: Cuba is not seeking to compete with our sugar. She asks not to be put on an equality with it. She will be glad to come here, paying 50 per cent of our duty. She is willing thus to be discriminated against in favor of our sugar to the amount of nearly 1 cent per pound. All she can bring will not supply our needs. Surely, then, our producers, with our market free to them, with our demand greater than they and Cuba combined can supply, and with a discriminating duty in their favor against Cuba of nearly 1 cent per pound, can not be hurt by making the reduction asked for to Cuba.

What Cuba asks and what she needs is protection, not against our producers, but against the producers of the bounty-fed countries of Europe. She comes to our Government as her one friend and ally, as one claiming and having a protective power over her, and asks that she be admitted just a little way within the circle of the protection that we have set up against the bounties of Europe, and in exchange for this partial protection, which in itself can not harm us, she tenders value for value, and more.

CUBAN CIGARS AND TOBACCO.

I have not sought in this discussion to consider the question of a reduction of our tariff on any of Cuba's products except on her sugar, for I regard the lowering of the duty on her sugar as of paramount importance. So far as her tobacco and other products are concerned, the same principles that I have endeavored to apply to sugar apply to them, though perhaps with far less urgency. We now buy for consumption or for export 90 to 95 per cent of Cuba's total export of cigars, and these constitute only about three-fourths of 1 per cent of American cigar consumption, and as her leaf tobacco is distinctly adapted for use as cigars, and really has no competitor in our country, it offers no competition with our plug-tobacco people and the competition with our cigar people is too small to be seriously considered.

While the world's market for cigars, tobacco, and other Cuban products is not in the overcrowded condition that the world's sugar market is, and therefore Cuba's need for our market for these things is not so great as is her need for our sugar market, the need nevertheless exists, and supplying it to her means much to her while promising no considerable, if any, detriment to any of our people. Cuba's great crops are sugar and tobacco, and whatever her capability for other productions may be remains yet to be determined. She grows other things that some of our people grow, but with our producers protected by a duty of 50 per cent of that now existing there is nothing that Cuba has that promises or suggests any injurious competition with them, and nothing that should delay or prevent the discharge of our duty to her and to ourselves in this important matter.

It seems to me that our duty is plain and that every reason exists for us to give Cuba our every market, asking hers in return for all that we have.

CUBA AS A PART OF THE UNITED STATES.

I trust there is no one who would, by a denial of our market to Cuba, hope to bring about such distress and destitution among her people that they would, against their pride and wishes, be forced to ask us, in pity's name, to make them a part of the American Republic. Such an appeal from Cuba, if granted, could not bring about a union that would carry with it any pride, respect, or love for the American name. It would be a union in name, but not in heart, for there would be no loyalty to our starry flag or to our blood-bought institutions, or to any of the priceless principles that we revere.

Such a union, too, coming at this time, would bring upon our own sugar people the complete realization of whatever it is that they fear or affect to fear now from even a slight concession to Cuban sugar. The time is not yet opportune to take Cuba into our Republic, but some day, in the fullness of God's appointed time, she will be a part of our system. The question of incorporating her into our Union is not a new one. It is almost as old as the Republic itself. It was discussed as far back as 1825, when John Quincy Adams was President. During the Administration of President Polk Spain was offered $100,000,000 to relinquish to the United States her sovereignty to Cuba. President Pierce endeavored to bring about a similar transfer. President Buchanan recommended it, and at least two national Democratic conventions have declared for it.

We have already seized upon the advantages of her strategical position, and from her ports and her magnificent harbors we already propose to control the entrance to the Gulf and the approaches to our great isthmian canal when we build it. The relations we have already established with her are close, and destiny says they must be closer still, for her interest and ours will demand it.

When the time comes, however, to bring to full completion our union with her, let us hope that it will be accomplished through the free and voluntary act of both her people and ours. Let our treatment of her be such that it can be accomplished in that way, when accomplished it must be. Let us hope that the day is passed forever when the American people will again attempt by force and power to subdue and "assimilate" an alien race.

The president-elect of the Cuban republic, Mr. Palma, has said of our country, in speaking for the Cubans:

The only country that we care for, the only country that can befriend us, the only country that we look to for a market.

The sentiment he expresses, the faith he feels, and the hope he utters merit and should receive a quick and sympathetic response at our hands. It is not much that Cuba asks, but what she asks means everything to her. Let us befriend her now, in the hour of her economic need, and by this deed add tenfold and more to the blessings that we have already given her and earn for ourselves now and always the gratitude, love, and admiration of our friends, the Cubans.

CUBA'S FUTURE.

If we but perform the duty of to-day—the duty to conscience and to Cuba, the duty to our own people—the man does not live who can foresee or foretell the possible results that from this small beginning may eventually come. It is more than probable that when the dream of "Cuba libre" is transformed into a reality; when groans and blood and suffering are supplanted by smiles and blossoms and ease; when poverty gives way to wealth; when anarchy is driven from every corner, and law and order sit in supreme command; when oppression and undue exactions are finally and completely succeeded by freedom and liberty and justice, that there will come as if by magic a new and a regenerated Cuba.

As the new Cuba unfolds to the world, its beauty and its richness will dazzle the most high. Favored by sun and soil, blessed by wind and climate, endowed with all the gifts that a bountiful and generous nature can bestow, Cuba needs but the revivifying touch of just laws and stable government to bloom and thrive and grow as no country has ever done before. No man can measure her possibilities and none foresee the heights to which she may climb. For four hundred years she has been the prey of Spanish plunderers and the victim of cruelty, treachery, and crime. Her hills and valleys are rich in the bones of her martyed sons who have died to throw off the hated yoke.

Amid the ravages of war and pestilence and oppression her riches have been obscured and her beauties trampled under foot, but they have not been destroyed. They but await the summons to come forth, increased, enhanced, and glorified by the baptism of blood and tears through which they have passed. Four hundred years of darkness, of despair, of hopeless struggle, and then freedom! Who can paint the picture?

From glorious America came the freedom that to-day illumines the blood-stained island and throws into the background the long, dark night, and from the same glorious America must come the help by which the means can be had to use and enjoy the priceless freedom she gave. Our duty leads us on until we have fulfilled our high mission—until the means have been given to enable Cuba, "the gem of the Antilles," to come into her inheritance and to stand forth in the plenitude of her long-denied glory and power.

When we have done this we must ever exult and be glad at the excellence of our handiwork, for if she be a part of us, she will be a rich and incomparable part, and if she be but a sister republic, nestling close beside us, we will be proud to call her our friend and ally. [Loud applause.]

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman, on the 13th of January the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures reported, by unanimous vote of the Republican members of that committee, a bill which now stands at the head of the Union Calendar. No action has been taken upon it thus far; but while Congress is hesitating a waiting country is beginning to speak, and I hold in my hand the report of the largest commercial body in the world, signed by a committee, the names of the members of which will command respect in any deliberative body or in any council of any nation in the world. The first name is that of John Harsen Rhoades, the president of the Associated Savings Banks of the State of New York, representing more than a billion of dollars of deposits, and more than 2,000,000 depositors. The second name is that of Henry W. Cannon, president of the Second National Bank. The third is that of Edward H. Perkins, jr., president of the Importers and Traders' National Bank.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. SULZER. A parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York.

Mr. SULZER. I would like to inquire as to who has the floor, the gentleman from Connecticut or the gentleman from Ohio?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Connecticut has the floor. The committee will please be in order. Conversation will be suspended. Members of the House will please be seated. Those desiring to converse will retire to the rear. The committee is now in order. The gentleman from Connecticut. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. HILL. The fourth name is one which will be promptly recognized in this House, August Belmont, and the fifth, George G. Williams, president of the Chemical National Bank. I desire to have read as a part of my remarks the report upon this measure.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. The gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HILL] played a very active and a very successful part yesterday in fighting for the farmers of the country. Now, up to this time the gentleman has not given us the name of any farmer who is in favor of this coinage bill, nor has he in his great speech heretofore.

Mr. HILL. It was farmers' day yesterday.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Will you please give me the names of some farmers who favor this bill?

Mr. HILL. Oh, I have not time for such questions. I will hand the report to the Clerk, and ask that it be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Report of the committee on finance and currency of the Chamber of Commerce of the State of New York on the following measure pending in Congress: A bill to maintain the legal-tender silver dollar at parity with gold, and to increase the subsidiary silver coinage. Adopted by the chamber March 6, 1902.

REPORT.

To the Chamber of Commerce:

At the last meeting of the chamber there was referred to the committee on finance and currency the following bill for their consideration and report:

A bill reported from the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures in the House, called "A bill to maintain the legal-tender silver dollar at parity with gold, and to increase the subsidiary silver coinage," as follows:

"Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to coin the silver bullion in the Treasury, purchased under the act of July 14, 1890, into such denominations of subsidiary silver coin as he may deem necessary to meet public requirements, and thereafter, as public necessities may demand, to recoin silver dollars into subsidiary coin; and so much of any act as fixes a limit to the aggregate of subsidiary silver coin outstanding, and so much of any act as directs the coinage of any portion of the bullion purchased under the act of July 14, 1890, into standard silver dollars, is hereby repealed.

"The Secretary of the Treasury is hereby directed to maintain at all times at parity with gold the legal-tender silver dollars remaining outstanding; and to that end he is hereby directed to exchange gold for legal-tender silver dollars when presented to the Treasury in the sum of $5 or any multiple thereof; and all provisions of law for the use or maintenance of the reserve fund in the Treasury relating to United States notes are, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury, hereby made applicable to the exchange of legal-tender silver dollars."

They now beg to report as follows:

The bill reported to the House of Representatives by the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures is accompanied by a report from the majority of that committee, so full, exhaustive, and, in the judgment of your committee, so convincing in favor of the proposed legislation that little remains to be added in the way of argument.

It is a fact that Congress, on March 14, 1900, did declare for the gold standard in the United States, and made the dollar, consisting of 25.8 grains of gold, nine-tenths fine, the standard unit of value. It is true that it did not, aside from providing for the redemption of United States notes in gold, prescribe any method by which such parity should be maintained; and it is true that the purpose of this legislation is to remedy that defect.

From the report made it is evident that there is need for an increase in the volume of subsidiary coin in circulation to meet the needs of commerce, and in the judgment of your committee no wiser use can be made of the stock of bullion on hand than to turn it into subsidiary coinage as needed, giving the Secretary of the Treasury a free hand in reducing from time to time the volume of silver certificates or silver dollars now in circulation or lying idle in the vaults of the Treasury.

It seems to your committee that it is the part of good judgment and wise procedure, having on hand a large and burdensome stock of silver bullion, to utilize it in such forms as will keep it in circulation either in coin or small bills represented by bullion deposited, for in this way, at least, it can be made of some use, and through small coinage the risk of its return to the Treasury in volume at unseasonable and perilous periods is largely reduced. The rapid growth of the country in trade and population will enable it to absorb and keep in circulation a much larger per capita volume of silver coinage than now exists, while the enormous increase in our stock of gold, which will probably continue, will be adding an ample gold reserve to offset the issue of silver coinage.

But the vital essence of the bill in question is to make the legal-tender silver dollars remaining outstanding exchangeable at all times into gold when presented in sums of $5 or multiples thereof. If the act of March 14, 1900, really means what it says, that the standard dollar of issue shall be the gold dollar, then every dollar issued other than gold should be exchangeable into gold, for the maintenance of parity, as the committee truly say, "is not only a moral obligation resting upon the nation, but it is one which the Government can not evade, for, whether exchangeable or not, they must be accepted by the Treasury for all Government dues in lieu of gold."

The minority report of the Congressional committee on this bill gives as one reason why this legislation should not be enacted that it will put upon the $150,000,000 of gold held in reserve to maintain the gold standard the additional strain of redeeming silver certificates in gold, and that this strain will be too heavy, and, in consequence, a continuance of gold payments at all times might be imperiled. By this course of argument they practically admit that a danger exists, and the fear which they express would, in our judgment, under existing conditions, create a similar fear in the minds of the public when the strain comes upon the Treasury to maintain gold payments, which fear, if it exists, will only intensify the danger of financial disaster to the country. Remove the fear and the danger ceases to exist.

"The way to resume is to resume," was once said by a distinguished Secretary of the Treasury. The way to maintain a gold standard and gold payments at all times is to declare openly and frankly that every dollar of circulation issued by the Government shall, at the will of the holder, be redeemable at all times into a gold dollar. If this is done, the danger ceases, and the credit of the nation, at one bound, is placed on a parity in strength with that of the most favored nations of the earth; and not until this nation has so declared itself will its credit so rank in the judgment of the civilized world.

For the government of no civilized nation can permanently enjoy the best of credit when it issues over five hundred millions of currency for circulation based upon a metal not the standard unit of value, compels the people to accept such issues at their face value in gold, and refuses to commit itself to a pledge to pay gold for such issues when payment is demanded by the holder thereof. They may think their credit is of the best, but their own people will not so regard it, and the world at large will not so regard it. When the strain is put upon the system, when gold is needed and silver certificates in large volume pour into the Treasury of the nation, while gold is being hoarded, then confidence grows weak, and the system becomes a rope of sand.

In our judgment nothing now prevents silver dollars from going to a discount except the abiding faith of the people that the Government will, at all times, keep them worth their face value in gold; and if it is the intention of the Government to do this, as is undoubtedly the case, then why should not the Government prove their intention by their act, and by declaring silver dollars exchangeable into gold at the will of the holder forever end all doubt, even if the strain upon the gold reserve proves to be too great and a larger reserve is needed. Even now, if the strain does come—and come it will—gold must be bought to maintain the parity, or the parity will cease to exist.

The members of this chamber have repeatedly declared themselves in favor of the gold standard and of a reform in the banking system of the country so as to make it adequate to the demands of trade and commerce, and capable of resisting the strain of commercial disaster which is sure to follow a period of unexampled prosperity in a country developing as we are with enormous rapidity. The first stone in the foundation of the structure of national credit is the inviolate character of its unit of value, by which all its mercantile transactions are measured, and now is the time to complete the act of March 14, 1900. Therefore your committee recommend the adoption of the following resolutions:

Resolved, That the members of this Chamber are in favor of the legislation embodied in a bill known as "A bill to maintain the legal-tender silver dollar at parity with gold, and to increase the subsidiary silver coinage," which bill was introduced in the House of Representatives by the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures on January 13, 1902.

Resolved, That we are in accord with the majority report as presented by that committee and accompanying the bill, and heartily indorse the reasons given by them why the bill should be adopted; and we respectfully urge upon the members of the Senate and House of Representatives in Congress assembled prompt and favorable action upon the same, believing that the commercial interests of the country require such action on their part.

Respectfully submitted.

JOHN HARSEN RHOADES,
HENRY W. CANNON,
EDWARD H. PERKINS, JR.,
AUGUST BELMONT,
GEORGE G. WILLIAMS,
Committee on Finance and Currency.

NEW YORK, March 5, 1902.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. HILL. Certainly.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I will ask you whether at the National Bankers' Convention which met at Milwaukee, in the State of Wisconsin, a resolution was even introduced recommending this bill.

Mr. HILL. I do not know.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I will state to the gentleman that I have read the whole of the proceedings and there is not a single resolution of that kind introduced.

Mr. HILL. There was no such resolution introduced in the congress of the Daughters of the Revolution that met here a few weeks ago, and I do not think it has anything to do with it.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I suppose the gentleman will concede that the bankers' conventions discuss financial questions more than any other body.

Mr. HILL. Some of them.

Mr. SHAFROTH. And it was composed not only of New York bankers, but bankers from the whole country.

Mr. HILL. The Indianapolis monetary convention heard, approved, and heartily indorsed and recommended it. I do not see that that has anything to do with this particular question.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Oh, no. When everybody approves it, that is something; but when somebody does not approve it, that is nothing.

Mr. HILL. I am glad that the gentleman admits it is something.

Mr. McCLEARY. Did the body disapprove?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I will state that the convention had under consideration various currency measures, among which was the asset currency. The matter was discussed by the Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Gage, and there was no reference whatever made to this bill, although this bill was reported last session of Congress and must have been fresh in the minds of the gentlemen who were present.

Mr. HILL. Has the gentleman any other question? I yield the balance of my time.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman and gentleman of the committee, I was much pleased to read in this morning's daily newspapers another of the characteristic letters of regret, which have now become "the looked for" letters from my Lord Kitchener, announcing another glorious Boer victory. As is well known to us all, the British Empire at this time is engaged in an effort to destroy the last vestige of republican government upon the Dark Continent.

In their efforts to crush the South African Republics and in attempting to carry into effect this policy, the war office of the British Empire has been driven to the adoption of concentration of noncombatant Boer women and children in detention camps; and, as a result of this policy, there has been a degree of mortality there among those children and women that is without parallel in history, not even excepting the horrible scenes which were enacted prior to the Spanish-American war in Cuba.

The charitable people of the great State of Illinois, moved by impulses of humanity, have recently raised a large fund for the purpose of sending it to South Africa to be expended for the relief of those noncombatant Boer women and children. An effort has recently been made to secure a passport or permit for the gentleman who was to undertake the intelligent disbursement of this fund. I now send to the desk, for the purpose of having read, in order that the House may understand its end and purpose, a resolution relating to efforts made in this direction, which resolution I introduced a few days ago.

The Clerk read as follows:

Whereas the following allegations are made in an editorial printed in The Public, a publication printed in Chicago, Ill.:

"It is hard to believe that the 'understanding between statesmen,' to which the British minister, Mr. Chamberlain, referred a year or so ago, has gone as far as Secretary Hay implied when refusing to ask for passports for Mr. and Mrs. Thomas to enable them to succor the reconcentrado prisoners in South Africa.

"A committee organized by Governor Yates, of Illinois, has raised funds for the relief of these hapless noncombatant prisoners, and in order to secure its fair distribution had asked the Rev. Hiram W. Thomas, a well-loved clergyman of Chicago, and his wife, to go to the South African camps and superintend the distributing work. Mr. and Mrs. Thomas consented.

"But passports from the British Government being necessary, Secretary Hay was duly requested to apply for them to the British ambassador, Lord Pauncefote. Mr. Hay refused to do so, giving as his reason that President Roosevelt would object. To such a laudable application it would seem that the British Government itself should have been left to make the objection. Neither Mr. Roosevelt nor Mr. Hay was required to act as a 'buffer.' But our Government, evidently, wished to avoid placing the tory Government of Great Britain in an embarrassing position.

"Had Mr. Roosevelt requested the passports, and there is no legitimate reason why he should not have done so, but abundant reasons why he should, the British Government would have been obliged either to grant the request or to disclose a cruel churlishness which it prefers to conceal. From this alternative President Roosevelt saves it. These 'understandings between statesmen,' with their little side courtesies in connection with coronations, are curious developments in imperial diplomacy."

Therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Secretary of State be, and he is hereby, respectfully requested, if not incompatible with the public interests, to inform the House of Representatives whether he declined to comply with the request of the said Rev. Hiram W. Thomas to ask the British Government for passports for the said Rev. Dr. Thomas and his wife to visit South African military camps for the purpose of distributing funds raised in the United States for the relief of noncombatant prisoners.

Mr. BURLESON. Of course, Mr. Chairman, I do not pretend to know whether the statements embodied in the article which appeared in The Public are true or not. The purpose of this resolution introduced by me was to ascertain whether the official representing the American people in the Secretary of State's office had declined to lend his good offices to aid in accomplishing this worthy and charitable purpose. And bearing upon that issue, I now send to the desk a communication which I received yesterday afternoon, and ask that it be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Hon. A. S. BURLESON,
House of Representatives, United States Capitol.

SIR: In view of the resolution introduced by you into the House on the 8th instant, and based, as I understand it, upon a statement published in a Chicago periodical known as The Public, in which you ask that respectful inquiry be made of Secretary Hay as to whether or not he had declined to make request upon the British ambassador in Washington for passports for Dr. Hiram W. Thomas and his wife to visit the noncombatant concentration camps in South Africa to do relief work, I take occasion, having had that matter in charge, to make a specific statement to you regarding the matter that was brought to the attention of Secretary Hay.

Dr. Thomas, for many years pastor of the People's Church in Chicago, and one of the most widely known ministers in the West, recently expressed his willingness to go to South Africa to carry relief to the sick in the noncombatant camps maintained by the British military authorities, and his wife wished to accompany him in his work of mercy. Their services were tendered to the Chicago committee recently appointed by Governor Yates as trustees for funds subscribed for relief work in noncombatant camps by citizens of the State of Illinois. The committee consists of Mayor Carter H. Harrison, Judge E. F. Dunne, and Peter Van Vlissingen, of Chicago. They are in possession of several thousand dollars subscribed within the last few weeks, and were glad to accept the proffered services of Dr. Thomas, as his name alone was regarded as a guaranty that the funds would be wisely used and administered in the charitable way that contributors intended.

In order to secure the admittance of Dr. Thomas to the concentration camps, however, it was realized that it would be necessary to first secure passports from the British war office to enable him to proceed to his destination, since the noncombatant camps to which he wishes to go are situated within the districts now under martial law and controlled by the British. The regular passports issued by our own State Department would not, of course, under such circumstances, serve his purposes, as he would still be subject to the orders of all the local British officers with whom he might come in contact, and might not be permitted to proceed to his destination at all.

At first the plan was entertained of having Dr. Thomas go direct to London and make his application there, but this was afterwards rejected, on the ground that such a trip would incur heavy expense and might be without satisfactory result. It was then decided to bring the matter directly before our own State Department, have the matter brought, if possible, by our Secretary of State to the attention of the British ambassador here, and laid by him before the London war office.

I was commissioned to take this matter in charge, and came to Washington for the purpose of using my best efforts to secure the passports. I first went to Senator CULLOM, of Illinois, and explained to him the nature of my mission. He then gave me a note to Secretary Hay, again explaining what I sought, as it had been stated to him, and speaking a high word of praise for the character of Dr. Thomas, with whom he is personally acquainted.

On being granted an audience with Secretary Hay I stated to him that Dr. Thomas wished to go to the noncombatant camps of South Africa to work among the sufferers and to disburse the funds in the hands of the Chicago committee for purchase of foods, medicines, clothing, or whatever might be most needed by the sufferers; that it would be necessary to secure passports from the British war office to enable him to reach his destination, and that I had been sent to him (Secretary Hay) to request him to use his good offices to bring Dr. Thomas's application for passports before the British ambassador, Lord Pauncefote, with a view to having it passed upon by the British war office.

Secretary Hay declined to do this, stating that such action on his part might be considered meddlesome and a remissness in the observance of neutrality; that to make such a request upon Lord Pauncefote would not be in accordance with his own views nor, he felt sure, those of President Roosevelt. It would be impossible, he stated, to take up the matter informally with Lord Pauncefote, as any request which he (Secretary Hay) might make relative to the matter would become official, on account of the very nature of his office. Secretary Hay stated that he would be very glad to issue passports from our own State Department for Dr. Thomas and his wife, but these have not yet been taken out, as they would be valueless without some assurance that indorsement of them can be secured by the British military authorities in control of the district in which the South African noncombatant camps are situated.

Respectfully submitted.

JOHN O. KNIGHT.

HOTEL RALEIGH,
Washington, D. C., March 10, 1902.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, I have no acquaintance with this gentleman, and I can not vouch for the truthfulness of the statements set forth in his letter; but it seems that his character is such that he has been measurably credited by the committee appointed by the Republican governor of the sovereign State of Illinois.

It seems his character was such that he obtained the entrée to the chairman of the great Committee on Foreign Relations of the Senate, and secured from him a letter to our Secretary of State; and it occurs to me that the matters of fact set forth in his letter are of such serious character as to call for an explicit statement in reply to the resolution which has been introduced.

If the statements embodied in his letter are true, then we are driven to the conviction that our foreign office is so saturated with pro-British spirit and feeling that it can not respond to the ordinary appeals of charity when made in behalf of the unfortunate Boers, or to the dictates of humanity which should prompt anyone to lend aid to the dying women and children of these patriotic people struggling against the British army.

Another application has been made for the good offices of the Secretary of State to aid in this worthy purpose. I now ask the Clerk to read, from the desk, this paper.

The Clerk read as follows:

The honorable SECRETARY OF STATE,
Washington, D. C.

SIR: By virtue of the proclamation issued by the governor of the State of Illinois, calling upon the citizens of that State to contribute for the relief of suffering among the Boer women and children in South Africa, a large amount of money has been collected.

The committee appointed by the governor, as well as the contributors, strongly desire that this sum should be effectively distributed by an American delegate of repute, whose primary purpose would be to ascertain where the suffering was greatest, and to apply such relief as, under the circumstances, seem to call for the most pressing consideration.

Secondly, it would be the duty of such a delegate to inquire what further relief might be required, either in money or supplies of any kind, so that a fresh appeal might be issued upon his report.

The Chicago committee has requested Dr. Hiram W. Thomas and Mrs. Thomas to proceed to South Africa, and they have accepted this commission. It will thus be seen that their duties are purely philanthropic.

The committee is aware that it would be easy to procure passports in the ordinary way, and that Mr. and Mrs. Thomas could proceed to Cape Town or one of the other South African ports, but it is absolutely necessary that before undertaking the expense of the mission they should receive the assurances of the British authorities that no obstacle will be placed in the way of their visiting the concentration camps.

I have, therefore, the honor to request your good offices to procure, through Lord Pauncefote, the British ambassador at Washington, or such other agency as you may deem best, a permit from the British authorities for Dr. and Mrs. Thomas to visit the Boer concentration camps for the purposes recited in this letter.

I have the honor to be, sir, very respectfully,

JOHN O. KNIGHT,
Acting for Chicago Boer Relief Committee, Appointed by Governor Yates.

HOTEL RALEIGH,
Washington, D. C., March 11, 1902.

Mr. BURLESON. Now, Mr. Chairman, if the facts stated in the first letter which was read are true, and public opinion does not drive the officials who now occupy the State Department from office, then, indeed, in my opinion, will it be plain to all that we have arrived at the period in our history when the decadence of the Republic has commenced.

My object in having these communications read to-day is, if possible, to fasten the attention of the American people to the pendency of this application for the permit, and thereby arouse a real American, republican, public opinion which will prevent the officers of the State Department from manifesting this pro-British spirit.

I have an abiding faith and confidence in the love of liberty, the broad and generous humanity of the American people for the suffering women and children of the gloriously patriotic Boers, and feel that the effort to bring these sufferers aid need only be brought to the attention of the American people in order to enlist the tenderest sympathy.

A just public opinion when aroused will aid us, will aid charitable Chicago in its charitable endeavor to bring assistance to these unfortunate women and children who are dying by the scores in South Africa, while their patriotic brothers and husbands make the last struggle for civil liberty and independence and republican institutions which is to be made upon the Dark Continent.

Mr. Chairman, this policy of concentration of noncombatants in detention camps which has been adopted by the war office in Great Britain, the effects of which the charitable people of Chicago are endeavoring to obviate or relieve, is the same infamous policy that aroused the patriotism and the love of liberty and the feelings of humanity on the part of the American people that finally drove tyrannical Spain from Cuba and made the name of Weyler, because of his camps of reconcentrados, synonymous with brutality and cruelty.

Mr. Chairman, I have accomplished my purpose.

Mr. HITT. Mr. Chairman, I ask the gentleman in charge of the time to yield to me for a moment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. HITT. The remarks of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BURLESON] are a singular surprise. He introduced a resolution last Saturday, which he has just caused to be read, which was referred to a committee. The committee has adjourned to a day fixed by him, on his motion, for hearing it. He has the assurance of the chairman of that committee that it will be voted for by him, and I suppose by every member; yet he rushes in before the resolution is considered and before the answer of the Secretary of State, which we all await, is received, to make a speech prejudging a question touching our international affairs.

Mr. BURLESON. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. HITT. Certainly.

Mr. BURLESON. The gentleman is not saying anything in contravention of what I have said. I candidly announced that my purpose was to influence the action that is probably to be taken to-morrow by an official of a coordinate branch of the Government.

Mr. HITT. Well, I thought we usually spoke here for the House of Representatives, inasmuch as we are Representatives. The gentleman admits, however, that his speech is not for us. I am speaking to this House for that which concerns its usages and its rights. The House will, if it chooses, pass the resolution when brought before it, and the Secretary of State, upon the request of the House, as upon its direction, will make answer. When that comes, we can consider it. That is the proper time; that is the ancient usage of this body toward the public servants. Whether they are humble or whether they are eminent, they are entitled to fair treatment and to some hearing.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will permit me——

Mr. HITT. Certainly; I yield.

Mr. BURLESON. The gentleman has evidently mistaken the situation. I am not asking for any action at this time upon the part of this body. I am content to let the resolution be considered when the proper time arrives. I candidly announced what my purpose was, and I have accomplished my purpose.

Mr. HITT. The purpose, as candidly announced by the gentleman, is to prejudge a question upon which we are to have the evidence submitted. It is for the purpose of influencing public opinion.

Mr. BURLESON. The gentleman surely does not want to put me alone in the attitude of attempting to prejudge my resolution when he himself admits that he is going to vote for my resolution.

Mr. HITT. I can say that, because it is before me for action.

Mr. BURLESON. I have not prejudged it any more than the gentleman has.

Mr. HITT. It will be my duty to pass upon it, and I can speak of my action. I have no right to anticipate what the House will do. The resolution presents a question on which we will probably have to inquire; but it led me to revert at once in memory to what would have been the answer to a similar request if it had been made to this country by a committee of those in London who were sympathizing with that powerful organization struggling with our own in 1863 and 1864.

What would have been the answer if such a request had come to Mr. Stanton, to let a committee from London who were in sympathy with the Confederate forces go through our armed lines to distribute money among Confederate prisoners? There is something in international law. These gentlemen are private citizens. We have The Hague convention providing for exactly this thing, in so far as it is proper, by the recognized officers of the Red Cross International Association and Bureau of Relief and Information. This is not for the distribution of medicine, clothing, or the comforts of life now proposed, but money; but never——

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask the gentleman a question, with his permission. Does he mean to impugn the motives and purposes of the citizens of Illinois who contributed this fund? Does he mean to say they have any other purpose than that which they themselves declare, to relieve the unfortunate Boer women and children in reconcentrado in South Africa? I can construe the gentleman's language in no other way.

Mr. HITT. No; I am only stating what is the rule and usage of nations under international law and what is the precise question presented. The question presented is whether our Government will ask another to permit those in sympathy with the other belligerent to go through their fortified lines. Now, there is an organization which, by international convention, has charge of such things, namely, the Red Cross Association and the Bureau of Relief and Information.

This is not for the conveyance of supplies. Now, anyone present who dates back to the days when the North had prisoners, remembers perfectly well the rule that no man was permitted to go into the camps. Senator Thurman, who went to the camp at Columbus, Ohio, was compelled to stay outside and our officers took the comforts in to the rebel prisoners. Never have I heard the suggestion that any government in hostility to any other would allow its lines to be passed and prisoners to be reached.

In the Transvaal our consul took supplies to the British prisoners from those who wanted to aid them, but the Boers never admitted them into the fortified lines. I do not know anything about the facts in this matter, nor will I until we hear from the Secretary of State, but any answer made by him to a proposition of that kind must have been made in view of well-known international law.

The rule that our Government followed in our war was established by the instructions drawn by Lieber in that famous order which was a code of international law on that subject, and has been since adopted by all civilized nations. It was to our honor as a nation and to our glory that at the time we were achieving the unity of the people of the United States we established rules of war which have been adopted throughout the world.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. HITT. Very well.

Mr. BURLESON. Do I understand the gentleman to express the opinion here that the Secretary of State ought not to lend his good offices to secure a permit which has been asked for by the people of Illinois for Mr. Thomas and his good wife to go to relieve the distress of the Boer women and children who are concentrated in the British camps of detention in South Africa and dying by the hundred?

Mr. HITT. I have not said anything of the kind. I have said nothing about the Secretary's withholding his sympathy or good offices. There is another pro-Boer committee like the one in Chicago, long since organized and very active, in London, and they send their money right forward to South Africa through recognized agents. I know those in this town who sent their money to that committee, the pro-Boer committee in London, which was sent or taken by the neutral officers into the camps and distributed there. Our consul distributed a good deal early in the war.

Mr. BURLESON. If the gentleman will permit the observation, it was that very condition which the people of Chicago are trying to avoid—distributing their charity through London sources.

Mr. HITT. The imputation that the officers of the army would be dishonest, or anything of the kind, is not, I suppose, what the gentleman means. In our war the money was honestly paid to the prisoners on both sides. It was given to those to whom it was addressed.

No one assumes that the officers are thieves, but forces at war do not permit the eye of the outsider to look through their camps. War is not a jest or play; there is no coquetry of politeness within its territory filled with armed men under martial law. I do not know what the Secretary said, but I call attention to what every old soldier must remember if he ever was a prisoner in a camp on the Union side or on the Confederate side.

There is no need of a passport from the Government. You must get your pass or permit from the absolute ruler of the place, the military officer. I never heard of a belligerent allowing provisions or comforts to be distributed in a camp of prisoners by anybody but their own officers. Jefferson Davis would not have permitted people to perambulate through the Southern camps filled with Union prisoners, giving them money and provisions. He would have said, Hand us the money and the provisions and our government will convey it and distribute it. No man will question the integrity of the officers, and the hardihood of a gentleman asking the Government to depart from that usage is to me astonishing.

The gentleman has intimated that the Secretary of State has shown that he was hostile, or that he was out of sympathy with this body of prisoners. I think that everybody here and everywhere else is in sympathy with the unhappy and distressed in war.

Mr. BURLESON. Does not the gentleman think that this denial of the permit or passport, if it is to be made, should come from British sources rather than from American sources?

Mr. HITT. I think the proper way would have been to do as was done during our war. It is not a passport that is required——

Mr. BURLESON. Certainly not.

Mr. HITT. The word "passport" is a misnomer in this connection. A passport is a document which takes a person through a country where there is no extraordinary condition impeding travel and intercourse. What was wanted was a military permit to visit, not to enter, these camps or fortified lines—a pass, not a passport. It would have been granted at once upon the presentation of the facts to the consul.

Mr. BURLESON. Then I understand the gentleman to say that the officials of our State Department should make the denial of this request and thereby avoid going to British sources for the purpose of giving them the opportunity to make the denial?

Mr. HITT. Does the gentleman think it would be wise in conducting the affairs of our country to make a demand which is out of all precedent, when there is another and better and unobjectionable way in which the object could be obtained? Does the gentleman think we should try to put a foreign nation into an adverse position by making a demand in that way, with the effect simply of putting our Government in conflict needlessly with another?

We all know the international rule in such cases; the gentleman knows it perfectly well; he is not a novice in these matters. It was not without good reason that he was assigned by the Speaker to the Committee on Foreign Affairs. He knows the rules of international intercourse in the time of war. Every book on the elements of the laws of war and peace shows that no people can demand of a belligerent, on any pretense, right to send persons through a military or fortified camp. Any person attempting to secure entrance to such a camp would be liable to be taken and shot as a spy.

I know Dr. Thomas. I have known of him for many years. There is no doubt of the sympathy of everyone with his purpose. I would like to see his mission effected. I would like to see him accomplish his purpose without any such prejudice being aroused as would be excited by making on the British Government a demand such as has not been known before.

Mr. BURLESON. The people of Chicago have been endeavoring to follow exactly what the gentleman from Illinois says would be the proper course. They have been endeavoring to send Dr. Thomas to South Africa to do this work of charity. Does the gentleman say that he ought not to be sent there; that he ought not to be allowed to secure this permit?

Mr. HITT. The permit is not essential in the least. As has been stated in the letter read here, the Secretary of State has offered to do everything he could to put Dr. Thomas in the way of getting to the point desired without making a demand which might result in a slap on the face perhaps from a foreign government which would be intrenched behind the rules of international law.

But there is no reason to believe that there would be any impediment against securing such a pass as would permit Dr. Thomas to reach those people with funds. Nothing of that kind is indicated in the conduct of the Secretary of State. The impression I caught from the reading is that Mr. Knight in his letter showed what has been the kindly spirit of the Secretary, who offered him letters of introduction and offered to do everything which would forward his mission.

Mr. BURLESON. But the State Department officials, so Mr. Knight says, declined to do the very thing which the gentleman from Illinois admits was absolutely necessary in order to reach the people whom they desired to relieve.

Mr. HITT. No; it was not necessary to have a pass to get the funds to prisoners in a military camp. Without such a pass he certainly would not be admitted himself.

Mr. BURLESON. Not with a permit from the war office of Great Britain?

Mr. HITT. Oh, no.

Mr. BURLESON. That is exactly the point. We wanted to utilize the good offices of the Secretary of State of the greatest Republic on earth in order that this permit might be obtained for the minister and his wife to visit those unfortunate people to relieve their distress.

Mr. HITT. No doubt he could do all that—that is, relieve their distress; but he would not be permitted to go through the armed camps or fortifications. It was never done in our war. I never heard of its being done North or South. If the object is to put our Government in conflict with another for the sake of political capital, I do not think that effort ought to succeed.

Mr. BURLESON. As to what occurred during the unfortunate period of 1861–1865, I am unable to speak from personal knowledge or recollection, inasmuch as I was not of age to participate in the occurrences of that time.

Mr. HITT. I spoke of it because it illustrated a rule universally accepted, a rule that nations generally have adopted.

I beg the pardon of the House for taking so much time.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. You said just now that we have no right as a government to make a demand for this relief.

Mr. HITT. Oh, no; if I said that, it was a hasty expression. We have a right to demand almost anything.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I was trying to draw the distinction between a demand and a request. Have we not a right to make a request as a government?

Mr. HITT. Undoubtedly we may make most singular requests.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. It seems that is what the Secretary of State has refused to do.

Mr. SULZER. Just another question, if the gentleman will yield a moment.

Mr. HITT. Yes; if I have the time.

Mr. SULZER. Did we not make a similar demand on Spain, and did not Spain engage to do it?

Mr. HITT. That was done under organized forces, sent as officers of this Government, and the Red Cross was the one that had charge of it, and the Red Cross by international convention is charged with that particular duty.

Mr. SULZER. Is it not a fact that the English nation to-day in the war in South Africa refuses to permit the Red Cross people to minister to the Boers?

Mr. HITT. I have heard that asserted and I have heard it contradicted. I have heard it is contradicted by those in official position, who seem to be in possession of knowledge, but I do not know; however, for the purpose of a speech either might be asserted. I do not know the facts about it at all. South Africa is a long way off, and that is a controverted detail.

Mr. SULZER. Let me suggest that the information I have regarding that proposition comes from the Boer commissioners who are now in this country.

Mr. HITT. I am not in communication with the British or the Boer Government. [Laughter.]

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania is recognized.

Mr. SIBLEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield forty minutes to the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. MEYER].

Mr. MEYER of Louisiana. Mr. Chairman, I do not propose to treat this question altogether from the standpoint that my friend from Georgia [Mr. BRANTLEY] in his captivating and rhetorical speech of to-day has pursued, nor do I desire, at this time, to go into the discussion as to the effect a certain rate of reduction of duty upon Cuban sugars may have upon the price of that commodity in the American markets.

"Sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof" is my motto, and I trust and believe that the vigorous action on the part of my colleagues on the other side of this Chamber—who are now sometimes called insurgents—will render it unnecessary at any time in the near future to enter upon that feature of the controversy.

I shall speak in a general way of the relations of our country with Cuba, and also incidentally upon the question of reciprocity and of annexation of that island.

Mr. Chairman, the active discussions of the future relations of the island of Cuba with the United States by statesmen, agriculturists, promoters, and all parties involved has renewed interest in a subject of high importance to this country until now it is the vital question. The tardy acceptance by the Cuban constitutional convention of the terms prescribed by Congress in the act of March 2, 1901, is not an end of the controversy. It is merely a step in the progress of events, and does not possess all the importance usually ascribed to it. This constitutional convention endeavored in every possible way to avoid acceptance of these terms of Congress defining the relations of the two countries.

They yielded reluctantly at last, and this reluctance really expressed public sentiment. The dominant forces in Cuba wanted a free hand. The leaders gave up simply in order to get rid of the American occupation and to grasp the reins and spoils of government as quickly as possible. They were not conscious of any special obligation to the people of this country. All our expenditure of blood and treasure and our grand historical pose of disinterested intervention for outraged humanity went for nothing. A distinguished Senator rightly says that the great majority of the Cuban people are ignorant and utterly incapable of appreciating the humane sentiment that finally compelled this great Republic to espouse the cause of a suffering people on a neighboring island. He is probably right also in asserting that they viewed the interposition and friendly offices of the United States as "the selfish usurpation of another dominant power than Spain, governing by might without right." It is natural, therefore, that the leaders of the constitutional convention, brought to the front by the revolution, should now assume that "they secured the independence of the island," whereas in truth and fact, as the same Senator observes—

> When the United States intervened they were really driven from the field and were only able to maintain themselves in the fastnesses of the mountains, from which they emerged at irregular intervals to carry on guerrilla warfare.

It was to this class of soldiers that we gave $3,000,000, the aid of the United States Army and Navy, an expenditure of one to two hundred millions of money, and other sacrifices in war, and unstinted sympathy and admiration. It was magnificent, generous, emotional; but the world did not admire us for it as much as we had hoped, and the people for whom we did all this have forgotten, if they ever realized it, that we did anything for them at all. This may be a surprise, but it is not necessarily a misfortune. Perhaps it is a boon in recalling us from the episode of sentimentalism and hysterics to the old paths of wise and practical statesmanship. The well-known Platt amendment was a long stride in this direction. It was an appeal from Philip drunk to Philip sober.

AMERICAN INTERESTS PARAMOUNT.

The sum and substance of the Platt amendment was that, without wrong or injustice to Cuba, the great national interest and safety of the American people in respect to Cuba and other West Indian interests were to be made paramount and kept strictly in view. The amendment may not be perfect in terms; it may be apparently in conflict with the Teller proposition, as some persons assert; but in substance it means that the rights and interests of the United States in relation to Cuba, cherished by us for a century, are not to be suffered to be impaired, but will be upheld both in our own interest and in that of Cuba.

Cuba is to be independent for all practical purposes of home rule, but not enough so as to be utilized by any foreign powers or interests to strike us a blow. The keen and watchful eye kept on Cuba while a Spanish colony for long years is to be kept on those rulers who are to succeed Spain in its government. The problem is one that the Government can not afford to dismiss by reason of a formal technical acceptance of the Platt amendment. Indeed, it is by no means certain that the island of Cuba, whether as an independent State or under a quasi-protectorate, or as a State of the Union, or a colony of the Porto Rican type, may not be a greater cause of anxiety to the United States than she was as a dominion or colony of Spain. The difficulty of the question is disclosed by the very different suggestions of treatment made by public men who appear by their very different conclusions to have exhausted the study of the subject. In whatever aspect the question be considered, it is to be hoped that the epoch of sentimental sacrifices is at an end and that henceforward the interests of the American people, the taxpayers and the toilers of this land, may not longer be regarded as something of secondary and minor importance. [Applause.]

THE PLATT AMENDMENT.

The reasons for the Platt amendment, Mr. Speaker, have been so ably stated by Senator MONEY, of Mississippi, by Senator PLATT himself, and by others, as to render unnecessary any further exposition. The policy was accepted by the two Houses of Congress, approved by the Executive, embodied into public law, and has been indorsed by public sentiment. The concessions of one or two points for naval stations might fairly have been granted by Spain long ago, and if Cuba is to be defended against European aggression, and the interests of the United States in the West Indies properly guarded, the work of their construction can not begin too soon. The late war with Spain demonstrated the necessity of meeting a want long since felt by the intelligent officers of the Navy Department. Such naval stations in no wise impair the sovereignty or independence of Cuba, but will serve to assure and protect it if necessity should unhappily arise. The great advantage of the Platt amendment is that it translates the Cubans as well as ourselves from sentimentalism and dreamland to the domain of practical statesmanship.

CUBAN SUGAR COMPETITION.

The advocates of the policy of concession claim that the success of any Cuban government is dependent on Cuban commercial success. Her resources, they say, are limited to the production of sugar, tobacco, fruit, and possibly coffee. For these her natural market is the United States, yet here she comes into direct competition with the sugar and tobacco producers of the United States. Senator Thurston, in his statements, underrates the cane-producing capacity of the United States, but rightly says a large portion of this country is adapted to the profitable production of beet sugar. The United States has nothing to gain financially or commercially by the liberation of Cuba. The trade exchange benefits Cuba.

The argument does not logically conduct us to annexation, if the interests of our own people are to be first considered, and yet surely this point is or ought to be the one paramount consideration.

AMERICAN SUGAR SACRIFICED.

Cuba may have a great immediate interest in securing the American market which annexation would give her, and this might make great fortunes for the Cuban planters or for others who have options on Cuban plantations, but for those in this country, white and black, who grow sugar cane, and for the beet-sugar grower of New York, Nebraska, Kansas, California, Michigan, and other States, it is small satisfaction to be told that he is to be butchered to make a Cuban holiday, to eke out a balance sheet in Habana, and to pacify the discontented guerrillas and coolies of the Ever-Faithful Isle. It is claimed, however, that this country is large enough to absorb Cuba, Porto Rico, Hawaii, and the Philippines "without any permanent derangement of our own agricultural and industrial affairs—yes; and other portions of the globe."

There may be temporary inconvenience and suffering to the American sugar grower and tobacco planter. The trade may be "insignificant" compared with our trade to European countries, China, Canada, and those living in the temperate regions of the earth, but this is as unimportant as the suffering of those whose taxes helped to secure the liberation of Cuba.

Other advocates, notably Senator LODGE, in a late magazine article present us with a glowing picture of the wealth and undeveloped resources of Cuba—coal, iron, copper, forests of mahogany practically untouched, a soil of "unrivaled richness and fertility, capable of producing almost anything. In sugar and tobacco alone there is untold wealth for the island." Spain was the wicked stepmother that defeated the development of all this untold wealth; but Spanish rule is now only a hideous dream, a thing of the past.

EXPLOITATION FOR SPECULATORS.

One would suppose that an island "capable of producing almost anything," once relieved of grievous taxation and Spanish tyranny, would need only to be let alone in order to thrive and prosper. Capital has a keen eye for "untold wealth," and would naturally pour into a land thus ready to flow with milk and honey. A few steamers from Boston or New York, some sugar machinery, sawmills, and other notions, and a horde of enterprising speculators and exploiters would speedily work such a change in the island that the Cuban treasury would become plethoric and everybody be made rich and happy. But no; this is not enough. We are informed that, economically, their fortunes are involved with ours. The prosperity of Cuba, it is said, depends principally on the markets of the United States. The abrogation of the Harrison reciprocity treaties by us, it is alleged, brought on the insurrection of 1895.

PREVENT CATASTROPHE.

This catastrophe we are told must not be allowed to occur a second time. We have given Cuba freedom and peace, provided for her safety in foreign relations and her financial arrangements, and the Almighty in his bounty has given Cuba the richest area on the globe, with "untold wealth" all ready to be evolved. It would certainly seem that Providence had done its share, and that the American people had also attended to this end of the line, and that all that was now necessary was to secure a good stand and witness the Cuban boom with respectful sympathy and admiration. But no such rest awaits our patient American public. We are told we must do much more for Cuba. We must "secure her economic prosperity" by "assuring" to her a market for her sugar. We are told we must give to Cuba a "preferential duty" on her sugar and tobacco. There is nothing said about a "preferential duty" for the untouched forests of mahogany, the coffee, "almost anything" and everything that the island can produce; but logically all this would follow.

It is now suggested that a small preferential duty of 20 per cent would suffice for the purpose, but once admit that it is necessary to assure Cuba the American market for her products, big or little, and a trifling matter of 10 or 20 per cent would not be allowed to stand in the way. In all of the elaborate argument of the question there is hardly enough of solicitude for the American producer to challenge attention. Cuba is one of the richest portions of the habitable globe, and we have given her the chance to be foremost in the race for wealth.

GENERAL CUBAN COMPETITION.

If the island possesses only half of the natural advantages which the advocates of this policy portray, and if it is capable of producing "almost anything," what show would the American producer have, either with annexation or with the tariff so cut down by preferential duties as to "assure" her the American market for whatever she can raise—iron, copper, sugar, tobacco, mahogany, fruits, and a hundred other things besides? The question does not merely concern the beet or cane sugar grower of California, New York, Nebraska, Michigan, and Louisiana, or the tobacco planter of Connecticut, Pennsylvania, and other States. It concerns all those in this country who trade with them and supply them; the wheat grower of the upper Mississippi Valley; the manufacturers of New England, Pennsylvania, and Ohio; the stock farm of Kentucky, and all our varied industries, so bound together that you can not hurt one interest without striking a blow at all the others.

TARIFF QUESTION.

And all this brings us back to the great question, On what principle will you base your tariff and how shall it be framed? In the past there have been serious divisions in this country on the dividing lines of a tariff for revenue or a tariff for protection, or, what is equivalent to the last, a tariff for revenue with incidental protection and such adjustment of the schedules as will insure adequate protection against the pauper labor of Europe, Asia, and the Antilles. I do not seek to revive this old controversy; it seems to be settled. The trend of public opinion is obviously for such protective duties as will "assure" the American laborer his own market. The party that opposes this sentiment will be apt to come to grief. The party now in power won power in 1896 by loudly professing allegiance to the protective creed. If they go back upon it—if they apply the doctrine to some industries and leave others out in the cold—they will be at some disadvantage in the next Presidential election, and even sooner in the contest for the House of Representatives in 1902; and this is only three-fourths of a year off.

PROTECTION BETRAYED.

And yet there could not be a more insidious and dangerous betrayal of the protective policy than is involved in the scheme and theory of reciprocity treaties and legislation. It was probably for this reason that Mr. McKinley, who was an ardent and sincere protectionist, left out any provision for reciprocity in the bill which he passed through the House of Representatives in 1890. It will never do to suggest that this was an accidental omission. There was no oversight. It was no new topic to him; his policy was deliberate, and, as a friend of the protective system, he was eminently wise. The old free-trade proposition was to impose low revenue duties and to take the chances of other nations meeting you halfway. The reciprocity treaty also surrendered our control over our own markets in a large number of articles, and said to the foreigner, "Come in." It abandoned the old protective idea of a self-supporting country, equipped for war or for peace in all the essentials of life.

The moment we should begin to offer advantages and preferential duties to the foreigner there would be the temptation for him to ask and for us to concede to him competition with us in industries and productions which might not indeed be able to control or influence the Senate, but yet gave employment to many hundred thousands of our own people. It is obvious that if the protective principle is to stand at all it must be fair, honest, and must not discriminate against any American industry. Certainly it can not discriminate against agriculture or any other interest directly and openly, as is done in the case of the reciprocity treaties. The argument made against the protective policy by its opponents has always been that it pampered and enriched certain interests at the expense of other interests, and that it "robs Peter to pay Paul."

This may be true or not, but in the case of the reciprocity treaty it does so directly and boldly. The process of sacrifice once begun would not stop. Throw overboard the sugar beet and sugar cane producers and on what grounds will you refuse our markets to the foreign wool grower or to the Canadian farmer, with his numerous farm products, or to the Canadian lumberman? What stronger claim does the American farmer all along our northern frontier have to protection for his eggs, poultry, potatoes, barley, hops, and what not than the Michigan grower of beets or the negro in Louisiana who earns his living by working in the cane field? There is no surer way of sapping and mining the protective system than the reciprocity treaty. The valuable iron ores of Cuba and the copper and coal described by her exponents would have an equal claim, with sugar and tobacco, to the American market at the expense of our own producers under this reciprocity treaty.

CONSTITUTIONAL POWER OF SENATE.

It may be idle in these days to cite the Federal Constitution, but I may be pardoned for referring to it very briefly. This instrument, section 8, declares that "Congress shall have power to lay and collect taxes, duties, imposts, and excises;" and in section 7 it says that "All bills for raising revenue shall originate in the House of Representatives; but the Senate may propose or concur with amendments as on other bills." There can not be a doubt that the purpose of the Constitution was to give to the two Houses of Congress exclusively the function of imposing taxes and imposts of every character and description. This prerogative is of the highest dignity, and most intimately concerns the people of the land. It affects every citizen. Primarily the tax, tariff, or impost bill must originate in the popular branch of the Government, the House of Representatives, a body chosen directly by the American people in their Congressional districts every two years, and responsible to them for their action.

The Senate is associated, it is true, in this duty of adjusting taxes, but it can do nothing without the initiative of the House. Surely, there could not be a more palpable departure from the true theory and express language of the Constitution than to assume that the Senate alone can lay and define the taxes and imposts that are to be raised and elbow the House from its undoubted function of originating bills of revenue. Yet this is just what is proposed if the policy of reciprocity treaties adjusting tariff imposts with foreign countries is to prevail. In this important and serious work Nevada, Delaware, Idaho, and other States with scanty population are to have an equal voice with New York, Pennsylvania, Ohio, and Illinois. I can not concede that such was the purpose of the Constitution. It may be argued that after the Executive and the Senate, acting secretly, probably, shall have made the treaty the House of Representatives shall pass on the work. They may come in at the tail end of the procession, when the Constitution expressly said they should be first. Why the first? Because the House of Representatives directly represents the people of the United States.

In the House of Representatives a tariff bill is usually carefully prepared by a committee. There are public hearings in the committee, and public debates on the floor when the bill comes up for action. The galleries are open to the press and the public. If any burden is grievous, imposed by mistake, ignorance, or undue means and agencies; if there is a job cunningly wrapped up in phraseology, there is an opportunity for the public to detect and for the press to expose it. There is also the ordeal on the floor of question, debate, retort, cross-examination. If, after all this, the bill passes, it goes to the United States Senate for inspection and concurrence. There is committee work on it once more, though not any public hearings, and there is debate on the floor, with the President at the close of all, able to sign or not, according to his judgment and conscience. This is the way in which the American people like to have laws passed which may affect their dearest and most vital interests. This is the mode of legislation our Constitution provides for. [Applause.]

HIGH-HANDED TREATIES.

The reciprocity treaty is fashioned on a very different style. The people are not taken into the confidence of its authors until they are bound hand and foot. The press can get no information. If they did they might make trouble. The executive department takes counsel in secret, whether wisely or unwisely. The foreign government is conferred with secretly. A bargain is patched up. The treaty is made. It is not published. No; that would never do. The treaty is sent in confidence to the Senate. There it is in all its stages a confidential matter. No Senator may confer about its provisions even with the Representatives of his own State or with a friend, or with the interests vitally affected, or with a constituent, and still less with the press. If he does this he has violated the Senate rule and may be dealt with accordingly.

The wisdom and knowledge of the Senate itself and of the Executive are assumed to be all that he requires. In all this business there are few of the guards and securities usually deemed desirable to protect legislative bodies against undue influence. On the contrary, by this process of usurping the functions of the House of Representatives and thus enlarging their own, the domain of Senatorial and Executive power is greatly augmented, and with it the temptations to mutual favors between these two branches. Is it necessary to argue that the opportunities for clean, healthy, intelligent, and wise legislation are vastly greater in the public joint action of the two legislative bodies as provided by the Constitution than in any secret conclaves? After all, this Government is assumed to be of the people and for the people. Are not their chances against fraud, jobbery, and injustice better under the public constitutional methods of adjusting tariff taxes?

GENERAL TARIFF REVISION.

I think it clear, Mr. Speaker, that a general policy of reciprocity treaties would necessarily involve a large loss of revenue and would constrain us to resort to fresh taxes, which would have to be paid in part by the very producers whose interests were sacrificed by the reciprocity arrangements. This would naturally lead to a demand for a general revision by Congress of the tariff and taxation system. It may be argued that it is possible to make a reciprocity treaty with Cuba and there stop, but this is not the plan of those who favor this mode of tariff arrangements. Even if the policy were limited to Cuba the loss of revenue would be very large, and there would still be need for a general readjustment of the revenue system.

This subject rises above party and should be discussed without party bias or feeling. The division will not, I apprehend, be on party lines. The Secretary of Agriculture, Mr. Wilson, who has enjoyed great popularity by his attention to agricultural interests, tells us that the aim of his Department is to enable the people of the United States to produce the agricultural products we are now purchasing from foreign countries; that we bought during 1900 about $429,000,000 worth of agricultural goods, sugar being the principal product. Mr. Wilson thinks that we can produce all the sugar we require. The gentleman from Georgia says we can never produce sufficient sugar to meet the demand.

According to the reciprocity theory, this view of Secretary Wilson hardly deserves consideration; there is nothing gained by a country producing its own food supply, and, pushing the argument to its logical conclusion, the Department might well be closed or at least subordinated to the treaty-making power. The Secretary of State has had a number of difficult questions to handle, requiring great tact and skill; but he is to be loaded up with new duties, new responsibilities, involving a study of foreign productions and our own trade relations, matters of customs, tariffs, and what not, which, in the organization of the Government, it was considered by Mr. Alexander Hamilton and other great men had better be devolved upon a separate and independent organization known as the Treasury Department.

The placating of foreign countries, each one perhaps contending that this or that reciprocity treaty of ours was unfair to its own citizens, would take considerable time, even if the incidental friction between these two great executive departments of the Government could be smoothed over. Already there have been serious tariff controversies with Russia, Italy, and Austria, tasking all our diplomacy.

LET CONGRESS ADJUST DUTIES.

Perhaps, after all, it would be better to run along in the old way of the Constitution and leave to the House and Senate the adjustment of import duties. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, there is no considerable number of the American people who desire tariff agitation and controversy. The farmers and planters dread any unfriendly legislation by treaty, Congress, or otherwise. They care nothing about the success of the Cuban boom if they are to pay the piper. The business interests of the country deprecate agitation and change. They have always had a wholesome fear of the doctrinaire, the literateur, and even of the orator in politics. They may not render full justice to this interesting class, but this is the way they feel. They prefer a safe course and a safe man. Even Mr. BABCOCK's proposition, designed to check the trusts by tariff changes, has not met the favor of the great Republican leaders. But if the reciprocity line of business is to be pushed, there can be no reason for Congress refusing to consider Mr. BABCOCK's proposition. Still, for the Republican party to open the tariff controversy again might lead them to the Caudine forks. It would be a blunder.

The defeat of the last river and harbor bill, so important to the merchants, farmers, and commerce of the country, by questionable methods, was a fatal error for a party to make. The improvement of the waterways and harbors of a nation commensurate with the needs of its commerce and shipping is one of the grandest achievements of modern civilization. No party can stand in the way. Not less serious is the proposition to cut down arbitrarily the representation of certain Southern States, and thus reopen the old sectional controversy, repudiating, as it were, our late President's known policy of peace and reconciliation. It would not be wise to add on to these terrible blunders a renewal of tariff agitation. "Those whom the gods wish to destroy they first make mad." I am, however, not one of those partisans who desire their opponents to do wrong in order to reap a profit by their blunders. Whatever party be in power, the country is interested in a wise, prudent, and just policy. [Applause.]

Yet many of our fellow-citizens seem to think that there is no limit to the sacrifices to be made for Cuba by the American people. I submit that the armed intervention of the United States to secure the liberation of Cuba, the sacrifices of our soldiers and sailors, the expenditure of two hundred millions of money for the war, the payment of three millions in cash to her guerrillas to keep them from relapsing into brigandage, the generous aid given to the starving, and the rescue of the municipalities from filth and fever are costly and sufficient sacrifices, to say nothing of our lasting protection of Cuba against European rapacity and aggression. It is time to think something about the American taxpayer and producer. [Applause.]

The Speaker of this House, in a very able letter, has lately expressed some of the principal and improper influences which are at work to bring about the introduction of Cuban products at the expense of our own industries. The letter throws so much light on the situation that, with permission of the House, I shall take the liberty to print it as an appendix to this general treatment of the question.

APPENDIX.

I am just in receipt of your letter, which I have read with care and interest. It seems to me that you do not segregate the questions before Congress. There are three theories or questions pending or pressed upon us. First, the wiping out of all war taxes, which the party promised to do when we put them upon the people to carry on the war with Spain, and no one of any intelligence can say that the time has not come for wiping out these taxes, since we have $176,000,000 surplus in the Treasury, with a working balance of about $50,000,000 in the hands of disbursing agents for current work. If this pledge is ever to be fulfilled, it seems clear that it ought to be now. This first question stands alone without reference to any other.

The second question is, What are we going to do for Cuba? It is a separate and distinct proposition, and this is the situation: Those contending for Cuba want a reduction of 50 per cent or a clean sweep of duties between us and that country Contending for this doctrine is, first, the American sugar trust, which is here in the person of its ablest managers; second, the money—the capital that has been put into the construction of railroads in Cuba, where a system of railroads extending along what may be termed the backbone of the island, with arms extending from the backbone into each part of it, is in process of construction.

All the money in this enterprise is anxious, of course, to build up the commerce of Cuba. Third, there are millions of dollars that have gone into Cuba buying up plantations, cheap lands, and with large syndicates formed, are seeking to make fortunes out of the sugar industry. Then, again, there are Americans over there with vast sums of money in various enterprises who are all anxious for this. Then, again, the Cubans themselves who have the capital are anxious to have free trade relations with the United States. These all touch elbows and are working together.

On the other hand, the beet-sugar industry of the United States and the cane-sugar industry are fighting most vigorously against any reduction. The beet-sugar industry has developed to a wonderful extent, and so much so in the States of California, Colorado, Nebraska, Wisconsin, and Michigan that the delegations from those States have their faces set vigorously, firmly, and most determinedly against any reduction, their contention being that for the first time in the history of the country the farmer finds a direct interest in protection. They stand upon the doctrine of protection. The Secretary of Agriculture tells me that every acre of land in Iowa is capable of raising the sugar beet, and this is true of every State throughout the West and in the Mississippi Valley.

Now, in regard to my own position. You have accepted the lies sent out by the press, which is being manipulated in the interest of free trade with Cuba. I have never expressed an opinion against doing something, whatever we possibly can, to strengthen the hand of Cuba. I have stood side by side with the President and the Ways and Means Committee trying to devise some plan to do this without injuring the farmers of our own country and at the same time give encouragement to Cuba. The contention is brought to us from our own people that we have shed blood and money enough for Cuba, now an independent government, so to speak, without slaughtering the farming interests of our own country, and the most intense feeling exists.

I doubt if, with all the combined influence we have to bring to bear, we can dislodge or change the views of the States that I have named, that are operating in the beet-sugar industry, with sufficient force to carry the House. It may be that we can hit upon some other plan and harmonize matters, but I beg of a man of your intelligence and experience not to accept the flying reports and dispatches sent out and stimulated by the concrete organization, as I have indicated, who, indifferent to our own farming interests in this country, want to break down all the barriers between us and Cuba.

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Chairman, before making the motion that the committee rise, I will ask what is the status of the Chairman's list of speakers? I have not paid much attention to that myself. Is there a demand for further time?

The CHAIRMAN. The requests which the Chair has received would cover something like four or five hours of debate.

Mr. LOUD. Then I would move that the committee do now rise, hoping that we may close the general debate possibly tomorrow.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the Chair, Mr. LITTLEFIELD, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the Post-Office appropriation bill (H. R. 11354) and had come to no resolution thereon.

MONUMENT OF COUNT DE ROCHAMBEAU.

Mr. CULLOM, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, reported a joint resolution (S. R. 68) authorizing and requesting the President to extend to the Government and people of France and the families of Count de Rochambeau and Marquis de Lafayette an invitation to join the Government and people of the United States in the dedication ceremonies of the monument of General de Rochambeau to be unveiled in the city of Washington; which was read the first time by its title.

Mr. CULLOM. Mr. President, this is a matter that I think ought to be attended to without delay, as it will be but a little while before the occasion referred to in the joint resolution will take place, and if we are going to send an invitation to be present on the occasion it ought to be done at once. I ask, therefore, that the joint resolution be read in full and that it be put on its passage.

The joint resolution was read the second time at length, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the President be, and is hereby, authorized and requested to extend to the Government and people of France and the family of General de Rochambeau, commander in chief of the French forces in America during the war of independence, a cordial invitation to unite with the Government and people of the United States in a fit and appropriate dedication of the monument of General de Rochambeau to be unveiled in the city of Washington on the 24th day of May, 1902; and for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this resolution a sum not to exceed $20,000 is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the same, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of State.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the joint resolution was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I should like to move an amendment to the joint resolution, with the leave of the gentleman who has it in charge, so as to make it read "the families of Admiral Rochambeau and of Lafayette."

Lafayette stands in a relation to our war of independence which no other person occupies, and he has always had the gratitude and affection of the American people. He was, more than any other man, as a son to Washington, and he was regarded not merely as an individual who sympathized with us, but as the representative of the sympathy and affection of the whole French people. He was received afterwards as the nation's guest when he visited this country in 1824.

I did not know this matter was coming up until a minute ago, but I take this special opportunity to call attention to it because of one circumstance which may probably be thought to indicate an indifference on our part to the memory of Lafayette and a chill in our gratitude toward that beloved benefactor.

The Continental Congress, after the peace of 1783, voted a monument to General Lafayette, which vote was never carried out until within very recent years. But when any Frenchman or any friend of Lafayette called attention to the omission the answer always was that we have paid to him the most conspicuous honor ever paid to any person save Washington alone; that the portrait of Lafayette by Ary Scheffer, the great artist, hangs on one side of the door of the Speaker of the House of Representatives, the picture of Washington hanging on the other, the portrait of no other person being admitted to the Chamber occupied by that great assembly.

Now, for some reason which I do not know, within the past two or three months the picture of General Lafayette has been removed from the single most conspicuous place of honor, in the judgment of all Americans, in this world. I hope it may be restored, and I believe it will be restored before long; but in the meantime I think this invitation to Rochambeau should be accompanied by a similar honor to the family of Lafayette, who took part, as is well known, in the great transaction which completed the Revolutionary war.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts proposes an amendment which will be read.

Mr. CULLOM. I have no objection to the amendment.

Mr. HOAR. Substitute the word "families" for "family" and insert "General Lafayette" after the name of Rochambeau.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair calls the attention of the Senator to the amendment as it will be read.

Mr. CULLOM. Let it be read.

The SECRETARY. After the word "Independence" insert "and to the family of Marquis de Lafayette," so that if amended the joint resolution will read:

Resolved by the Senate, etc., That the President be, and is hereby, authorized and requested to extend to the Government and people of France and the family of General de Rochambeau, commander in chief of the French forces in America during the war of independence, and to the family of Marquis de Lafayette, a cordial invitation to unite with the Government and people of the United States in a fit and appropriate dedication of the monument of General de Rochambeau to be unveiled in the city of Washington on the 24th day of May, 1902, etc.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CULLOM. There seems to be a question whether the word "General" is proper there. Probably it ought to be "Count" instead of "General."

Mr. MORGAN. Count de Rochambeau.

Mr. GALLINGER. Count.

Mr. CULLOM. Count is the proper term, I think, to be used.

Mr. BACON. I am sure the Senator from Illinois is correct. He is universally known in France as Count de Rochambeau.

Mr. CULLOM. Let that amendment be made.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. Strike out "General" where it appears before "de Rochambeau" and insert "Count."

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A joint resolution authorizing and requesting the President to extend to the Government and people of France and the families of Count de Rochambeau and Marquis de Lafayette an invitation to join the Government and people of the United States in the dedication ceremonies of the monument of Count de Rochambeau to be unveiled in the city of Washington."

CONSIDERATION OF THE CALENDAR.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I gave notice yesterday that at the end of the routine morning business to-day I should ask the Senate to proceed to the Calendar. It is now very small and can easily be disposed of in one day. But the Senator from North Dakota desires to address the Senate this morning, and I shall not insist upon the request, but will call up the Calendar to-morrow morning.

PROMOTION OF COMMERCE.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 1348) to provide for ocean mail service between the United States and foreign ports, and the common defense; to promote commerce, and to encourage the deep-sea fisheries.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, so far the shipping bill has been discussed almost wholly by those who claim to have a special knowledge of the subject, by those who reside in and who represent States on the seacoast. I regarded it, therefore, as possibly appropriate that it might also be considered by one representing almost purely agricultural interests and a State which is about midway between the two oceans.

Mr. President, as I am not a member of the Committee on Commerce, therefore, in considering this bill, I do not feel called upon to discuss it minutely and follow its provisions into all possible details. I have no expert knowledge of shipping and its particular interest. The bill, however, is one which, while it deals with only one industry, by its very nature vitally and directly affects every interest in the United States, none more than the agricultural interests.

I, however, believe that I understand quite fully the general scope and effect of the provisions of the proposed act, and I purpose briefly to apply it to the general conditions of the country at the present time, and determine from such application what I believe to be its fair effect.

The Senator from Arkansas [Mr. BERRY], in his address on the general subject of ship subsidy in the Fifty-sixth Congress, said, in substance, that he did not understand how any person representing an agricultural section could conscientiously support a bill of that character. He could not see how anyone representing the farming element in the country could vote for that bill. As this bill is of the same general nature, and has identically in view the same objects, I assume that it is viewed by him in the same light. And inasmuch as I represent a purely agricultural section of the country, I feel justified in considering this bill and, consequently, replying to this statement, and considering it from the standpoint of the Western agriculturalist.

My State, as I have suggested, lies about midway between the two oceans. Ninety per cent of its entire product must be either shipped to Pacific or to Atlantic ports, and about that proportion of its products must go outside of the United States. We can easily see, therefore, how vitally interested we are in anything that affects either rail or ocean transportation.

The object of this bill is to advance into another field of operation that governmental policy of protection to American industries that has resulted so favorably in the past in the welfare of the American people, and has been so strongly indorsed by them during the last forty years. The objects sought to be attained by this bill, and, if the optimistic views of the framers—of the majority of the Committee on Commerce—are well founded, will be secured, are as follows:

First. A restoration of the merchant marine, affording in time of war and public necessity a sufficient number of ships convertible into transports or cruisers, which may by requisition be brought into public service;

Second. A saving of a very large sum of money, estimated at $150,000,000 or more per annum, to the American people which is now paid to foreign shipowners and their crews for the transportation of articles of American commerce;

Third. Enabling the American people, by the extra sums to be paid under this bill, to compete with foreign shipowners, so that the American commerce, or at least a fair and honest proportion thereof, may be carried in American vessels; and Fourth. That in time of conflict between any of the nations who are now carrying the bulk of our commerce we may not suddenly be thrown into a position where we are at the absolute mercy of foreign shipowners whose countries are so involved.

Now, Mr. President, every one of these objects deserve the patriotic consideration of American legislators. Our lost prestige upon the ocean ought to intensify our desire to restore our old supremacy. The fact that only 8 per cent of the exports and imports of this country are carried in American bottoms under the American flag is a condition, when compared with the greatness of the country and its excelling proportions in all other matters, that ought not to be tolerated.

Mr. President, in the year 1826 92½ per cent of all our foreign commerce, both exports and imports, was carried in American bottoms and only 7½ per cent in foreign vessels. In 1901, seventy-five years thereafter, this condition is absolutely reversed, and in the last year only 8⅓ per cent of our exports and imports were carried in American bottoms and 91⅔ per cent in foreign vessels.

To say that this is a matter of deep chagrin is putting it too lightly. In my opinion it is a matter of deep disgrace to the American people. The provisions of this bill, reduced to their simplest form, consist of a proposition for the protection of American shipping. It is the protection policy of the Government pressed into a new channel where its potency for building up and reviving is sadly needed. Our comparatively weak position in the merchant marine of the world must be a glaring object lesson of the inefficiency of anything bordering upon free trade with the balance of the world. Protection to our goods and to the industries which produce them is fast giving us the supremacy of the world. The nonprotection of American ships which carry that commerce is fast losing for us our merchant marine, if it has not already reduced it to such an extent that the remnant is scarcely worth the honor of that name.

The rather anomalous condition presents itself that while we have been outstripping the balance of the world in the enormous proportion of our manufactured and agricultural exports and the increase of our foreign commerce, we have been losing in a corresponding ratio our merchant vessels, so that at the present time we are compelled to carry almost wholly in foreign ships.

The same rules and regulations which govern in fixing protective rates and in determining whether any protection is necessary as against foreign goods are necessarily applicable in the determination of the question of protection to our merchant marine.

It is needless to say that every American citizen must sympathize with every one of the objects of this bill, and the only question which naturally presents itself is whether the object sought can best be obtained in any other form than that which is practically a subsidy, calling it by whatever name you may see fit.

I have tried, in the time which I could properly allot to the subject, to consider justly and fairly all the matters I could secure bearing upon this important question. I have found no propositions or theories which would appeal to my judgment in favor of any other character of remedy.

No bill has been introduced, to my knowledge, certainly none pressed, which presents any other theory as opposed to the one adopted in this bill in dealing with the question. Vague theories, Mr. President, often find their best refutation when sought to be crystallized into effective legislation. The obstacles, often many and serious, are then brought into prominence.

It has been suggested, for instance, that a bounty upon American exports would be the proper remedy. It is obvious that, other things being in harmony, a bounty on exports would be the most direct and effective remedy which could be devised to stimulate and make profitable our export trade. By a varied scale we could so adjust these bounties that all products could secure proper and adequate protection, according to their interests. The great staple productions of the country—that which makes the wealth of the populace—could secure special privileges corresponding to their importance.

An examination of our many treaties with foreign countries will show us that the granting of a bounty upon American exports or giving preferential duties would be against the direct provisions of the treaty conventions with all the great commercial countries. It has been stated that these treaties provide for their own abrogation, and many of them may be avoided upon one year's notice. It is evident, however, that these treaties should remain in force until new ones are adopted. How long it would require to formulate and secure mutual agreements by other countries interested in such treaties is a question which can not be answered.

But what we know of the changed conditions existing between this country and these other great commercial countries when the treaties were made and we were exporting comparatively little, and the condition which now exists when our exports have become enormous and are threatening the industries of those very countries, leads me firmly to the belief that if those treaties were once abrogated we would never again secure treaties so favorable. But even if favorable treaties could be secured, my opinion is that the conditions are such in the world to-day that nearly all these great commercial powers, in the event of preferential rates being fixed by law for American vessels, could very successfully retaliate.

It is true, also, that we might purchase ships in a foreign market cheaper than we could produce them here, but that is equally true of almost every character of goods, and it is just as reasonable that we should take off our tariffs on the many articles of imports, thus affording no protection whatever to our own industries, as to refuse to grant to the industry of shipbuilding and ship commerce a protection in harmony with all other conditions.

No commercial country is safe—and it takes no argument to verify this—unless it has the facilities and ability to construct and man a large navy in time of war or threatened war, and no nation can do this unless it has at all times extensive shipyards, capable of doing the work, and enough of a merchant marine to be able to man the proper number of ships.

I am therefore constrained to the opinion that the objects sought can better be secured by the methods indicated in the present bill, and that subsidies for American vessels, to an extent sufficient to enable them to compete with foreign vessels, is the most proper method of disposing of the subject.

To me the one grand object, and the object which is worthy of the greatest consideration, is the reduction of freights on our exports. We have long maintained a position of high and expensive living in this country, more universal among our people, from the laborer to the capitalist, than in any other country in the world. Our peculiarly favorable conditions and situations have enabled us to do this. Having within our own borders, or capable of producing therein, every article of industry or commerce, of food or raiment, we have been enabled to exact commercial tribute from all nations not so favorably situated. We have been enabled, by reason of this, to compel payment of important tariffs as a condition of opening up our great field of consumption to the commerce of the world, while they, in turn, have been compelled for the most part to receive our exports free.

Accustomed to higher wages—to a higher plane of living—than the inhabitants of any other country, any downward step toward an equality with the rest of the world would be followed by consternation and ruin which would bode enormous evils to the country.

Our great prosperity to-day is due to our great trade balance. When we export $580,000,000 worth of goods a year more than we import, we are $580,000,000 better off than we were at the beginning of the year. Keep that going for years; keep that money home circulating in the business of our country, and in ten years we would have in property and wealth $5,000,000,000 as a result of that trade balance alone. Turn that trade against us ten years, and we would bankrupt every industry in the United States.

It is evident, Mr. President, that continued prosperity requires a continuation of the policy which produces it, and to maintain it eternal vigilance and foresight must be exercised, and we must constantly create new fields for enterprise and trade whenever the old show signs of exhaustion.

No nation has ever been a great and prosperous nation until it had become a commercial nation, and no nation has ever become a great commercial nation until it reached a point where its exports exceeded its imports, and its prosperity always has been and always must be in proportion to that excess.

I know that this could not be carried on indefinitely with any single country, but so long as a nation is blessed with particularly favorable conditions so long should it take advantage of those conditions, though it be at the expense of the balance of the world.

That which is threatening our agricultural interest to-day is the enormous and rapidly increasing competition in the agricultural products of the world. The vast increasing exports of grain from South American countries and Russia is having a more or less disastrous effect upon the wheat raisers of our country.

I have here, Mr. President, a number of tables prepared by the Secretary of Agriculture, showing the exports of wheat alone, not considering flour and the manufactures of wheat, of all the great commercial exporting countries of the world:

I take now, Mr. President, the wheat exports of Roumania, of Russia, of Bulgaria, and of British India, and I find that there has been a great increase in the wheat exports of all of these wheat-exporting nations, with the exception, possibly, of India.

Now, Mr. President, what remedies are available to the American wheat grower? He can not stop the foreign production, which is ever driving the value of his product downward. There are but three remedies: Increase the demand for home consumption by such legislation as will increase the manufacturing and commercial population of the country, augmenting thereby the home consumption. Secure new foreign fields of consumption. And the answer to this ever beckons us toward the Orient. Lower the freight rates on agricultural exports.

And here we are brought face to face with one of the objects of the bill. Will its effect be to lower freight rates generally? The rule of competition must play as important a factor in the matter of freight rates as in any other avenue of business. Obviously, it must be less liable to be overcome by combinations when the competition is not between citizens of the same country, but between the people of nations foreign to each other, and whose natural competitive policies necessitate the application of the rule.

Of course, freight rates can not be expected to drop below the point of profitableness to those engaged in shipping, but we have a right to expect a reduction compatible with the higher wages paid for shipbuilding, the higher prices paid for American ships, the higher salaries paid to American sailors, and the higher expenses of operating American vessels.

On pages 493 and 494 of the report of the Commissioner of Navigation for the year 1901 is a table showing the tonnage of American and foreign vessels entered and cleared in foreign trade from 1821 to 1901. These figures may be interesting to the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER], who asked concerning them in last evening's debate. It will be seen therefrom that the total amount of American tonnage entered and cleared from American ports in 1901 was 12,798,652 and of foreign tonnage of 46,799,262—21 per cent American and 79 per cent foreign.

Now, Mr. President, if we could increase our tonnage, even to the extent of furnishing half of that engaged in our commerce, we would have to increase it about 400 per cent—at the present time fourfold. Assuming that we could do this, and also assuming that the number of foreign vessels would increase with the increased commerce of the world and that there are now enough vessels, and therefore with such increase in the future will be enough to carry all of that commerce, it is obvious that the result would mean either idle foreign vessels or a reduction in freight rates to the lowest profitable point.

The Senator from Georgia [Mr. CLAY], in his address the other day, said:

> If the friends of this bill are supporting the measure for the purpose of encouraging shipbuilding and increasing our merchant marine, why did they not provide that such owners of vessels engaged in our foreign trade, before receiving the benefit of the subsidy provided in this bill, should be required to obligate themselves to build new ships to correspond with those receiving the benefit of the subsidy? If the majority are so anxious to build up the merchant marine, why do they not say to the shipowners engaged in our foreign trade, Before you shall go into the public Treasury and receive aid from the Government you shall at least obligate yourselves to build and put in operation similar ships to those receiving Government aid?
> How can the majority sustain the position that the prime object of this bill is to increase our merchant marine and to stimulate shipbuilding in the United States, when all vessels, both sail and steam, now in existence are subsidized and permitted to draw from the public Treasury without the owners being required to build other ships to correspond with those receiving the subsidy? This legislation indicates that our friends on the other side of the Chamber are more solicitous about giving aid and encouragement to the owners of ships now in existence than they are to encourage the building and operation of new ships.

Mr. President, the same Senator in his address last year showed, at least to his own satisfaction, and attempted to show to the satisfaction of Senators on this side, that this bill, in the feature in which he now criticises it for not having the same matter as was in the last bill, would be most disastrous and nothing would be obtained therefrom. I do not know how he can justly now criticise this bill for not containing that which he declared in his speech in the Fifty-sixth Congress could not be accomplished for the benefit of American shipping.

On the whole, the argument of the Senator from Georgia was a double-edged sword which cut deeper backward than it did forward. He claims to have established the fact beyond question, first, that ships can be built as cheaply in this country as anywhere else; secondly, that they can be operated as cheaply; and, thirdly, inferentially, that the amounts received in freights now are reasonably remunerative and profitable.

Now, Mr. President, if the Senator has established that to his own satisfaction, I can not understand how he can deny to the results obtained by him the natural conclusion, which is, that if capital invested in shipping industry is now receiving a fair remuneration and you add greatly to that compensation and contract that it shall be paid for a period of at least fifteen years, an enormous amount of capital will necessarily go into shipbuilding and thereby increase the number of American ships. Certainly they will do that if it is made more profitable.

My own belief is that with the impetus this subsidy will give to shipbuilding and construction and the enlargement of our shipyards, with their labor-saving devices, we will in the course of fifteen years, and possibly sooner, be enabled, without the continuation of this subsidy, to compete in shipbuilding with the balance of the world. If this does come about within that time, then we need not continue these payments, and, as I understand the bill, the subsidies paid under Article II may be repealed at any time; not so, however, with the contracts for carrying the mails.

If this experiment should show that it has accomplished its purpose in a few years, we need not continue it further. On the other hand, if we find it is working harmoniously and find it proper to continue it with like or with less protection, I think the country will rise to the occasion and do what justice may require. Here now is an important feature, Mr. President, to me as important as anything in the bill.

Last year the value of imports and exports of this country amounted to the sum of $2,151,935,411. Had we retained our proportionate share, that share which we held in 1826, we would have carried in our ships $1,990,540,155, in round numbers about $2,000,000,000. Just what proportion of that would be paid out for American ships, to American mechanics, and for American seamen, I do not know, but have been informed that we are now paying out about $500,000 per day to foreign ships and shipowners for carrying our commerce.

As this would be about 20 per cent of the value of the articles of commerce, I think it is reasonably accurate, although I have not verified it. That would make $182,500,000 per year. Even, therefore, if the effect of this bill did not operate to reduce rates, as I certainly believe it will, if the rates were to remain the same as now, still I insist that the retention of this vast sum of from $150,000,000 to $180,000,000 per year would itself justify the expenditure of these three to five million dollars per year extra which this bill calls for.

In my mind the only justification for the payment of public funds in furtherance of semiprivate business is that the returns from the investment of these public funds to the whole of the people will be in benefits received in excess of the amount paid, which of course must be paid by all of the people. Not only this, but the justification must be based upon the same policy and the same theory which justifies the tariffs upon imported goods, namely, the protection of American industries, and not less important, the retention of the sums paid for articles of consumption as much as possible in our own country.

There are, Mr. President, two important considerations which lie at the very base of the moral right to levy a tax upon foreign importations. The one is, that by so doing we are enabled to develop our own internal resources, and the other, that which to me is far more important, or certainly as equally important, is that the sums which we necessarily expend for the necessaries or luxuries of life are kept within our own borders.

A protectionist by education, I deny that the benefits of our protective policy should be limited to the mere protection of infant industries. Mr. President, we shall soon, if we have not already in some of our articles of production, be brought face to face with the question whether this Government shall cut off its protective policy the moment that we find that any character of goods no longer needs protection in this country as against foreign competition.

I deny the proposition that when an article needs no further protection against the invasion of a foreign article we should necessarily cease our protective policy. So long as I support my own family, and so long as a member of that family produces an article which I might need, I am justified, not only morally, but financially, in paying that member of my family 95 per cent premium for the articles so required by me more than I would pay to a stranger.

And no amount of argument and no character of discussion can convince me that if the expenditure of three or five or ten million dollars per year, taken from the public Treasury, will in the course of a very few years operate to retain within this country $150,000,000 or $200,000,000 per year to be paid out to American workmen in our shipyards, to American seamen and American sailors and the owners of American vessels, and as income from the investment of American capital—that such expenditure is not for the best interest of the American people, and is not a most profitable and sensible investment, and this whether the effect of the bill is to reduce freights or not.

If, however, these foreign ships, which are now carrying about 92 per cent of our trade, will, after the enactment of this bill into law, be still enabled to make the same profit, they will continue to hold their proportion of the trade, and the increase of the number of our ships would be proportionally equal to the increase of the foreign ships engaged in our trade. Unless the operation of this bill results in reduction of freights, whereby the field of American commerce will be less profitable to foreign investment and more profitable for American investors, the effect of the bill, so far as the reduction of freight rates is concerned, would, to my mind, be a failure.

And if we are to reap the most beneficial object and intent of this bill, the retention of this vast sum of money paid to foreign owners by citizens of this country, it certainly can only be done because we are thereby enabled, not only to compete with, but underbid, foreign vessels in the carrying trade, and thus, in proportion to the extent of the increase in our merchant marine, expel from our trade a corresponding proportion of foreign marine.

I contend, therefore, that the amount to be paid should be sufficient to enable American shipowners, not merely to meet the foreign owners upon an equal basis, but to be enabled to protect themselves against great foreign competition, and this can only be done by lowering freight rates.

It will not take a great number of those ships, which are provided for in this bill, to equal the carrying capacity of the foreign ships engaged in American commerce. As shown by the report of the Commissioner of Navigation for 1900, page 40, the number of steam vessels of over 2,000 tons and of 12 knots speed and over is only 1,109. Of this number 883 are of 14 knots and less, leaving only 323 vessels of this character above 14 knots. There are only 90 vessels above 15 and less than 16 knots, 53 of 16 and less than 17 knots, 49 of 17 and less than 18 knots, 8 of 19 and less than 20 knots, and 19 of 20 knots and over.

I insert the table referred to:

The number of ocean screw steamships over 2,000 gross tons and of 12 knots or over owned by the several countries of the world are as follows:

Much has been said in the argument here in reference to the larger sums which will be received by the fast mail ships; that these vessels carry but a small portion of our products, and that only in concentrated form. This is true. I have a right to assume, however, that vessels of the most profitable size and speed are the ones which will be used to the greatest extent, and that is not always the ship which will receive the greatest subsidy under this bill.

An article by Winthrop Marvin on the shipping bill of the Fifty-sixth Congress, published in the February, 1901, number of the Review of Reviews, gives a table showing the amount that would be received by vessels from 10 to 21 knots, respectively, under that bill, and contains an itemized cost of operating the same. So far as the subsidies or excess of subsidies in that table are concerned, they may not be important here. I, however, insert the entire table.

Knots per hour.	Tons of coal per day.	Number of firemen.	Cost of coal and handling per annum.	Subsidy.	Excess of subsidy.
10	44	15	$33,180	$48,300	$15,120
11	53	18	40,194	53,130	12,936
12	65	22	49,392	83,160	33,768
13	79	26	60,060	90,090	30,030
14	96	32	72,912	126,420	53,508
15	117	39	88,830	141,750	52,920
16	144	48	108,864	157,920	49,056
17	173	58	131,376	187,070	50,694
18	209	70	158,004	207,900	49,896
19	254	85	192,318	235,410	43,092
20	305	102	231,000	264,600	33,600
21	371	127	281,358	304,290	22,932

Mr. President, I assume that this is substantially correct. From this table it will be observed that a 10-knot ship will pay out per annum for coal and handling $33,180, one of 20 knots, of the same character, $231,000; that the double speed instead of doubling the expense increases it nearly eightfold. According to his table, even the difference of 1 knot, that between a 20-knot ship and a 21-knot ship, is $150,350 per annum, and we must consider not only this extra expense in coal and handling, but the diminution in freight space for the extra amount of coal required.

From the fact that large mail steamers do not carry agricultural products, except in the most concentrated form, I had hoped that the committee could find its way clear to base subsidies upon the amount of cargo actually carried, instead of the gross tonnage of the vessel. This would especially benefit the slower and more exclusively freight ships and induce the building of such vessels, thereby lowering ocean freights. However, the question of what character of ships will be built will not depend wholly on what subsidy particular ships may earn, but on what will be the net earning after considering all expenses. The table I have referred to will give a rather clear understanding on this point.

As suggested before, Mr. President, I believe the interest of our Western wheat growers can best be subserved by securing special low rates on the Pacific, so as to make it profitable to move the crop of the Pacific States westward. This bill is particularly favorable to the Pacific trade.

On account of the great distance, the most economical ship on the Pacific must be one of large tonnage capacity. By basing the amount of payment on the gross tonnage, and not on the actual cargo taken, these Pacific trade ships would reap a higher benefit.

So much of their storage capacity must be taken up with fuel on a long voyage that, on a cargo basis, they would necessarily receive a much smaller relative payment than an Atlantic liner. A comparison of distances between foreign Atlantic and Pacific seaports from our own seaports will make this clear. I shall insert a table of that character, which will speak for itself, and which will show that the distance traveled on the Pacific is, on an average, more than double the distance between important seaports upon the Atlantic.

Distances to foreign ports.

ATLANTIC.

	Miles.
New York to Copenhagen	3,408
New York to Sleswick	3,620
New York to Bremen	3,465
New York to London	3,010
New York to Newcastle	3,255
New York to Amsterdam	3,355
New York to Calais	3,206

PACIFIC.

	Miles.
San Francisco to Bombay	9,838
San Francisco to Calcutta	8,841
San Francisco to Melbourne	6,954
San Francisco to Canton	6,164
San Francisco to Hongkong	6,086
San Francisco to Nagasaki	5,048
San Francisco to Manila	6,252

It is obvious from this table that, comparatively, the Pacific-trade ships will receive a higher proportion than they would receive were the basis of subsidy made upon cargo and not upon gross tonnage, because they would suffer no relative loss on account of the extra space utilized for coal. This would be of especial benefit to the agricultural sections of the Northwest.

The object of this bill is to increase the number of vessels in our ocean commerce, and no one will claim that it will be increased unless the investment in vessels is made reasonably profitable, and no one will deny that, if investments are made in ships under this bill, they will be made in that class which will be most profitable to the investor.

Hence the investor will not consider merely the amount of subsidy that will be paid to any one ship, but he will naturally take into consideration the necessary operating expenses, and if it be found by an investigation of the facts, which a prospective investor will judiciously consider, that, notwithstanding the greater amount paid to the owners of the fast mail steamers, a larger profit can be made upon an investment in the slower class, or those whose business is almost exclusively freighting, certainly the effect of the bill will be to increase our Navy not in such ships as the St. Paul and the St. Louis, but in the profitable freighters of, say, from 5,000 to 7,000 gross tonnage and from 12 to 16 knots.

What the wheat growers west of the Mississippi want to-day is that the surplus grain of the west coast States find an oriental market instead of being thrown back into the interior to swell competition there.

The interest of the people of my section in the future must necessarily be directed toward the Pacific trade, and the vast and rapidly growing surplus of our agricultural products must find a field for consumption in China, in Japan, in the Orient, and in the Philippines; and I believe it to be the duty of the Government to exercise all its powers and to shape its legislation so that this desired result may be attained.

I make no complaint whatever when I say that the agricultural interests of this country have not received their proportionate attention—that attention which they justly deserve at the hands of our National Legislature. There are reasons for this—reasons which grow out of conditions, and are not the result of intentional disregard. The owners of the great manufacturing industries, as compared with the owners of the millions of farms, are comparatively few, can act in harmony, and make their influence more directly felt.

Those influences are naturally directed toward legislation that will enhance the value of their products and guard their future interests. The greater number of laborers employed by these few, intent upon their own interest, organized into effective combinations, pressing for higher wages, crowd the employers to the extreme, and the latter, to meet the additional demands of laborers, press so much the harder upon the Government for legislative benefits and care, and between these forces the agricultural interests are not always benefited, but are often ground. I do not claim that we are not benefited by the additional prosperity which follows.

On the contrary, I fully admit it. I simply desire to express what I feel to be the fact, that we have not the corresponding benefit justly due to our importance and the amount of property invested in the farms and in operating them in the purely agricultural sections. We are enabled to protect to a great extent our manufactured articles. The protection said to be given by our laws to our agricultural products, while it does give them protection as against like imports, can not by any possibility reach beyond our own borders and still leaves us subject to the competition of the world in the sale of at least the wheat of the country, and as about half of the grain raised is for export, it becomes a most important factor.

Mr. President, no tariff law, however well intended, can give adequate protection to agricultural products which must necessarily look to the outside world for consumers. So long as we are unable to control foreign production of wheat we can give no adequate protection to our wheat raisers. What we can do by legislation and what we should do is to legislate so as to produce lower ocean and rail freight rates upon these productions.

I believe that such a result will naturally follow from this legislation. I believe we will be benefited by it. It may be that we will not receive entirely equal benefits, but if our people gain 5 or 10 per cent under any character of legislation, it is not sufficient for me to vote against such proposed legislation because some other interest might possibly receive 1 or 2 per cent greater benefit. My duty is done when I have tried as much as possible to equalize these benefits according to the burdens.

Mr. President, if the effect of this bill, as I have suggested, independent of tariff rates, will in a number of years save to this country $150,000,000 or $200,000,000 per year, if that many dollars by reason of its operation remain at home which otherwise would go abroad, if that many dollars a year are put in circulation in this country and paid out to labor in this country, then I certainly can not see how it can do aught but benefit the American farmer.

Every extra dollar spent in New York or New England which gives the laborer or the person who receives it extra opportunity to better furnish his table, every extra laborer who secures work by reason of the money invested in shipyards, every extra seaman who obtains employment by reason of this bill must require so much additional farm products for his support. If it requires in the shipyards 100,000 extra laborers, that means an additional half million bushels of wheat to feed them. But this is not all.

The very life and prosperity of the wheat growers of the United States, more than any other class of people in the country, depend upon the continuance without cessation of abundant facilities to carry their products to foreign markets. Stop this flow for a month or so, make it impossible, either by exorbitant rates or by reason of the vessels now conducting our commerce being called into other fields of labor, and you hold the whole surplus of wheat production—double the amount that could possibly be consumed by this country—within our own borders, producing a congestion of the most ruinous character.

Mr. President, I put but little faith in the use of these new vessels for anything other than transport service in case of war. If the evolution in war vessels and naval warfare in the past twenty-five or thirty years is any criterion, we may safely assume that the vessels of the type which could be used in our merchant marine with profit would not be practicable, or properly constructed, for use as cruisers in time of war. The instruments of naval warfare are now undergoing such rapid metamorphosis that no person can predict that ships of the present type will be adapted whatever to naval warfare twenty or thirty years hence.

But, Mr. President, therein does not lie the danger. War between the great powers of Europe is ever imminent, and, when turning to the table which I have referred to we find of the vessels above 2,000 gross tons and 12 knots speed Great Britain has 597, Germany 110, France 106, making a total of 813 against only 94 owned by Americans, we can get some conception of the disasters which might follow to our commerce, both agricultural and in manufactured goods, in case a conflict should occur between these three European countries, and they should call their merchant marine into transport service. Such an imminent danger no thoughtful American citizen can look upon without feeling a patriotic duty to take steps for the self-preservation of our people against such a contingency.

Mr. President, what more glaring example of false economy confronts us to-day than the expenditure of many millions of dollars every year for war ships to defend and protect our merchant marine in case of war, which, between this country and any foreign power of importance, is one of the most remote contingencies possible, while at the same time we subject 92 per cent of all our commerce to almost total annihilation in case of war between the great European powers, which is a hundredfold more imminent?

Mr. President, the people of the United States can not longer afford to walk in the shadow of this ever-threatening danger, and no class of people in the country are more interested in avoiding such peril than the wheat growers, one-half of whose product must go to a foreign market. The wheat grower, above all persons, can least afford to have our ocean transportation facilities checked or crippled, and I believe I best subserve his real interest, as well as the interest of all our people, when I cast my vote in favor of this bill. I shall do so, Mr. President, in the sincere hope, the earnest desire, and the honest belief that it is a step, and a right step, toward reinstating our lost prestige on the seas, and that our glorious marine record of 1826 shall be equaled if not eclipsed by our record of 1926.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT HASTINGS, NEBR.

Mr. DIETRICH. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate take immediate action upon the bill (S. 1798) for the erection of a public building at Hastings, Nebr.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds with an amendment, in line 1, page 2, before the word "dollars," to strike out "fifty" and insert "twenty-five;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized to cause to be erected in the city of Hastings, Nebr., on the site acquired, under the provisions of the act of Congress approved March 2, 1899, a suitable building, including fireproof vaults, heating and ventilating apparatus, and approaches, for the use and accommodation of the United States courts, post-office, and other Government offices in said city, the cost of said building, including said vaults, heating and ventilating apparatus, and approaches, not to exceed the sum of $125,000, exclusive of the cost of the site. Said building shall be unexposed to danger from fire in adjacent buildings by an open space of not less than 40 feet.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PROMOTION OF COMMERCE.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 1348) to provide for ocean mail service between the United States and foreign ports, and the common defense; to promote commerce, and to encourage the deep-sea fisheries.

Mr. DEPEW. Mr. President, there has been so much said upon this subject, it has been illuminated by so many eloquent speeches on both sides, that I do not feel like occupying the time of the Senate except for a brief period. But, as a member of the Committee on Commerce and of the majority which reported the bill, I think that I ought express my dissent from some of the views and some of the arguments which have been advanced by gentlemen upon the other side.

Mr. President, the junior Senator from Georgia [Mr. CLAY], the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST], and other Senators upon the Democratic side have made exceedingly interesting and eloquent contributions to the discussion of this bill. I find, however, on reading their speeches, that I must take issue with them upon the essential points which they make. For instance, the eloquent Senator from Georgia said:

I favor legislation which will give to the United States a foreign mail service equal, if not superior, to England, Germany, and France.
